PERISH IN SHIP FIRE.

Hundreds of Chinese Die in Flame.

Blazing Vessel Held Two Mongol Passengers. Men, Women and Babes.

Conflagration Was General Within Five Minutes of Its Discovery.

Prayers and Shrieks Tell the Helpless Onlookers Tale of Grim Pain.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

HONGKONG, Oct. 14.—[Special Cable to The Times.] Canton Steamer Hankow burned; two hundred Chinese dead; Times people safe—off for Manila. OTIS.

HONGKONG, Oct. 13.—The British steamer Hankow, from Canton, was burned at 3:10 o'clock this (Sunday) morning while lying alongside her wharf. Hundreds of Chinese passengers were burned to death and a valuable cargo was destroyed. All the European passengers and craw were saved.

The steamer Hankow, with 2000 Chinese passengers, men, women and children, and seven Europeans, and a cargo including 3700 bales of matting, 560 bales of raw silk and 400 bales of waste silk, arrived from Canton at 3 o'clock this morning and was shortly afterward moored at the wharf.

FLAMES SPREAD RAPIDLY.

Her chief officer reported to Capt. Branch that the ship was afire. The captain then directed the chief engineer to turn on the water through the fire hose. This was impossible for the reason that within five minutes after the alarm was given the Hankow was [illegible]

Capt. Branch then awakened the European passengers, who rushed down the gangway, the ladies in their night clothes. The crew was compelled to leave the ship, which by this time was a veritable furnace. The Chinese steerage passengers were thrown into a frightful panic. Horrifying shrieks and cries to save their lives were heard, but escape was impossible, owing to the inflammable nature of the cargo. Hundreds were burned to death and many others jumped into the harbor and were drowned.

Responding to signals, the British cruiser Flora and the naval dock yard dispatched boats to their assistance. The land and floating brigades of firemen made herculean efforts to extinguish the flames, which leaped to a height of over sixty feet.

OTHER VESSELS SAVED.

The British steamer Powan, which was berthed at the same wharf, was towed out to save her from destruction. A neighboring pier, a hundred yards distant, was burned to the water's edge. Gov. Nathan, accompanied by his aide-de-camp, arrived at the scene at 4:15 o'clock a.m. Gov. Nathan suggested scuttling the ship, but this was found to be impracticable.

The fire was brought under control at 6 o'clock a.m., at which time only the shell and hull of the Hankow remained. The grewsome work of recovering the dead was then begun.

RECOVER THE DEAD.

The fire fighters have already recovered seventy-five corpres. Many of them were huddled together and only singed, while other were incinerated beyond recognition. Of the cargo 200 bales of raw silk were saved but badly damaged by water. The remainder was totally destroyed.

There are many theories as to the cause of the fire. The first is that it was caused by the overturning of the lantern of a Chinese boarding-house runner, who came aboard seeking customers. The second is that an opium smoker accidentally set fire to matting, the third is that it was caused by the crossing of electric wires. A fourth theory, and one that is considered the most probable, is that the fire was incendiary and was an outgrowth of a boycott against British river boats.

HARNESSES MISSISSIPPI.

Tremendous Dam Is to Confine the Water and Run Forty-seven Generators.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

KEOKUK (Iowa) Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Hugh L. Cooper, a Wall-street engineer, who solved the problem of how to harness the waters of Niagara Falls, proposes to build a dam 6000 feet long across the Mississippi River at Keokuk.

When the dam here is completed, an immense power house will contain forty-seven immense generators with a capacity of 4500 horse-power each.

AVOIDS BIG TIE-UP.

CHICAGO, Oct. 13.—A threatened tie-up of the building operations was averted in Chicago today at a conference between members of the Building Contractors' League and representatives of the Plumbers' and Steam Fitters' Unions.

BREAKS CARRIER RECORD.

Lake Steamer Loads Quicker and Carries More Wheat Than Ever Before.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

DULUTH (Minn.) Oct. 13.—The big steamer James Laughlin today broke the wheat-carrier record. She loaded 308 bushels. The cargo is undoubtedly the largest individual one of wheat ever floated. The boat gets a freight of 2¾ cents a bushel for transportion of the grain to Buffalo.

The elevator A of the Great Northern system broke the record of the railroad for loading out. She gave the steamer 308,000 bushels in 160 minutes, an average of 1300 bushels a minute.

WATSON QUITS HIS MAGAZINE.

HE IS IN TROUBLE WITH COL. MANN OF "TOWN TOPICS."

Latter Owned Majority of Stock in Southerner's Venture Into Literature and Criticised Work of Editor When He Asked for His Pay. Saw Fight Was Hopeless.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A quarrel among the stockholders of Watson's Magazine has led to the resignation of Thomas E. Watson, who founded the publication eighteen months ago, and who has been editor-in-chief from the first. Watson's trouble was with W. D. Mann, who publishes the notorious Town Topics, and is interested in other publications.

He is the chief stockholder in Watson's Magazine. When Watson tried to collect money due him from the magazine, Mann criticized the publication. Watson saw any fight with Mann was hopeless, so he quit. Watson's Magazine has not been a success from a business standpoint. Since the exposure of Town Topics last year all ventures of Col. Mann have suffered.

PLAN TO STOP CAR STEALING.

TRUNK LINES SUFFER BECAUSE MINOR ROADS PILFER.

Victim Which Feels It Most Is the Public, Whose Business Is Impeded by Freight Men Who Deliberately Appropriate Property of More Prominent Roads.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Owing to serious congestion of freight, which is threatening over the entire country, general managers and presidents of all railroads are starting a movement to stop abuse of foreign cars.

A car is "foreign" the moment it reaches the rails of a company which does not own it, and so grave have become abuses with respect to foreign cars that reform is demanded. So bad has become practice of "stealing" foreign cars that frequently cars are away from home for six months or even a year.

Large systems, which have good supply of cars, are the greatest sufferers from this pilfering, and the business public is the greatest sufferer of all.

NEWFOUNDLAND IS TESTY.

Still Harps on Modus Vivendi as Hostile to Colonial Fishing Rights.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

ST. JOHNS (N. F.) Oct. 13.—The statements emanating from London to the effect that the colonial agitation is largely due to politics meets with contradiction here. Even the Morning News, the opposition organ, today admits that virtually all the leading merchants signed the resolutions adopted at Thursday's meeting, though it argues that they compelled the elimination of a resolution approving Premier Bond's policy.

They refused to indorse anything but a declaration denouncing the modus vivendi as a violation of the colony's constitutional rights. Criticism here condemns the modus vivendi mainly for permitting American vessels to hire men after the American State Department had confessed last July that they had no right to do so, and for emasculating the act of 1905, which has been eighteen months in force against the Americans and eighteen years against the French.

The Telegram, the Premier's organ, renews this evening its denunciations of the "Downing-street bureaucracy" as "little Englanders," and urges the government to resist the enforcement of the modus vivendi by every constitutional means at its disposal.

The Herald demands the publication of the correct text of the modus vivendi, which is still unknown here.

LOSES KEY TO PAPAL CIPHER.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ROME, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] It is rumored that a papal special messenger carrying dispatches from the nuncio at Brussels lost a bag of documents in a railway disaster at Piacenza. The documents themselves were insignificant, but one of the papers contained the key to the celebrated secret cipher used at the Vatican, which experts have for centuries tried to unravel in vain. If the report is true the loss is irreparable.

GILLETT IS WINNER.

Makes Great Hit in San Diego.

His Forceful Address Stirs Thousands Assembled in Big Tent.

Enthusiastic Greetings Sign the City Will Give Him Mighty Majority.

Eagles Keep Open House to Entertain the Visiting Republicans.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN DIEGO, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Republicans of San Diego, and they say nearly all good San Diegans are tuned up on that side of politics this year, gave a cordial welcome to Gillett and Porter when the campaigners arrived from San Bernardino today. Committeemen and hospitable citizens began boarding the train when it entered the county to make or renew old acquaintance with the candidates, and by the time the train pulled into San Diego the next Governor had a large staff of loyal supporters around him.

The members of the Gillett party were enetrtained at luncheon by the San Diego committeemen, and in the afternoon held an informal reception at Republican headquarters, and got acquainted with a great number of citizens.

The San Diego Republicans are well satisfied with the political prospects and the progress of the Gillett campaign, and confidently promise a record-breaking vote for the party ticket. They reported that the Democracy has been losing ground in the county, and that nothing has developed to cause any defection from the Republican ranks.

The Langdon troupe was billed for San Diego tonight, as it has been trailing along behind Gillett through Southern California. The correspondent of a San Francisco paper, instructed to get the programme of the troupe, spent most of the afternoon looking for the Independence League of San Diego, but was unable to locate him. It was reported that he had gone out fishing and might be late getting back if the yellowtail were biting well.

GREET NEXT GOVERNOR.

The big tent at Fifth and B streets was packed to overflowing tonight with one of the most enthusiastic gatherings ever known in this part of the State. Gillett, Knight and Porter and all the other speakers received ovations from the great assemblage. Every auditor among the several thousand men and women present seemed to be thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the occasion, the bestowing of San Diego's most enthusiastic greetings upon the next executive of the Golden State.

The cheering was spontaneous and wellnigh continuous during the evening. The speakers were in good vein and voice and they enthused their auditors by eloquent and logical orations.

MAKES FORCEFUL ADDRESS.

Gillett's address was marked by dignity and soundness. There was no discordant note. He thanked the people for their marked hospitality and then pointed out to the voters the difference between Republican and Democratic methods in national and State affairs. He pledged himself to be the Governor of the people, for the people and by the people. He would take orders from no boss. He would do right at all times for all the people.

KNIGHT MAKES SPEECH.

George A. Knight spoke for some time and his remarks were interrupted frequently by outbursts of applause. He is a great favorite here and was given a greeting that was as enthusiastic as it was sincere.

At the close of the rally, Mr. Gillett and the party repaired to the new quarters of the Eagles in the Overbaugh block, where the members kept open house.

The greetings to Gillett today indicate beyond a doubt that he will receive here a greater majority this fall than was ever accorded by San Diego to a Republican nominee for Governor.

RALLY AT ALHAMBRA.

PORTERFIELD DISCUSSED.

ALHAMBRA, Oct. 13.—A lively rally was held by the Republicans of Alhambra at the High School Auditorium this evening. H. H. Mayberry presided, and in his opening address paid his respects to Mr. Porterfield of Long Beach.

He said:

"Before calling upon the candidates here, I want to say a few words concerning Mr. Porterfield of Long Beach and his advocacy of the Democratic nominee.

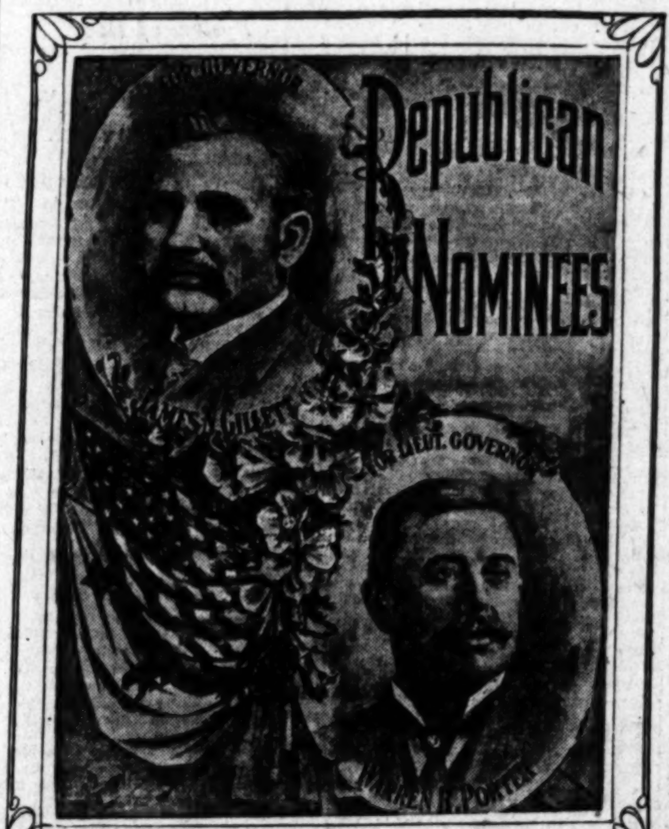
"Mr. Porterfield was defeated by his neighbors in his ambition to be a delegate to the Venice convention. He was not chosen by the Assembly convention as a State delegate.

"He went to Santa Cruz determined to be a delegate or die. He had an illegal proxy and was justly refused a seat, and had to give up the delegate's badge he had obtained. At Santa Cruz he was a strong advocate of Abe Ruef and his methods.

"He went from Santa Cruz to Scaramento and probably became at last a 'delegate;' at any rate, a San Francisco paper so reported him.

"The trouble with Mr. Porterfield is that he is disappointed in not being chosen to rule Long Beach and the State of California politically."

Hon. J. C. Rives, candidate for Superior judge; Herbert G. Dow, John N. Hunt, Assemblyman N. W. Thompson, and other candidates also were heard.



Two popular candidates on a successful tour of Southern California. Making votes everywhere they go.

CONTESTANTS CHARGE FRAUD AND WEAKNESS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Attorneys for Helen B. Sacher, the 6-year-old great grandchild of Mrs. Ellen M. Colton, formerly of Santa Cruz, who is seeking to break the Colton will, filed a petition with the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia today asking that the coming will contest be removed from the jurisdiction of the California courts to those of the District of Columbia.

Petitioners charge that "fraud, coercion and undue influence" were used by Attorney Walter J. Bartnett of San Francisco, Mrs. Caroline Martin-Dahlgren, and her husband, John B. Dahlgren, at the bedside of Mrs. Colton to secure her signature to a legal instrument purporting to be her last will and testament in order that they might benefit in the division of the estate to the exclusion of other rightful heirs.

It is also charged by the petitioners that Attorney Bartnett prepared the supposed Colton will, naming himself as executor, and that at the time he did so he was aware that the aged woman could not realize the purport of the document.

The Colton will contest involves the right of Helen Beatrice Sacher, great-grandchild of the late Mrs. Colton, who was a widow of Gen. David D. Colton, former partner of Collis P. Huntington and George Crocker, to share equally with Mrs. John B. Dahlgren, formerly Mrs. Henry M. Martin, in the division of an estate estimated at $1,000,000. Mrs. Colton named Santa Cruz as her legal residence.

CLAIM MIND WAS WEAK.

Opposition to probate was immediately filed by Attorney J. F. Riley of San Francisco on behalf of Helen Sacher on the ground that Mrs. Colton's mental condition at the time the will was signed was such as to render her incompetent to understand the import of her action.

Following this, a hearing was begun in Washington before Justice Bundy to examine certain witnesses who were in attendance on Mrs. Colton during her last illness.

The hearing has been going on during the past week and C. W. Slack, former judge of the California Superior Court, for defendants, and J. F. Riley of San Francisco for the contestant have conducted the examination of witnesses. At the hearing today Dr. Z. T. Sowers, Mrs. Colton's family physician, furnished a sensation by declaring that his aged patient was mentally unsound when she signed the supposed will. He declared further that her mental condition was such as to render her incapable of understanding the real import of her action.

The attorneys for both sides are preparing to induce additional witnesses to appear at the hearing on Monday, when it is expected that certain sensational testimony will be introduced.

CHILLING FROST COOLS LANDGON.

PEOPLE OF ONTARIO DISDAIN TO HEAR HIM SPOUT.

Nobody Greets Hearst's Band of Conscripts and They Finally Fade Away — Even Cannon's Alarm Would Not Bring Auditors and Then Fire Bell Was Suggested.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ONTARIO, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Frost, frost, frost. There was a decided chilliness in the air here this morning as W. H. Langdon, the "Hearst" candidate for Governor and party rolled into town about 10 o'clock. The morning was not cold to any one else, but to the Langdon party it seemed chilly. Not a soul was to be seen on the street to greet the "future Governor" of California as the automobile containing himself and party came to a stop on the main street. A few citizens wearing huge red Gillett buttons passed, but they did not stop and paid little attention to the independent candidate.

After sitting around in embarrassed silence for about twenty minutes, one of the Langdon crowd proceeded to explode a small cannon several times in rapid succession in a vain endeavor to attract attention. Not a soul stirred, not even a dog ran across the street. A few street urchins gathered to look at the automobile, but that was all.

After another embarrassing wait, some one suggested that the party ring the fire bell to attract attention. This the city authorities refused to let them do. After sitting around and looking wise for a few minutes more, the sorry-looking gang vanished from town. They were here probably thirty minutes. They were scheduled by Hearst to stop an hour.

Much the same reception was tendered the party at Upland, a few miles north of here, where they stopped for a few minutes. Not a word was spoken here by Langdon in regard to the issues of the campaign. The Examiner tomorrow probably will appear telling its readers what an enthusiastic ova- [illegible]

RUNS AMUCK IN NEW YORK.

WESTERNER TRIES TO LIVEN UP GOTHAM TOWN.

Is Arrested at Request of Friends After He Tried to Tear Office Apart and Ejected Two Waiters from a Fashionable Up-town Hotel, According to Police Story.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] To quench his apparent desire to run the town, friends of John Bermingham, who, the police say, is a wealthy and prominent business man of San Francisco, today took him to the police station and asked the police to lock him up. Bermingham was charged with intoxication and later was bailed out by A. F. Townsend, president of the Brown Rubber Company, and who lives at No. 36 West Twelfth street.

Townsend, the police say, took Bermingham to the station and said that the westener had tried to tear Townsend's office apart. Bermingham is stopping at the Hotel Astor. According to the police he was locked up at the West Forty-seventh street police station Friday night because he tried to eject two waiters at the hotel.

TO RELIEVE CONGESTION.

MUSKOGEE (I. T.) Oct. 13.—The Prairie Oil and Gas Company, branch of the Standard, has contracted to ship 1000 barrels of crude oil from the Glenn Pool daily by rail to the refinery at Corsicana, Tex.

This move is regarded by prominent oil speculators as of the utmost importance, and tending to relieve the serious congestion.

Oil men in Indian Territory say they are unable to sell the overproduction in spite of the fact that the price has been forced down to less than 40 cents a barrel.

TRIPLES DREADNAUGHT.

LONDON, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] International amazement has been created by discovery that England is secretly building three great battleships of the Dreadnaught type.

The weight of each vessel including the armor, is 11,100 tons, the displacement 17,250 tons, length 533 feet, breadth 78½ feet, mean draught 26 feet. Each vessel will carry eight 12-inch guns.

CHAOS IS RESULT.

Ruef Factions Storm Mass Meeting.

Citizens Rise Up Against Crime-Reign, but Hoodlums Interfere.

San Francisco Administration Bitterly Denounced by Indignant Ones.

Resolutions Are Hissed and Cheered—Lawlessness Leads, Laughing.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 13.—The grand jury has passed a resolution in favor of establishing a chain gang to rid the city of the lawless element that is terrorizing the people and the authorities are urged to carry out the recommendation at once. To an executive committee will be entrusted the formation of plans calculated to discourage and end the career of criminals who now infest the city.

Private detectives have been hired to secure evidence to be used as a basis for future operation.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A public mass meeting was called today to take the first steps toward the organization of a committee of safety, empowered to end the reign of crime in San Francisco. It proved a fiasco, as "Boss" Abe Ruef, Acting Mayor Gallagher, and others, who are mainly responsible for the epidemic of crime, seized control of the meeting.

Nothing was accomplished except, perhaps, to demonstrate what should have been known before, that no committee of safety can be made effective unless it is organized in secret, and carries on its work unhampered.

Resolutions for the appointment of a committee of citizens from various public bodies were adopted, but these were partly nullified by the refusal of representatives of labor organizations to be bound by them. The walking delegates thrive best when disorder is rampant.

The meeting was really called by the Potrero Protective Association, and its president, Isidor Jacobs, secured the services of Samuel M. Shortridge, a local attorney with greater oratorical ability than knowledge of law, to conduct the meeting. Shortridge was easily outwitted by Ruef and his henchmen, and these veteran political grafters soon secured control of the meeting. The reign of Ruef and the laborite bosses and of crime is to go on.

RUEF RUNS THEM OFF.

When Gallagher and Ruef began to talk several hundred business men walked away, declaring openly that they did not care to listen to the talk of men who were in league with grafters and law-breakers.

Notwithstanding the prevalence of a hoodlum element, and the noisy demonstrations of the Ruef factions, the public-spirited citizens who support law and order, and who had convened to denounce the administration's apparent indifference to the reign of crime, managed to put through the resolution of protest, passing at the same time the motion for the appointment of a committee of safety.

This committee, according to the resolution is formed for the purpose of speedily restoring and enhancing the prosperity of San Francisco, and is to be known as the "Citizens' Committee of One Hundred."

HUNDREDS ATTEND.

The mass meeting today was attended by hundreds of people, but a small percentage being women. In order to guard against possible utterances or resolutions of an incendiary character, the committee having in charge the preliminary arrangements had deemed it advisable previously to prepare the set of resolutions, which were afterward presented to the assemblage and declared adopted.

It was upon this action of the committee that the sentiment of the meeting was divided. After the call to order by Isadore Jacobs, W. H. Doble of the Potrero Commercial and Manufacturing Association was named as chairman and W. S. Barrett as secretary.

The resolutions, setting forth the method of organizing the Committee of One Hundred were then read by R. Lilienthal. Chairman Doble announced that they had been adopted and declared the meeting adjourned.

A scene of disorder ensued as soon as the meeting was declared adjourned. Many of those present attempted to speak at the same time. Cries and hisses continued until Acting Mayor James C. Gallagher appeared and signified his intention of speaking. He advised the crowd to disperse, saying that good citizens could hope to accomplish nothing except through the official channels of authorized government.

Rabbi Jacob Nieto, after a demonstration following the speech of the acting mayor, at length was accorded hearing. He said:

the necessity of every department of the city government doing its duty. We should be guaranteed protection for our lives and our property. If there are any officials not competent to extend this protection they should make way for others who are. We should bring about conditions that would make it almost death for a thug to make his appearance in this city. Conditions are abnormal and immoderate. We mean to insist by every means that officials shall do their duty."

RUEF FACTION NOISY.

Subsequent proceedings were enlivened by the attitude of the opposing factions who called for speeches from various citizens, who, when they appeared were denied a hearing because of the cries and interruptions.

Walter McArthur, one of the delegates from the Labor Council, made objection to the method of representation on the Committee of One Hundred. He said:

"Certain citizens formulate a cut-and-dried programme and we are told to swallow it. If this is to be a case of follow the leader, labor having the right to the largest representation, will lead and all others may follow. Labor wants no Vigilance Committee and no Committee of Public Safety."

At this juncture the interruptions became so pronounced that the speaker could no longer be heard although he attempted for some time to continue his address.

Although the meeting had no chairman another set of resolutions, providing that all "thugs" be notified to leave the city; that Chief of Police Dinan be notified to resign and that the entire city administration be notified that the citizens intended to compel enforcement of the laws, was read by Attorney Eastin. The resolutions were alternately cheered and hooted, and no action could be taken.

While all citizens present manifested an undeniable earnestness, the series of unexpected demonstrations made it impossible to determine the exact extent of what had been accomplished as the meeting, before dispersing, had deviated somewhat from its original purpose.

RUEF "BUTTS IN."

The closing feature was an address by Abe Ruef generally regarded as the chief adviser of the municipal administration. He said in part:

"I come to the meeting as a private citizen of large property interests and I wish to add that these interests were acquired before my connection with politics. They were earned by my hand and brain in spite of the insinuations of the newspapers which have reviled. The conditions in this city are not due so much to the faults of the administration as to calamity, and I am willing to answer any and all questions addressed to me and to make any suggestions I may to help along the cause of the city. In this form I can get a hearing, but I am not accorded this privilege through the newspapers, edited by ruffians and villains worse than any who prowl the city.

"The thug and the gas-pipe assassin must be removed if possible. But you cannot find them as easily as you might imagine. I am not here to defend the police department particularly. It has men in brave as any in the world, but they cannot at once stop these conditions. Give them a chance to redeem themselves and if they fail we can remove them for inefficiency."

HIS SELF-SACRIFICE.

Some one in the assemblage asked if Ruef personally intended removing these delinquent police officials, and he replied:

"I have nothing to do officially with this proposition. I have never suggested the appointment of Chief Dinan or any other member of the department, or not a single member has been appointed during seven years' experience through civil-service rules. But any influence I possess I will put at the disposal of this citizenship. I am devoting my time and my life to public matters in which there is not one cent for me."

In the latter part of Ruef's address there were many questions and interruptions. He engaged in an argument with A. B. Trueman, formerly a prominent politician of this city, who repeatedly called Ruef a liar. In return Ruef declared that Trueman was not a gentleman and refused to answer any of his questions.

According to the statement of W. H. Doble, chairman of the meeting, the Committee of One Hundred will be organized by next Saturday. The resolution provides that each of the twenty organizations shall be entitled to two representatives making forty in all and that Chairman Doble shall appoint the remaining sixty. Sentiment expressed during the meeting, however, indicated that there will be some opposition to this plan.

REIGN OF CRIME.

RED RECORD OF A DAY.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Following the hold-up of the Japanese bank, in which the manager was murdered, the cashier badly beaten and a large sum of money taken San Francisco has struggled in a veritable vortex of crime. The record for twenty-four hours includes the following, which is but a partial list:

George H. Young, shoe dealer; store entered and robbed.

Henry Auerbach, actor, held up by armed thug at California and Market streets in the early evening.

Mrs. J. C. Robertson living in refugee camp on Folsom street, held up in her kitchen and compelled at the point of a revolver to deliver her rings and money to ruffian.

Ernest Adams, itinerant candy merchant, confronted by a loaded revolver at doorstep of home, No. 2860 Mission street, and compelled to deliver a purse containing his daily earnings.

Mrs. Albert Waugh resident of the Potrero district, suffers loss of satchel containing valuable watch and diamonds, stolen by some unknown thief from a Kentucky-street car in which she was riding.

Tool house of Western Construction Company on Sixth avenue, between B and C streets, looted by burglars.

Crooks break into saloon of George H. Borghfelt at Nineteenth and Mission streets.

Thieves ransack cigar store of Joseph Minnehan at Twenty-second and Bartlett streets and steal contents of the till.

Harman Minthorn, marine fireman, employed on coasting vessel, brutally beaten and robbed of a gold watch and chain and $40 in money on Main street, between Howard and Bryant.

DEPARTMENTS APATHETIC.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Murder, robbery, incendiarism, and every conceivable form of crime has prevailed in this city since the earthquake; and is increasing at an alarming rate. The past month murder and robbery have been of daily occurrence.

The police, if able to cope with the situation, at least have done but little toward controlling it. Apathy seems to prevail in nearly all departments of the administration.

At the public meeting held in the Chamber of Commerce building, George R. Renner, president of the Draymen's Association, said:

"This is the wickedest and most dangerous city on the continent. There is nothing that will touch it from Mexico to the North Pole. If we are to do anything, let's not do it in a babylike manner. Let us be men. I believe we should do what is right, and do it fearlessly, and with the hand of firmness. We do not want to say to our officials, 'Please do your duty,' but rather force them to do that for which they were elected.

"When an honorable gentleman and excellent citizen like James D. Phelan is viciously attacked with bitter personalities, even by our Mayor, I say it is time for the community to act. I recommend, gentlemen, that you take off your gloves, and deal with this matter as it deserves."

His expressions of denunciation were indorsed by nearly all present.

RESOLUTION MODIFIED.

Clauses in the original resolution (afterward modified at the instigation of those in sympathy with the administration) which was presented at today's mass meeting, read:

"Resolved further, That violence of any kind is to be condemned. Public officials are to be taught that they are in office to carry out the wishes and best interests of our citizens and not their own desires.

"One-man boss power in our public affairs is to be eradicated and destroyed.

"Corrupt measures must be defeated and those calculated to benefit our city and its commerce must be adopted.

"Public funds must and shall be properly and honestly administered.

"Corruption of public officials and its concommitant evils and vices must be discountenanced and punished.

"Crime and corruption in our midst must and shall be stamped out and our city placed before the communities of the world in the proper light. A supervising influence shall be exercised over city and State legislation.

"Public opinion is to be aroused and directed and held at the point where it shall recognize that 'Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.'"

BOATS COLLIDE ON THE HUDSON.

ONE KILLED AND MANY LIVES ENDANGERED.

Head-on Meeting of Two Night Passenger Steamers Near Glasco, New York, Results in Wild Panic. Dense Fog Blamed for Accident. Both Vessels Badly Damaged.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

KINGSTON (N. Y.) Oct. 13.—The night passenger steamers Adirondack of the People's line of Albany and Saratoga of the Citizens' line of Troy, N. Y., collided near Glasco, twelve miles north of this city at 1:15 o'clock this morning. Clarence Sherman of Melrose, N. Y., one man, an oiler on the Saratoga, was killed and George Horton of New York City, clerk on the Adirondack is missing.

The collision occurred in a dense fog which prevented the pilots of either boat from seeing the other. Both, it is thought, missed their bearings.

The Saratoga sustained the greater damage. The Adirondack was on her way to Albany and the Saratoga was en route to New York. The Adirondack tore off the port side of the Saratogo which listed to port and her boiler went overboard and sank.

Sherman was instantly killed by flying timbers. Horton is supposed to have been carried overboard and drowned.

Many passengers on the Saratoga were knocked down by the force of the collision, but the crews of both boats assisted in rescuing them and later they were transferred to the City of Troy, landed at Tivoli and sent to New York by train.

The passengers on both boats became panic-stricken and only by the coolness of the officers and crews of both boats was heavy loss of life prevented. The Adirondack after the fog had cleared was able to proceed to Albany.

DYNAMITE COLLEGE.

Negro Institution Is Blown Up Because Negro President Was Disliked.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

COLUMBIA (S. C.) Oct. 13.—A special to the State from Anderson says:

"Word was received here today from Seneca that Harrel College, a negro institution there, was blown up by dynamite about midnight last night. Rev. J. F. Williams, a negro, is president of the college, and it is supported by northern white people. He went to Seneca from Abbeville several years ago and it is said has made himself objectionable to the white people. He advised the negroes not to work for the white people. A warning was sent him several weeks ago advising him to leave Seneca, but he ignored it.

"Dynamite cartridges were placed under each corner of the college building last night, and when the clock struck midnight the dynamite was exploded, partially wrecking the building."

WOMAN STORMS DIVES.

BRIDGEPORT (Ct.) Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Armed with pistol, Mrs. William Lockwood, a prominent woman here, visited some of the most notorious dives in the city today and released many women held as "white slaves" for frequenters of the red light district. Detectives followed her within calling distance and routed bullies who congregated in the neighborhood, while Mrs. Lockwood held up the door guards and released many girls.

In many instances she found the girls afraid to answer her questions lest they be beaten afterward.

She was prompted to start on a crusade by the terrible case of pretty Annie Leonard of Brooklyn, N. Y., who was abducted from Brooklyn and brought here to a resort on Bank street. When she tried to escape she was beaten and threatened with death. She managed to throw a note out on the street to Frank Howard. He fought a guard while she made her escape and Mrs. Lockwood took her home. Miss Leonard is a daughter of wealthy Brooklyn people.

Foreign Minister Valvedere, presidentof the national convention now in session at Quito, Ecuador, yesterday charged President Alfaro with supplying the Columbian Liberals with money, arms and soldiers for the revolution against Presidents San Clemen and Marroquina, corrupting part of the Scudorean ministry to take up arms against the constitutional president, Gen. Garcia.

FREIGHT CLERKS GO ON STRIKE.

Demand Higher Pay and Overtime from Espee.

Action Affects the Atlantic System of Road.

Eight-Hour Law Applies to Reclamation Work.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW ORLEANS (La.) Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Several hundred clerks employed on the Atlantic system of the Southern Pacific Company, which extends from New Orleans to El Paso (Texas,) went on strike today because the company failed to accede to their demands for increased wages and overtime.

These clerks are members of the National Order of Railway Clerks. It is alleged by the men that the company's freight business is effectually tied up. There is no receiving or shipping being done to any great extent. The wharves of the company at Algiers and Gretna are affected, too, as well as all points between here and El Paso, including Galveston and Houston.

FIGHT UNIONS TO FINISH.

CONTRACTORS SUSPEND WORK.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

OAKLAND, Oct. 13.—At a mass meeting this evening the Employers and Contractors' Association of Alameda county voted the suspension of all building operations until Wednesday next, pending the Building Trades Council's reply to the proposition to arbitrate all labor disputes.

Unless the unions agree to arbitrate, the employers will declare for an open shop and fight the unions to a finish.

MANY CITIES INVOLVED.

STRIKE SEEMS GENERAL.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 13.—President Braggins of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks announced tonight that about 450 clerks between here and El Paso had joined in the strike. He said the only exceptions were clerks in the general offices here and at Houston, Tex.

FIFTEEN ASSAIL NINE.

POLICE MAKE NO ARRESTS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PORTLAND, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] While coming from work on the water front, where they had been loading unfair vessels, nine strikebreakers were assaulted by fifteen striking grain handlers and badly beaten.

Walter Seeley and his 17-year-old son were severely hurt, and Seeley claims that his son was brutally kicked after being knocked to the pavement. The elder Seeley secured an express wagon, into which h loaded his son and drove rapidly away. To the police the Seeleys complained bitterly of the attack by the strikers. Although they offered to give all possible aid in identifying their assailants, no arrests have been made.

HOSTILITIES RESUMED.

Revolutionary Leaders of Santo Domingo Demand Most Impossible Terms.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—The following cablegram was received at the Navy Department from Commander Southerland, dated at Monte Christi, Santo Domingo, today:

"I regret to inform you that revolutionary leaders at the last moment refused to stand by the article of agreement for the surrender. The revolutionary leaders have massed forces of about 500 at a distance of fifteen miles and demand the most impossible terms. The President of Santo Domingo has directed the renewal of hostilities."

HOMEWARD BOUND.

HAVANA, Oct. 13.—Secretary of War Taft and Assistant Secretary of State Bacon, President Rosevelt's peace commissioners, completed their labors here today and departed for the United States on the battleship Louisiana. They were followed to sea and acclaimed by several ex-revolutionary leaders, but the former government leaders showed no disposition to join in the farewell, and no prominent moderates took part in the formal leave-taking. Brig.-Gen. Funston also sailed for New York on the battleship Virginia.

The two prominent Liberals, Gov. Nunez and Congressman Govin, were the only highly prominent members of the government group who saw the party off.

EXPLOSION KILLS THREE.

PITTSBURGH, Oct. 13.—A boiler of the government boat Slackwater exploded today, completely wrecking the vessel, killing three men, wounding six others and creating havoc in lock No. 4 on the Ohio River, where the boat was lying when the accident occurred. The derrick boat lying alongside the steamer and some construction work being done at the dam were damaged. The dead:

JOHN BRADY.

STEVE SUTEL.

ALBERT BISHOP, superintendent of government work at the dam.

Two negroes, workmen about the boat, are thought to have been drowned.

ICELAND TO HAVE RAILROAD.

COPENHAGEN, Oct. 13.—The Icelandic government has finally decided to build a railroad in Iceland. It will run from Reykjavik about forty-five miles through a fertile part of the country, where a similar railroad was planned many years ago by Americans.

The Icelanders are conducting an agitation for a distinctive flag for Iceland.

FINDS WRIGHT MURDERER.

SAN JOSE, Oct. 13.—After deliberating thirteen hours, a jury tonight brought in a verdict charging William D. Wright with murder in the first degree, recommending life imprisonment. Wright, on the night of July 28, shot and killed his wife in a local restaurant. The shooting, which was the outcome of jealousy, was done in the presence of State Senator Shortridge, who is Wright's brother-in-law.

CUBAN MILITARY MAIL.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—The War Department today received a telegram from Brig.-Gen. Bell, commanding the troops in Cuba, requesting that all mail for soldiers in Cuba be addressed to Havana, Cuba, from which place the military authorities will distribute it.

STILL LEADER OF THE WORLD'S LINE.

A RECAPITULATION of the advertising figures of leading newspapers of the United States for the month of September shows that the Los Angeles Times still retains its wonderful lead.

The Times printed 33 per cent. more advertising in September than any newspaper in the country—and that means in the world.

The volume of advertising carried by The Times last month amounted to 4809 columns. Its nearest competitor, the New York World, had 3695 columns. Next came the Chicago Tribune with 3028 columns. The Chicago Examiner (Hearst) had but 617 columns.

The constant leadership of The Times in the amount of advertising printed from month to month demonstrates two important things—that Los Angeles is growing and prospering at an amazing rate; and that those seeking a medium for publicity find the columns of The Times the most remunerative of all in this wondrous field that excites the amazement of the nations of the earth.

The figures speak for themselves. They speak in a resonant and agreeable voice. Here is the table showing the total number of columns of advertising printed by the large newspapers during September:

RECAPTURES WITNESS.

Margaret Brooks, the 17-year-old girl caught in the recent raid on the "red-light" hotels, and who escaped at midnight from the Juvenile Home, where she was being held as a witness for the prosecution, was rearrested tonight. The girl was found walking in Michigan avenue with William G. Witcock, a confidential employé of A. L. Streeter, the wealthy broker who supported Miss Brooks at the Rensu Hotel. Several indictments were returned in this case by the September grand jury, and the police believe there was a plot to rob them of their star witness.

MARION (Ind.) Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] John Schoy, president of the Diamond Window Glass Company, his wife, daughter and son, while in an auto were struck by a street car which was running at a high rate of speed in Third street at 10 o'clock tonight. The machine was hurled thirty feet and badly wrecked. The daughter was thrown under the machine and probably fatally injured. The other occupants of the automobile were badly cut and bruised.

SUES FOR $100,000.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

DES MOINES (Iowa) Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Mrs. Emma Langhout Leopold of Lemars today commenced suit for $100,000 against Frank Hoes, a banker, whom she charges with ruining her life. Mr. Hoes lives at Merrill, Iowa, and is reputed to be worth in the neighborhood of $1,000,000. She says that as an evidence of his love he gave her a house and lot, which, she says, he has taken back under some pretext.

Where Girls Can Find Work.

There are positions waiting for quite a number of girls at the factory of Bishop & Co., this city. The growth of the Bishop business has been so fast that often times they find themselves short of help, and just now they can use help in their fruit, candy and cracker department. Any girl wanting such a position will find this a pleasant place to work, as the factory is clean and light.

elegates to Meet Next Year at San Jose.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

RESNO, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dis-ch.] When clouds of sectional ri-ry and dissension were shadowing closing session of the California ate Realty Federation this evening, Los Angeles delegation gracefully pensed balm of peace by withdraw-g from the position taken on a num-r of questions, and casting its vote ith rival delegates from the north, sing the convention to end in a love ast.

The great split was over the election a president. Oakland, San Francisco and North California stood solid for Gray of Fresno. Los Angeles, San José, and the south, having a ma-ority of the votes, could have elected their candidate, Leonard Merrill of Los Angeles. Merrill's election threatened to antagonize the northern delegations and perhaps split the federation. At a crucial time, Julius R. Black withdrew Merrill, moving to elect Gray by accla-mation, and a wave of applause filled the meeting. From that time on all was harmony.

Other officers elected were: Leonard Merrill, Los Angeles, first vice-presi-dent; J. R. Howell, president, San Francisco Real Estate Board, second vice-president; D. W. Carmichael, Sacramento, third vice-president; Herbert Burdette, Los Angeles, execu-tive secretary; W. J. Lamance treas-urer; A. F. Webster, Ocean Park; W. W. Lowe, Long Beach; W. T. Gillis, Santa Monica; Charles King, Hanford; L. M. Cutting, Stockton, directors-at-large.

San José was chosen as the meeting place next year.

Resolutions were adopted expressing gratification over San Francisco com-ing into the federation, making real estate men of the State united for the first time; also thanking the real estate men of Fresno and the Chamber of Commerce of Selma and Clovis people for the lavish entertainment.

At 9 o'clock a.m., the delegates were escorted to the big raisin packing-houses and canneries and shown through the plants. At 10 o'clock a.m. they left in a special Southern Pacific train for Clovis, where they were tak-en about town in carriages presented with fine fruit and given luncheon. They returned to Fresno in time for the opening of the convention at 3 o'clock.

The question of asking the Legisla-ture to pass a law, permitting agents to collect commission on verbal con-tracts was again brought up today and a heated discussion resulted in tabling the proposed resolution.

CONTRACTS AWARDED.

WESTERN PACIFIC GRADING.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 13.—Con-tracts have been let by the Western Pacific Railway for the grading of 100 miles of their proposed line through Nevada.

The present contract runs from Death in Humboldt Valley to the Ne-vada-Utah line. It is a difficult coun-try to traverse. Mountain ranges ob-struct passage in every direction. In order to find a good grade, engineers have chosen a route that is not direct, but when completed, will do away with the double-engine service that would be necessary otherwise.

In Utah the line has already been constructed about seventy miles out-side of Salt Lake.

SAVES MOTHER FROM FIRE.

JUMPS INTO WELL AFTERWARDS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

RENO, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dis-patch.] After burning her hands in smothering fire which an overturned lamp had started in her home, there-by saving her invalid mother from imminent danger, Miss Anna Anker, a pretty young woman of Washoe, fif-teen miles south of Reno, discovered that her own garments were on fire, and to save herself ran into the yard and jumped into a fifteen-foot well that contained several feet of water.

After taking this icy plunge she climbed out by a rope and ran into the house to see that the fire would not break out again. The whole ex-citing incident occurred in less than three minutes, and only prompt action of Miss Anker saved herself and prob-ably her mother from dangerous, if not serious, burns.

Miss Anker did not even contract cold from her experience, but received several severe burns on hands and ankles.

MISTAKES COW FOR DEER.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

TACOMA, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dis-patch.] Deer have been increasing to such an extent in the Sound region that many of them are seen from trol-ley cars traveling in the suburbs of Tacoma. Motormen are carrying guns and several kills are reported. One enthusiastic carman the other day mistook a ranchman's cow for a buck deer, and his aim was so good that his error cost him $75. Fruitless efforts were made to keep the matter secret by the man.

Information was sent to the police that Reed was a person implicated in some of the recent crimes.

Jury Acquits Woman.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 13.—A jury in the United States District Court this morning returned a verdict of not guilty in the case of Mary L. Bowen, the young woman charged with the embezzlement of government funds entrusted to her care while employed as clerk in a branch of the Oakland postoffice. The jury deliberated two hours after being instructed by Judge DeHaven. The defense endeavored to show that the action of Miss Bowen, who confessed the embezzlement, was due to the influence of Louis W. Baker, to whom it is said she gave the funds misappropriated during a period of three years.

Formal Civil Ceremony Unites Millionaire "Gun-Girl" to Man of Her Choice—Directorate of Big German Factory to Present Employees With $150,000.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

ESSEN (Prussia) Oct. 13.—The civil ceremony of the marriage of Fraulein Bertha Krupp to Lieut. Gustav Von Bohlen und Halbach took place today at the registrar office of the village of Bredeny, near here. The proceedings were strictly formal, only the brother of the bridegroom and a cousin of the bride, Arthur Krupp of Vienna, being present.

FRAULEIN BERTHA KRAUPP, daughter of the famous German gun maker and one of the richest girls in the world who yesterday married Lieut. Gustav von Bohlen und Holbach in Bredeny, Germany.

The directorate of the Krupp works will, on Monday, on the occasion of the religious ceremony, present to all of the employés who have been in the Krupp service for longer than five years a ten-mark ($2.50) gold piece, and to those who have served less than five years a five-mark $(1.25) silver piece, making a total of about $150,000 t obe divided among the workmen.

TO TAX PULLMAN SURPLUS.

CHICAGO, Oct. 12.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Pullman company has enriched its stockholders to the extent of $50,000,000 by its "extortionate rates and tax evasions," according to opinion of Maxwell Edgar, special tax counsel for the city, who in a report made today advises mandamus proceedings to compel the taxing bodies to assess the surplus of $29,000,000 of the company for the present year and recover back taxes upon the surplus for the previous years.

1060 PASTOR'S CALLS

A Sturdy Minister.

A. N. H. minister thought he would have to quit the ministry because of a growing misery from undigested food.

He was induced to try Grape-Nuts and is now well and hearty and says:

"For four years I suffered severe agony at times, as a result of improper food. I could not do much work and was in misery much of the time.

"I had made up my mind that I would have to leave the ministry, but one day a friend advised me to try Grape-nuts and I am thankful that I did, for to-day I am well and can give God better service than ever before.

"Last year was the hardest of my ministry, but by the daily use of Grape-Nuts I stood up under the strain with comfort. I attended 57 funerals, was in the pulpit every sabbath except three, made 1060 pastoral calls, and the best part of it is I do not have any more "Blue Mondays."

"There is hardly a day passes that I do not recommend Grape-Nuts to some who is suffering as I suffered for 9 or 10 years and who might be well."

WASHINGTON.

WILL PASS NO CURRENCY ACT.

President Thinks There Is no Demand for Law.

Congress Is Too Busy and the People Do Not Care.

Senator Beveridge Expects Republican Victory.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Senator Beveridge does not believe that currency legislation in any important form is possible at the coming session of Congress. It is believed he talked on this subject with the President today and indications are that he and the President are in agreement on the subject.

It is understood the President does not aggressively press the subject in his message to Congress which he has already written, but which will not be delivered until December. He does, however, mention it.

"No comprehensive plan of currency reform is possible at the next session of Congress," said Senator Beveridge. "In the first place, there is not time for adequate discussion and consideration, and in the next place, there is no popular demand for such legislation.

"Reforms of our currency laws must come ultimately, but when they do come there must be careful and thorough discussion and the people must be interested in what is being done."

Senator Beveridge also talked with the President about the progress of the campaign in several States.

"So far as I can see," he said, "there is no changes in the political intentions of the people. I have opened the campaign in eight States, beginning in Maine. I have been in Massachusetts, Ohio, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, and elsewhere. I cannot see where the Republicans will lose many seats in Congress and it is quite probable that they will gain as many as they lose."

FOR ARID SETTLERS.

REPORT ON IRRIGATION.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—For the guidance of the great number of people from humid regions who settle on the immense areas of western lands opened to settlement the Department of Agriculture has issued a report on "Practical Information for Beginners in Irrigation."

There are several million acres open for settlement in the United States and irrigation works built by private enterprise and works being constructed by the national government will provide a water supply for more than a million acres of arid lands. The report says these are certain to cause an influx of settlers into Western America during the next few years. The report discusses arid soils and water supplies generally and describes how to locate and build farm ditches, prepare land to receive water and how much water to apply.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—At yesterday's Cabinet meeting Secretary Root produced for the inspection of his colleagues a plate of virgin Peruvian gold, which was presented to him on his recent South American tour. The plate bears the coat of arms of Peru and the inscription, "The alumni of the naval school, recognizing the benevolent hospitality shown by the navy of the United States to our comrades of the Peruvian naval marine, have the honor of saluting His Excellency, Señor Elihu Root, Secretary of State, and expressing their sympathy with the motives of his visit to Peru In the harbor of Callao, on board the cruiser Peru, September, 1906."

ONTARIO BANK CLOSES DOORS.

HEAVY RUN ON THE MONTREAL BRANCH IS INEFFECTIVE.

Announcement at Toronto That Quebec Institute Will Assume Liabilities Causes Depositors Less Uneasiness, and Disorder Is Averted. Losses Estimated at $1,250,000.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

TORONTO (Ont.) Oct. 13.—There was a run today on the Ontario Bank, which kept up until the bank closed at noon. There was no disorder, however, the announcement when the doors opened that the Bank of Montreal had assumed all liabilities having a quieting effect.

The Bank of Montreal, it is announced, will act merely as liquidator of the Ontario Bank. The total assets are said to be in round figures about $17,000,000, while the total liabilities are $15,000,000. A large part of the assets, however, take the form of mortgages and other securities, which have a year or more to run. It is doubtful whether the stockholders will get more than 25 to 30 cents for their stock. The president of the bank in a circular issued today says:

"The difficulties of the bank have been occasioned by the wrongful and unauthorized stock operations of the general manager, only recently discovered."

The losses of the institution are estimated at $1,250,000.

RUN AT MONTREAL.

DEPOSITORS PAID IN FULL.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

MONTREAL, Oct. 13.—A heavy run on the Montreal branch of the Ontario Bank developed today as a result of the publication of the fact that the bank was alleged to be in difficulties, and that arrangements had been made by the Bank of Montreal to take over its business. Depositors, however, were paid in full, and N. K. Kink, local manager, when asked for a statement on the situation, said:

"We opened this morning as usual and, as you see, we are doing a big business. I have no instructions from Toronto, other than to continue business as usual, and we shall pay out to our depositors whatever they demand until they are perfectly satisfied."

PANAMA IS DRENCHED.

PANAMA, Oct. 13.—The very severe rainy season has caused inundations in the interior of the province of Los Santos, where heavy losses have been suffered. The efficiency of the steam shovels in the canal zone will be considerably decreased by the rain.

POLITICAL.

BETS ARE ALL ANTI-HEARST.

Predicts He Will Not Carry One New York County.

Tammany Scratches Him to Save Organization.

Only Republican Danger Is Overconfidence.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BOSTON, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Leading financial men here are betting three to one against Hearst and bets are offered that Hearst will not carry a single county in New York State.

Betting is based on a tip from Tammany to Wall street friends that Tammany is to put the knife deep into Hearst's back to preserve its own organization. Political leaders are quietly telling their financial friends in both "streets" that where Hearst had in New York 80 per cent. of the Tammany vote last year, he will have this year not over 20 per cent.

Monday is the last day for registration in New York and best information is that the only danger for the Republicans is overconfidence.

NON-PARTISANS PLEAD CAUSE.

COUNTY CANDIDATES APPEAL TO HIGHLAND PARK VOTERS.

Marshall Stimson Ridicules Statement of Opponents That the People Named Men on Local Republican Ticket—Ben Ward Meets With Enthusiastic Reception.

Prominent candidates of the Non-Partisan County Organization addressed a large gathering of independent voters last evening at Wood's Hall in Highland Park on the issues of the county campaign. It was the first important meeting of the Non-Partisans in that section of the city. The candidates were given an enthusiastic reception.

Principal among the speakers were Marshall Stimson, candidate for Assemblyman of the Seventy-fourth District; Charles W. Bell, for Senator of the Thirty-sixth District; Dr. James P. Booth, for Coroner; Ben E. Ward, for Assessor; Lewis A. Groff and Milton K. Young for Superior Judges; Albert Lee Stephens for Township Justice and J. B. Millard for Superintendent of Schools.

Marshall Stimson, the first speaker, was introduced by former Judge J. S. Noyes of Riverside, who presided. Mr. Stimson made a plea for the election of the candidates of the Non-Partisan organization, calling particular attention to Charles W. Bell for State Senator, Ben Ward, Dr. Booth and Millard.

He ridiculed the attempt of the Republican organization leaders to show that the ticket nominated at the Venice convention represented the will of "30,000 voters, expressed through 837 delegates," and asserted that the delegates were controlled by one political boss and in their work reflected only his will.

On the other hand, said Mr. Stimson, the nominees of the Non-Partisan County Organization, were selected solely for their fitness by a committee of one hundred impartial citizens of prominence in the community, who had only the best interests of the public at heart. He urged his hearers to study well the ballot before casting their votes and to do their part in electing only the best men to office.

When Ben Ward arose to speak he was greeted with lasting applause. His popularity was evident from the start. Ward discussed the events that led to his determination to come out as an independent candidate rather than to seek a nomination by the Republicans, and in a calm and matter-of-fact way told of his methods of assessing property in Los Angeles county. His sole aim, he said, was to place the tax burden equally and justly upon all—individuals and corporations alike.

He told of the plans of his enemies to make a bitter attack upon him by attempting to prove that the individuals rather than the corporations bore the brunt of the tax levy. Then he asked pointedly why the political agents of the corporations were so anxious to defeat him at the polls.

Ward repeated his assertion of a week ago that his opponents had subscribed an immense amount of money to be used in an attempt to accomplish his defeat. He warned against "roorbacks" and asked the people to consider only their public duty when they cast their ballots.

Charles W. Bell of Pasadena, former County Clerk, made a breezy address in which he outlined the policy he would pursue in the event of his election to the State Senate.

He told of a Republican candidate for the Legislature, now seeking reelection, who said that, in order to procure the passage of any bill desired by his constituents, he was obliged to vote for many bills that were opposed to the public good—the pernicious practice of log-rolling that is adopted by railroad-controlled legislators to place bad laws on the statute books.

"If I am elected," said Mr. Bell, "and cannot introduce and have passed one good law without voting for a bad measure, I give you my word I will not vote for one bad law."

Dr. Booth, candidate for Coroner, spoke eloquently on the need of non-partisanship in local affairs. He is a Southerner of the old school and a Democrat by nature. His fine bearing made a distinct impression on the audience.

Former Postmaster Groff, who has spent a lifetime in the practice of law and on the bench, spoke briefly, as did Albert Lee Stephens, the young local attorney, who is taking time from his lucrative practice to make the campaign for Township Justice, urged to this action by professional associates who are interested in a just administration of the duties of this important office.

The non-partisans have a number of meetings in view for next week in various parts of the city and county.

"LABOR" PARTY'S BELL.

CANDIDATE OF UNIONISTS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SACRAMENTO, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] All doubt of the close alliance of Theodore A. Bell, the Democratic nominee for Governor, with the Union Labor party of the State have been dispelled by the certification of his name as the nominee of the latter party as its candidate for Governor.

Bell and Toland, for Governor and Lieutenant-Governor respectively, will appear on the official ballot as the regularly nominated heads of that party. Their names, together with those of other candidates of the Union Labor party, have been certified in legal manner, thus making six State tickets that will require places on the official ballot.

For Secretary of State, Controller, Surveyor-General and Superintendent of State Printing, the Union Labor party has nominated the Republican candidates, while the remainder of the ticket is made up of the regular Democratic nominees.

District nominations of the party have not yet been filed.

AKEY FOR COUNCIL.

SIXTH WARD NON-PARTISAN.

J. V. Akey, proprietor of a drug store at Forty-fourth street and Central avenue, has been named by the Non-Partisan City Central Committee as its candidate for Councilman of the Sixth Ward. Mr. Akey is vice-president of the Sixth Ward Republican Club, and is one of the signers of a call issued by that organization for a meeting to be held next Thuraday evening for the purpose of selecting a suitable candidate for the Republican nomination.

The selection of Mr. Akey as the candidate of the Non-Partisans leaves but one vacancy on the city ticket of that organization—the office of Councilman of the Second Ward. It is expected that this nomination will be made within a few days.

OWNERSHIP CAMPAIGN ON.

The Public Ownership party formally opened its city campaign and ratified its ticket last night at Simpson Auditorium. About 700 persons were present.

The programme was short. James S. Roche presided, speaking briefly of the city candidates of the party, whose pictures were thrown upon a screen over the stage. He introduced Stanley B. Wilson, candidate for Mayor, who made an address of half an hour on the aims of the party and criticized the public utility corporations. He declared that the Public Ownership party wanted a railroad owned by the people to be built from Los Angeles to San Pedro and also along the line of the Owens River conduit.

HUGHES ANSWERS HEARST.

DISCUSSES RYAN VS. HYDE.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

SENACA FALLS (N. Y.) Oct. 13.—In speeches delivered yesterday in Yates and Senaca counties Charles B. Hughes, Republican candidate for Governor, took up and answered the assertion made by W. R. Hearst at Corning to the effect that the net result of the life insurance investigation as conducted by Mr. Hughes was the substitution in the Equitable Life Assurance Society of "Ruthless Ryan for Harmless Hyde."

Mr. Hughes declared his opponent was insincere in making such a statement and could not "fool the people." He pointed out that the Ryan purchase of the Hyde stock was made before an investigation was even ordered and before he had anything to do with the subject.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 13.—The Minister of the Imperial Court has issued an order forbidding employés and officials of the court to rent room or otherwise shelter any persons without the special permission of the Minister.

The order is due to the arrest of Klepnikoff and other terrorists at Peterhof September 28 and the discovery that many of the participants in the conspiracy were living unsuspected in the vicinity of the palace.

The police are searching for a second mysterious automobile, supposed to belong to the terrorists, which appeared in St. Petersburg recently.

TESTIMONY IS ACCUMULATING.

ATTORNEYS REVIEWING STANDARD OIL EVIDENCE.

Attorney-General Expects Definite Conclusion Soon as to Whether Rockefeller Corporation Has Violated Anti-Trust Laws—London Development Syndicate.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—In response to inquiries today regarding the status of investigation into the affairs of the Standard Oil Company with a view to determining whether the company is operating in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law, Attorney-General Moody said that Messrs. Morris and Kellogg, who were appointed to investigate the Standard Oil methods, had accumulated a vast amount of testimony bearing on the case.

This testimony is now being gone over and it is quite likely that a definite conclusion will be reached within the next few weeks as to whether there has or has not been any violations of the anti-trust law.

It is well understood that Attorney-General Moody is to retire from the Cabinet and resume his law practice in Boston, January 1, and it is stated that he fully intends to take the personal responsibility, before he retires, of initiating proceedings against the Standard Oil Company and of publicly stating that in his judgment such proceedings could not be justified by the facts obtained.

"HOUSED" IN LONDON.

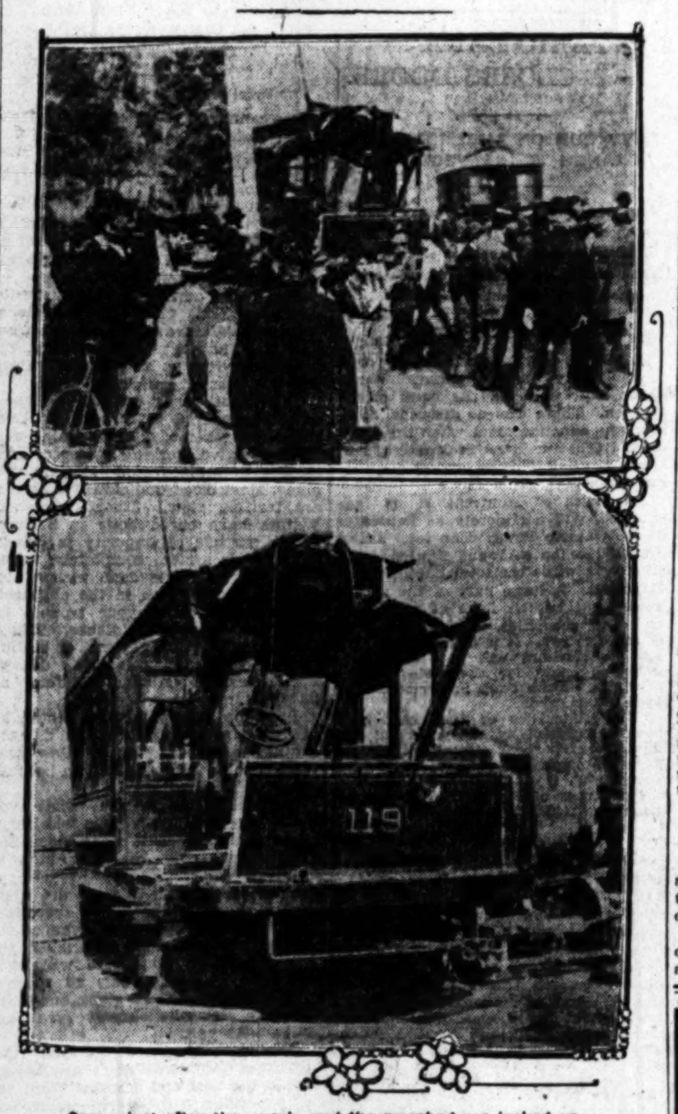
OFFICERS NOT LOCATED.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—A special cable dispatch to the Times from London says that the General Industrial Development Syndicate, Ltd., which, according to the testimony given at Findlay, O., in the Standard Oil investigation owned the Manhattan Oil Company, is housed with other concerns in the office of a firm of accountants much as the New Jersey corporations are housed in the office of a firm of lawyers in Jersey City.

The company has only two officers, neither of whom could be found. Acquaintances of these men said, however, that it was understood that their company was an American concern.

DEATH AND MAIMING BY CAR OFF CURVE.



Scene just after the wreck, and the smashed car jacked up.

A Brooklyn-avenue street car of the Los Angeles Inter-Urban line heavily laden with passengers got beyond control of the motorman yesterday morning about 7 o'clock and dashed down the steep grade at Bridge and Macy streets; careened at the sharp curve at the foot of the grade and crushed against the curbing and a telegraph pole. One man was killed outright and twenty-two were injured.

The dead:

W. A. BARRETT, electrician, employed by Pacific Light and Power Company, Wabash and Ganahl streets.

The injured:

H. H. FREITAG, a lineman employed by the Pacific Electric Company and living at No. 3173 Blanchard street, not expected to recover.

JOHN MULDER, No. 223 East Fifth street, internal injuries, and skull may be fractured.

MARY MURRAY, No. 2920 Brooklyn avenue, lacerated head and other bruises.

CAPT. H. K. WHITE, No. 115 Rivera street, scalp wound and hands lacerated.

PHILLIP HELMSTAEDER, No. 716 Echandie street, nose broken and body bruised.

C. A. CATLETT, No. 3219 Winter street, body bruised and head cut.

MISS LIZZIE BIRD, No. 915 Bailey street, chest bruised.

C. PARA, Brooklyn Heights, employé of Standard Oil Company, right wrist broken and cut about head.

MISS PARA, sister of above, slightly bruised about chest and body.

C. CALLETINO, No. 1957 Bailey street, bruised about body.

PEDRO DUARTE, Malabar street, eyes hurt and hips bruised.

GEORGE H. BALL, employé of New Method Laundry, nose and face severely bruised.

PABLO MORALES, Rheinhardt and Echandia streets, face cut, body bruised and ankle sprained.

MRS. OSCAR SMITH, No. 2453 Cincinnati streret, lacerations on head.

J. B. LAWYER, No. 3812 Blanchard street, face slightly cut.

JOHN HELDNER, No. 254 Mathews street, back of head cut.

ROSARIO MANUEL, No. 1834 Brooklyn avenue, employé of Anchor Laundry, internal injuries.

DEMEPLIA MANUEL, No. 1834 Brooklyn avenue, hand cut and body bruised.

C. SANCHEZ, right arm broken.

VICTOR TERZO, No. 653 Tehama street, body bruised.

MISS B. F. PHILLIPS, No. 1837 Bridge street, face and arms bruised.

PERCY L. DANSBY, No. 3015 Malabar street, hands and face bruised.

SOMETHING GIVES WAY.

The car, laden with forty-five passengers, was making a fast run into the city, and as it decended the grade the motorman, H. G. Bowders, used his power brake effectively until the vehicle reached the steepest part of the street, when something gave away. Bowders immediately applied his hand brake but without effect, and then reversed the motors. This threw out the overhead switch, and the man bravely held this in place while he sent the wheels of the car whirling backward. The momentum was too great and while the wheels were turning the opposite direction the weight of the car hurled it forward with but slightly decreased speed.

As it struck the reverse curve it careened wildly as the first turn was made, then at the opposite sharp turn it left the track and crashed into the curb. The rear end of the car swung around with great force, and crushed itself like an egg shell against a telegraph pole.

The passengers had all risen to their feet as they saw the car gradually get beyond control. The conductor, A. Butler, shouted to the people to hold to their seats and they would be all right. Despite this several jumped, and it was among these that the dead and worst injured are found.

KILLED INSTANTLY.

Barrett was killed instantly, being crushed by the car. Freitag was also crushed by the car and was removed to the Sisters' Hospital. He is not expected to live.

The car went alongside the curb, the greater part of it crushed. The telegraph pole at the rear only held it from falling over on its side.

The passengers on the car are unanimous in their praise of the efforts of Bowders, the motorman, to stop, and they say that if some part of the brake apparatus had not given away the car would have been brought through in safety.

The majority of the injured were rushed to the Receiving Hospital, the emergency hospital of the trolley company, or to the Sisters' Hospital. Everything possible was done to furnish immediate aid to the injured, and within a short time after the accident the wreckage was cleared away and traffic resumed.

INDIGNATION EXPRESSED.

MASS MEETING IS CALLED.

War is brewing on Brooklyn Heights since the railway accident that caused the death of one person and the injury of many yesterday morning.

Soon after the wrecking of the car a crowd of indignant citizens gathered at the scene of the wreck and threatened to tear up the track, declaring they have protested in vain against the dangerous curve. Only the cooler heads in the crowd saved trouble, it is said, and a mass-meeting was at once arranged, in the name of the King's Highway Improvement Association, to be held tomorrow evening at the corner of Echandia street and Brooklyn avenue, the object being to protest against a continuance of the service over the present line of the road.

Those acquainted with the circumstances of yesterday's accident say that if the car had not struck the electric light pole it and its entire load would have been unavoidably shot into the deep arroyo.

Several years ago the line was direct down Aliso street, from the junction of Brooklyn and Summit avenue, but at that time it was changed by means of a sharp curve on a very heavy grade to follow Summit avenue and cross the arroyo on a bridge, and there has been constant complaint of impending danger.

The people say they have demanded that the road either be continued down Aliso street as formerly or that the railway buy a narrow strip of land lying north of the curved portion of Summit avenue which would enable the road to run in practically a straight line to the arroyo and directly down Macy street. As it is the intention to build a new bridge in order to let all the cars from the interurban routes pass down the arroyo the purchase of the narrow strip would be the only additional expense.

Said a resident of Brooklyn avenue last night speaking for the improvement association: "An effort was made a month or so since to condemn this land and assess the cost on the residents of the neighborhood but as only 230 property owners were included in the assessment district the expense would have been so heavy that they protested against having it done in that way, and the proceedings were abandoned.

"We suggest that the railway company buy the strip of land referred to and deduct the amount from the proportion they have agreed to pay, in conjunction with the city, for the building of the new bridge. Something has got to be done now, or there will be trouble, for the people are aroused by the fatal accident of this morning, and do not propose to bear it any longer."

An official decree convoking Parliament in extraordinary session at Paris October 25 was issued today.

A Free Trial Package to Convince Sent by Mail to All Who Write.

Common sense is just as necessary (even more so) in medicine as in business or the affairs of everyday life. People are getting to know more than they used to. Not so long ago, it was the fashion to make all sorts of claims for a medicine, and wind up by asking the reader to go to a drug store and buy a bottle. People won't stand for that kind of thing now. They want proof—tangible proof. They want to try the remedy first and if they find it to be what is claimed they will be glad enough to go and buy it.

That is why we say to every person suffering from piles or any form of rectal disease, send us your name and we will gladly send you a free trial package. For we know what the result will be. After using the trial you will hurry to your nearest druggist and get a 50c box of Pyramid Pile Cure, now admitted by thousands to be one of the most wonderful reliefs and cures for Piles ever known.

"Please excuse my delay in writing to you sooner in regard to what your Pyramid Pile Cure has done for me. I consider it one of the finest medicines in the world for piles. I suffered untold misery for four months when my wife begged me to send for a 50c box. When it was half gone I knew I was better and it didn't take any begging to get me to send for a second box. I think I am about well now but if I feel any symptoms of a return I will order at once. I order it from the Pyramid Drug Co. to be sure of the cure. Tell all about this fine remedy for piles.

"And if there is anything in this letter you want to use, do so. I received your letter a few days ago. Yours for a remedy like the Pyramid Pile Cure.

J. J. McELWEE,
Honey Grove, Tex., R. R. 9, Box 29.

"P. S.—I only used two boxes and don't think I need any more. Piles of seven months' standing."

To get a free trial package send today, to the Pyramid Drug Co., 55 Pyramid Building, Marshall, Michigan. It will come by return mail and the result will both delight and astonish you.

Drink Pabst
It's Clean Beer

In our own homes we insist most strenuously upon our food being clean.

If we stop at a hotel or restaurant where the food or the dishes are not clean, we are quite likely to change boarding places next time.

Are we as careful of what we drink?

Purity is always desirable.

And is not cleanliness imperative in the preparation of our food or drink?

When we drink beer we must know it is not only pure, but absolutely clean.

Doctors, in perhaps a large majority of cases, prescribe Pabst Blue Ribbon Beer because they know of its absolute purity and positive cleanliness.

"It is the cleanest beer in the world," said one of America's leading doctors the other day when asked about it. "What appeals to me," he said, "is the Pabst process, so very different from all the rest. We doctors appreciate cleanliness. I have visited all the breweries of importance in the country, and I must say that for absolute cleanliness there is no beer to equal Pabst. I prescribe it in my practice and drink it myself."

Order a case of Pabst Blue Ribbon for your home and serve your guests with a beer that you can recommend as absolutely clean as well as superior in Age, Purity and Strength.

REFERENDUM STILL STICKS.

Pfahler Writ Discharged by State Supreme Court.

REFERENDUM STILL STICKS.

Pfahler Writ Discharged by State Supreme Court.

Case Now Goes to Highest Tribunal in the Land.

Fight Continues on Freaky Charter Provision.

After holding it under submission more than nine months, the Supreme Court of California yesterday discharged the writ of habeas corpus in the case of Andrew Pfahler against the city of Los Angeles, in which the petitioner attacked the constitutionality of the initiative and referendum provisions of the Los Angeles city charter. The petitioner was ordered remanded.

Attorney Robert A. Todd, counsel for Pfahler, received a telegram, yesterday from the clerk of the Supreme Court announcing the decision in the case.

Todd stated that the matter will not be allowed to rest here. The case will be appealed at once to the Supreme Court of the United States, the court of last resort. Todd declares that it will be prosecuted vigorously until a final decision is reached. He is confident of success in demonstrating that the initiative and referendum provisions of the city charter are unconstitutional.

Pfahler was arrested last January, charged with conducting a slaughter-house outside the limits prescribed in a city ordinance that was adopted under the initiative provisions of the city charter, Section 198A.

The slaughter-house, however, was within the boundaries of the ordinance passed by the Council two years previously and Pfahler and his attorney maintained the right to operate the institution on the ground that the initiative and referendum provision of the city charter was unconstitutional. The matter was taken at once before the Supreme Court. Pfahler having been arrested and remaining in jail for two or three days until Attorney Todd could appear before the high tribunal and obtain his client's release on a writ of habeas corpus.

Todd appeared single-handed for the petitioner, and City Attorney Mathews, [illegible] and Britt for the respondent. Lengthy briefs were filed and a long fight was made.

The points raised by Todd were that the initiative provision of the charter, under which the new ordinance had been enacted, was contrary to the constitution of the United States and of the State of California.

AMENDMENTS HOLD.

SUPREME COURT DECISION.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Supreme Court today discharged the writ and remanded the petitioner in the case in re Andrew Pfahler for a writ of habeas corpus. The petitioner (Pfahler) was in the custody of the Chief of Police of Los Angeles, under a warrant issued upon a complaint charging him with the violation of the provisions of a certain purported ordinance of said city, which ordinance prohibits, except within certain designated limits, the killing or slaughtering of animals the flesh or which is to be sold or offered for sale, or eaten.

His claim was that the purported ordinance had never legally been adopted; that the ordinance was not passed in an ordinary way, by a vote of the City Council, and with the approval of the Mayor, but by the electors of the city, at a general election at which it was submitted for their approval or rejection, such submission having been compelled by a petition submitted to the Council, signed by electors equal in number to fifteen per cent. of the vote cast for all candidates for Mayor at the preceding election.

The charter provision relative to the initiative, which is similar substantially to recently-enacted provisions in charters of other municipalities of the State, is vigorously attacked by counsel for petitioner and by attorneys appearing as amici curiae, who claim to see in this the taking of the power of an ordinary legislative body of the city—this vesting in the electors of a municipality power to enact measures which the legislative body refuses to approve—a violation of our Constitution, and a fortiori a departure from the republican form of government guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States.

The court further says:

"The contention here is, necessarily, that any attempt by the State to provide for the direct exercise of legislative power by the people, instead of by representatives of people elected or appointed for that purpose, is, even in purely local affairs, inconsistent with the republican form of government, guaranteed by this provision, and inasmuch as for any purpose, the theory being that such provision requires a representative form of government not only in the State itself, but in all its subdivisions, leaving no part of power of direct legislation in the people themselves.

"If we assume that this claim presents judicial questions, rather than political ones, to be determined by the courts of the United States, we are brought to a consideration of the question as to what was meant by this guarantee of a republican form of government.

"For all purposes of this proceeding, it is sufficient, to hold, as we do, that it does not prohibit direct exercise of legislative power by the people of a subdivision of the State in strictly local affairs. In saying this, we do not wish to be understood as intimating that the people of the State may not reserve supervisoral control as to general State legislation, afforded by the initiative and referendum, without violating this provision of the Federal Constitution. That they may do so has been decided by the Supreme Court of Oregon, in the case of Kadderly vs. Portland, which appears to be the only case in which that question has been directly presented.

"However this may be, it is clear that direct participation of electors of subdivisions of the State in legislation as to local affairs was never intended to be prohibited by framers of the Federal Constitution, or States adopting the same, and that such power has been exercised by them, where not inconsistent with provisions of their Constitution, in innumerable instances from the institution of our government to the present day, without interference of any kind on the part of the Federal government.

"The court holds that the municipality of Los Angeles has legislative powers which is expressly authorized by the Constitution and delegated to them by the Legislature.

"The question here simply is whether it is competent under our Constitution for the State to invest in electors of a city, by the charter thereof, such right to participate directly in the exercise of the power granted by the State [illegible] to the Los An-

"The court holds that the method prescribed by the initiative amendment does not violate any provision of our Constitution. The effect of the provisions of the Los Angeles charter, as amended, is to give legislative power vested in the city to the Council and Mayor, subject to such control by the electors as is given them by the initiative and referendum provisions.

"The reserved power of electors to directly enact such ordinances as the Council refuses to enact, as well as their power effectually to veto ordinances adopted by the Council, is made paramount to the power of the Council and Mayor, the Council being without power to repeal or amend an ordinance so enacted, and the objection that under the initiative we have 'two equal, coördinate law-making bodies, the one absolutely independent of the other,' is, therefore, without foundation."

The court holds that any ordinance enacted by the people may at any time be repealed or amended in any manner provided in the charter. It was urged by the petitioner that the initiative and referendum amendments are hopelessly in conflict, in that under the referendum amendment certain emergency ordinances take effect immediately upon their passage, and need not be referred to the people, while there is no exception declared in the initiative amendment. The court says:

"There is no claim that any emergency ordinance passed by the Council is in conflict with the ordinance here involved, and it is unnecessary here to determine what the situation would be in such an event. Obviously, however, the law would be construed either as making the emergency ordinance paramount, and precluding the application of the initiative to the subject matter thereof, or as making the initiative ordinance paramount. We cannot see any legal objection to either method, or any unconstitutional interference by either with the exercise of police power."

The court holds that inasmuch as the amendments were adopted by the electors and approved by the Legislature, and that as they are not in conflict with the Constitution, they are the law; and therefore the petitioner is remanded to the custody of the chief of police of Los Angeles.

The opinion was written by Justice Angellotti, and concurred in by all the justices excepting Justice McFarland, who wrote a dissenting opinion. Justice McFarland, in his dissenting opinion, holds that the "initiative," as contained in the Los Angeles charter, is unconstitutional and void. He says, in closing his opinion:

"In a pure democracy, which is represented in part by the initiative, whenever demagogues, pseudo-reformers, or promoters of discontent, are able to 'fool' the people for only a short 'part of the time,' by a mischievous proposition, they can by a hurried special election have the proposition voted into a law before there is an opportunity for a sober second thought. It admits the very evils which the representative form of government was intended to guard against. I cannot refrain from expressing regret at the apparent readiness of many of the people of this State to abandon the prominent features of our American system of government, the wisest system ever yet devised and put into successful operation."

Five Thousand Dollars Not Too Much for Gen. Wentworth to Spare Oak.

In building Gen. Wentworth's new hotel on Oak Knoll, Pasadena, it was found that the plans of the architects, if carried out, would necessitate the cutting down of an oak tree. Upon learning this fact, it is reported, the general said that, if it would not cost more than $5000 to change the plans, the tree should be spared. It still stands.

Five thousand dollars is probably the highest value ever placed in California on an ordinary tree.

Catarrh Fifteen Years.

Mrs. S. A. Rogers, LeMoore, Cal., writes:

"I had chronic catarrh of fifteen years' standing, and death seemed to stare me in the face.

"I tried several 'so-called' catarrh remedies, and without avail. I took fifteen bottles of Peruna and five bottles of Manalin, and I am completely cured.

"All the catarrhal symptoms are gone, my digestion is good, my appetite is good, and I rest well at night. I am seventy years of age and I hope to live many more years to praise Peruna to all my friends who suffer from catarrh as I did."

Cough and Indigestion.

Thos. Beckwith, 11 Kitchell St., Auburn, N. Y., writes:

"I was troubled with a cough and indigestion. Thanks to your advice and Peruna I am in good health now. I was talking with an old friend last week. He told me he took Peruna last winter, and he is in the best of health, working every day and speaks highly of your medicine. I shall feel it my duty to recommend Peruna to all my friends."

A great many testimonials from people of high rank and people in the ordinary walks of life, are received every month. Catarrh in all its phases, catarrh of the different organs of the body; acute catarrh, chronic catarrh, catarrh that has baffled other remedies—all these are giving to Peruna unqualified and unsolicited endorsement.

Rheumatism of Old Age.

Mrs. Caroline Trunk, 1705 Jefferson Ave., Peoria, Ill., writes:

"I had a very painful trouble for six years, consisting of rheumatism in the back and in the thigh. I used a great deal of medicine, but it did not help me. Then I used Dr. Hartman's Peruna, and two bottles of this entrely freed me of the rheumatism. I wish to keep both Peruna and Manalin always in the house. This is the best medicine that I can recommend any one to take for rheumatism."

Catarrh All Through My System.

Mr. Robert Metters, Murdock, Cass Co., Neb., Box 45, writes:

"I commenced to take Peruna the first of last February. I took it as nearly as possible according to directions. I also got a Peruna almanac and for the first time learned that my trouble was systemic catarrh. I had catarrh from my head all through my system. I took Peruna until I was entirely cured. I am eighty-three and a half years old, and feel as young as I did ten years ago.

"I visited recently among some old friends, who said I looked as young as I did twenty years ago. I thank you for your kindness to me, and hope you may live long to benefit suffering humanity."

"I believe Peruna is the best medicine in the world for all catarrhal diseases."—Mr. J. W. Palmer, 1416 Tower Ave., Superior, Wis.

Restores Vigor in Old Age

MRS. ELIZA SCHEIRER, 76 YEARS OLD.

Mrs. Eliza Scheirer, who lives at Macungie, Pa., and who has passed a very strenuous life, found at the age of 76 some of the old time vigor and energy lacking. She felt that she needed something to give her strength in her declining years. For over a year she has used Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey as a tonic-medicine and has found in it the very thing needed for one at her time of life.

She writes the following and cordially recommends Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey to both young and old:

"I would say that I am now in my seventy-sixth year. Have always lived an active life. About a year ago I began using DUFFY'S PURE MALT WHISKEY as a restorative, and I can heartily recommend it as a very valuable preservative for young and old." Mrs. Eliza Scheirer, May 6, '06.

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey

If you wish to keep strong and vigorous and have on your cheeks the glow of perfect health, take Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey regularly, according to directions, and take no other medicine. It is dangerous to fill your system with drugs, they poison the body and depress the heart while Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey tones and strengthens the heart action and purifies the entire system. It is the only whiskey that is recognized as a medicine and contains no fusel oil. This is a guarantee. Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey has stood severe tests for fifty years and has always been found absolutely pure and to contain great medicinal properties.

ABSOLUTELY PURE & UNADULTERATED TRADE MARK

CAUTION.—When you ask your druggist or grocer for Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey be sure you get the genuine. It's the only absolutely pure medicinal whiskey and is sold only in sealed bottles—never in bulk. Look for the trade-mark, the "Old Chemist," on the label and make sure the seal over the cork is unbroken. Price $1.00. Medical booklet and doctor's advice free. Duffy Malt Whiskey Co., Rochester, N. DIAMONDS

The world's supply of diamonds is constantly diminishing. The demand for diamonds is ever increasing. The production of diamonds is limited by nature and controlled by the richest syndicate in the world.

The earning power of diamonds in the past eight years has been from 20 to 30 per cent. annually. This percentage is increasing.

Our method of acquiring diamonds enables us to sell them at lower prices than can other dealers.

Our window display will demonstrate that we offer an almost limitless choice. See it.

"THE OWL" CONTEST

The Owl takes pleasure in announcing the winners in the Second Letter Writing Contest. While fewer letters were received in response to the query: "Why don't you trade at the Owl?" than in our first contest, which appealed directly to Owl patrons, yet a goodly number of answers came and some of them will prove valuable in determining the "Owl" methods.

The text of the judges' decision is as follows: "We, the undersigned judges, in the Owl Letter Writing Contest, having examined the answers received, do hereby award the prizes as follows: (Signed)

A. F. E. BOWERS, Rep. L. A. Times.
L. E. FITCH, Rep. L. A. Examiner.

The Owl wishes to thank all those who participated in the contest. The prizes will be forwarded to the winners within a few days. The names of the winners follow:

THE PRIZE WINNERS:

Just a Word As to "Owl" Policy

In maintaining its position as dictator of drug prices, "The Owl" does not forget how essential it is that every drug sold in the two busy stores should be of first quality. Owing to the tremendous volume of business, it is a fact that stocks change very frequently and that goods offered are always fresh. And they are of known quality—standard values, that are subjected to our own rigid tests for quality and purity before they are placed on sale. In drugs used for prescription work "The Owl" takes steps to secure only such qualities as are standard and of the greatest potency. In short, you can feel safe in making your purchases at "The Owl." Not only will you be able to buy at the very lowest prices, but you take no chances on drug quality. It is "Owl" policy to maintain stores where you can trade, year in and year out, and feel sure of getting a square deal. You can prove for yourself how closely this policy is adhered to. Do your trading at "The Owl."

"Lucky" Baldwin's Cattle Put Out to Die.

Skeletons Dot the Range of Old Cienega.

Complaint Made to S.P.C.A. Against Rancher.

Within sight of homes on West Adams street, and near acres of green alfalfa and tons of hay stacked in the fields, 200 cattle are slowly starving to death. E. J. "Lucky" Baldwin owns the stock, C. A. Baldwin, his nephew, is overseer of the barren ranges over which the cattle roam.

Gaunt, hungry skeletons are these cattle, which wander over the hills of the old Cienega Rancho, that touches the city west of Arlington street and extends to The Palms. Not a blade of grass is growing on the hills; rank weeds, which no animal will eat, abound. Cattle turned out on such pastures are doomed to a horrible death by starvation.

Complaint was made yesterday to Superintendent Zimmer of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, against the ranch owner. The ranchman who filed the complaint declared the stock could get as much feed on Broadway between First and Seventh streets as on the barren ranges.

THEIR WRETCHED DEATH.

An investigation was made yesterday by Officer Zimmer and appalling conditions were found on the ranch. Yearlings and two-year-olds were found to have been turned on the bare ranges, where they wander without food and with scarcely enough water. For weeks they have had practically nothing to eat, and dozens have perished.

Three fresh carcasses of cattle dead from starvation were found near a water hole. Too weak to drink, the poor beasts had dragged themselves within sight of the water only to fall a prey to vultures, which pounce upon them and pluck their eyes out before the breath has left their bones.

So wretched and skinny have the cattle become that coyotes will not touch the flesh. Skin stretched tight over a rack of bones is all that is left of the poor, miserable creatures.

With only a barbed-wire fence between them and acres of beautiful alfalfa, belonging to "Lucky" Baldwin, the cattle have died. Close to the fences, as if to gain a last glimpse of the stacks of fodder which Baldwin does not feed to them, several of the animals have crept, to die surrounded with abundance of food.

GIVEN A FEED.

This condition has long existed within sight of homes in the western addition. Many, from a distance, have noticed the cattle, while speeding to the beaches on electric cars. The poor beasts have been slowly dying because their owner did not consider it profitable to feed them.

This condition will be permitted to obtain no longer. "Lucky" Baldwin must feed the stock, as well as he feeds the dairy cattle, on the same ranch, which are fat and sleek. He will be compelled to give them an abundance.

The first task of the S.P.C.A. officers yesterday was to throw forkfuls of hay to the starvelings. Seven steers which could scarcely walk, were driven into a corral, and will be fed sparingly for a few days, as a heavy feed would kill them in their weakened condition.

This morning Officer Zimmer and several assistants will again visit the ranch, and thirty of the most emaciated of the cattle will be cut out, taken into the corral, and given a special course of feeding. The others will be given daily rations of hay.

TALE OF MIXED SUIT CASES.

TWO TRAVELERS EMBARRASSED AT THE ALEXANDRIA.

An Accidental Exchange of Bags Leads to Amusing Results—Young Man Unpacks Lingerie and Mirror. Young Woman Becomes Possessed of Bottles With Kentucky Label.

Two innocent-looking suit cases arrived on the Owl train, yesterday morning, from San Francisco. Each was a duplicate of the other. Both were initialed "M. B."

On the same train, Miss Martha Bronson, a beautiful young woman of Seattle, and Martin Blackburn, a young clubman of New York, also arrived. The young woman and the young man were sitting side by side. They had been friends in the East and the chance meeting on the Owl was renewing their friendship.

Both of the young people left the train at the Arcade Depot and each held a suit case in one hand while shaking hands with the other. They intended to dine together that evening. Both the suit cases and the young people went to the Alexandria.

At the hotel desk another meeting occurred. Mrs. Smathers, an aunt of Miss Bronson, who was acting as chaperon was introduced to Mr. Blackburn. Rooms were assigned the three arrivals and the plot thickens.

In a joyous mood Mr. Blackburn went to his room and began preparations for the joyous occasion when he would take dinner with Miss Bronson.

On the floor above, similar joyous feelings were being entertained by Miss Bronson. When she was ready to change her gown a big suit case was lugged out, the locks were snapped open, and out of the cavernous depths Miss Bronson pulled—a suit of pajamas. They were silk, but that made no difference. They belonged to a man. Another frantic grab into the recesses of the suit case and a bottle of "Travelers' Comfort" was produced. Then a mass of things, known only to the male gender was hauled out onto the floor and Miss Bronson gazed at them with consternation.

Meanwhile, Mr. Blackburn was having troubles of his own. When he opened his suit case the first thing revealed was a mirror. In astonishment he again thrust his hand into the receptacle and brought forth a flimsy thin nothing which resembled a lawn tennis net with the strings cut away. Another grab and similar unnamable things came to light. He grabbed the telephone and frantically called up the clerk.

At the same time, from the floor above, a young woman, with tears in her eyes, was asking Clerk Sibbald if he could explain the perfectly awful fact that she had a horrid man's suit case in her room in place of her own. While Sibbald was struggling with the answer he was bellowed at over the 'phone and asked to explain why in the blanked blankety blank creation a young lady's suit case had been taken to his room.

A hasty confab was held in the business office of the Alexandria, and the bell boys who had escorted the two guests to their rooms were interviewed. Then Clerk Sibbald asked Miss Bronson to please step into the ladies' parlor and he would try to explain the matter, and Johnson, an assistant clerk, persuaded Blackburn to come down and talk it over.

This accomplished, two bell boys made a flying visit to the two rooms and a rapid exchange of suit cases occurred. On the way back to their apartments two young people met, and with blushes and stammerings, explained that they would be a trifle late at dinner.

Two hours later, over a cosy dinner, a blushing young woman confided to Mr. Blackburn the story of the man's suit case that had been sent to her room through a mistake and she spoke of finding in the case a bottle bearing a Kentucky label.

Late last night a young man, with a guilty look, lined up the bell boys of the hotel and gave each sufficient cash to pay a week's board on the condition that they should not tell any one that the suit case had been his.

Charcoal Kills Bad Breath.

Bad Odor of Indigestion, Smoking, Drinking or Eating Can Be Instantly Stopped.

Sample Package Mailed Free

Other people notice your bad breath where you would not notice it at all. It is nauseating to other people to stand before them and while you are talking, give them a whiff or two of your bad breath. It usually comes from food fermenting on your stomach. Sometimes you have it in the morning—that awful sour, bilious bad breath. You can stop that at once by swallowing one or two Stuart Charcoal Lozenges, the most powerful gas and odor absorbers ever prepared.

Sometimes your meals will reveal themselves in your breath to those who talk with you. "You've had onions," or "You've been eating cabbage," and all of a sudden you belch in the face of your friend. Charcoal is a wonderful absorber of odors, as every one knows. That is why Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are so quick to stop all gases and odors of odorous foods, or gas from indigestion.

Don't use breath perfumes. They never conceal the odor, and never absorb the gas that causes the odor. Besides, the very fact of using them reveals the reason for their use. Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges in the first place stop for good all sour brash and belching of gas, and make your breath pure, fresh and sweet, just after you've eaten. Then no one will turn his face away from you when you breathe or talk; your breath will be pure and fresh, and besides your food will taste so much better to you at your next meal. Just try it.

Charcoal does other wonderful things, too. It carries away from your stomach and intestines all the impurities there massed together and which causes the bad breath. Charcoal is a purifier as well as an absorber.

Charcoal is now by far the best, most easy and mild laxative known. A whole boxful will do no harm; in fact, the more you take the better. Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are made of pure willow charcoal and mixed with just a faint flavor of honey to make them palatable for you, but not too sweet. You just chew them like candy. They are absolutely harmless.

Get a new, pure, sweet breath, freshen your stomach for your next meal, and keep the intestines in good working order. These two things are the secret of good health and long life. You can get all the charcoal necessary to do these wonderful but simple things by getting Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges. We want you to test these little wonder workers yourself before you buy them. So send us your full name and address for a free sample of Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges. Then after you have tried the sample, and been convinced, go to your druggist and get a 25c box of them. You'll feel better all over, more comfortable, and "cleaner" inside.

Send us your name and address today and we will at once send you by mail a sample package, free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 50 Stuart Building, Marshall, Mich.

Land Syndicate in Southwest, Close to City

SIMPLY THIS. We are forming a syndicate to buy on the "share-and-share-alike" principle a magnificent tract of elevated land in the Southwest, on projected car line, and which is bound to double and treble in value before long. Commands a fine view of city and has abundance of water. This is a veritable snap, and as "snaps" are mighty hard to get, don't delay one minute, but come in and get the data. It is $300 per acre cheaper than anything else in the neighborhood.

Positively no such opportunity offered before in the history of the city's wonderful growth. We honestly believe that here is a chance for you to double your money in a short time. The way to make money is to buy at first hand, large tracts at wholesale prices, and this syndicate organized with reliable people enables the smaller investor to share the profits with the bigger fellow. All of our syndicates have been successes and we have made lots of money for others as well as ourselves, and we surely can for you. We are conservative in our estimates and recommendations and our past success speaks for itself.

Now don't delay by putting it off until tomorrow for "tomorrow" never comes, and you may miss it.

Amounts of from $1700 up received.

The Man Who Was Pinch by a Coat.

By A. Taylor-Cutter.

IT was a cold day for [illegible]
He'd been in tight places before but this was the Limit.

He was bound—Neck, Arms and Legs, by his clothes.

Old Doctor Goose had fixed him.

When he first put on that suit at the Clothing store he was very [illegible] Tickled with it.

But now, instead of being "Tickled" he found himself "Pinched" by it.

You see the coat had been pressed into shape by the Flat-iron instead of being patiently worked into shape with the Needle and Thread.

This sweating by Old Doctor Goose had shrunk up the cloth in places where it was too loose and baggy.

It had also stretched out the cloth where it was too tight and pinchy.

The flat-iron can do all this in a hurry, you know. It can throw a shape into the coat while you wait almost.

But that "shape" won't stay in.

The first damp day wilts it out in the shrinkage.

And the first very dry warm day in a very warm, dry room, shrinks up the flat-iron stretching again.

Then, you're in a sort of strait jacket.

Haven't you felt that tugging-down on the back of your neck, sometimes?

Haven't you noticed how the Coat "binds" under the arms, and [illegible] the shoulders ofter a week or two of wear?

Haven't you seen the left lapel of your Coat collar bunch up, and roll out from your vest collar?

And, perhaps you've noticed, how the shoulders get sloping, and drop down at the points when they ought to stand up and look stylish?

Well—all that gradual degeneration is the result of Flat-iron faking.

Because, a coat that's properly made and fully shaped, by slow hand-needle-work can't lose its shape from Wear or from weather.

Such needle-work binds it [illegible] into a given form.

And if that form fits you, and pleases you, when you first put it on, you may rely upon that shape remaining in the garment till it's worn out.

Not so with clothes shaped by Flat-iron.

Because these have been [illegible] shaped by heat and moisture of "Tailor's Goose," instead of by slow hand-stitching.

And, for this reason, the heat and Moisture of weather will unshape them in the same way they were shaped.

Now 80 per cent. of all Suits and Overcoats are shaped and finished by the faky Flat-iron.

But you can't tell that till you wear them a week or so.

There's only one sure way of avoiding the flat-iron-faked Garment.

That's to make sure, before you buy, that the Coat, or Overcoat bears the label of the "Sincerity" Clothes Makers.

And, that label reads—

CLOSE OF EVENTFUL LIFE.

[illegible] Gregg Dies at Sisters' Hospital. [illegible] Railroad Man and Carnegie's Friend.

After a long illness, George Gregg [illegible] at the Sisters' Hospital yesterday [illegible]. He had been long a sufferer [illegible] heart disease, but had been confined to his bed only during the past [illegible].

Mr. Gregg was born February 10, [illegible] in Hollidaysburg, Pa. He was descended from an old family, his grandfather having been a general in the Colonial army. His parents both died before he was four years of age, and he was cared for by an uncle, who kept him in school until he was fourteen years old. Then he was entered, together with seven other lads of the same age, as a preferred apprentice in the Baldwin locomotive works. One of these boys was Andrew Carnegie.

When the Civil War broke out, Mr. Gregg left the locomotive works and enlisted in one of the Pennsylvania regiments. He was severely wounded in the foot in the battle of Bull Run and laid upon the field of battle for two days. When he recovered consciousness he found himself a prisoner in a freight car crowded with wounded Federal and Confederate soldiers. He was taken to Libby prison, where he was confined until the prison was filled with officers. He was quartered then on "the island," where he was subject to great exposure for one year, when he was exchanged and sent to the hospital at Washington, D. C.

His term of enlistment having expired, he reënlisted and was assigned to railroad service, acting as a locomotive engineer between the lines of the opposing armies, a post of the greatest danger.

After the war he went to Cuba as an engineer on the first railroad built on the island. He contracted yellow fever, recovered, and came back to Philadelphia.

He came to California in the early sixties and was a friend of Gov. Stanford, Mr. Crocker and Mr. Huntington. He was stationed at Sacramento for many years, and was master mechanic of the Truckee division of the Southern Pacific road. He was also stationed at Wadsworth and Reno.

Mr. Gregg was in San Francisco at the time of the earthquake in 1868. Later, he went east and located at Peoria, Ill., where he was superintendent of division of the Rock Island Railroad.

While at Peoria, he was captain of the Peoria Boat Club, and was the champion amateur oarsman of the Mississippi Valley. He was selected as a representative of the valley to row in the centennial exposition races, to compete with Courtney. He declined the honor, preferring to remain in the amateur class.

Mr. Gregg returned to California and lived in Los Angeles as master mechanic of the Southern Pacific Railroad. He was a resident of this city for several years, and then was transferred to San Francisco as master mechanic of the railroad shops in that city. He retired about eight years ago, and, as he had property interests in Los Angeles, he made this city his home.

Mr. Gregg had led a very eventful life. He had traveled extensively in Mexico, Central America, China and Japan. He was a man of fine character and attainments.

He was a member of the Sacramento Commandery of Knights Templars. He never married.

No arrangements for the funeral have yet been made.

HIS LAST "TAKE" SET.

S. D. Wilson, for four years a linotype operator in The Times composing room, died at an early hour yesterday morning at the Good Samaritan Hospital, aged 48 years. He resided with his wife at No. 453 South Hope street, where his mother, from the State of Washington, was visiting him at the time of his death. He was a brother of Leon Wilson, the novelist, and was a member of the Masonic fraternity and of the Woodmen of the World. The funeral will be held at Bresee's chapel on Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Interment at Rosedale.

SUED ON FIFTY COUNTS.

TOPEKA (Kan.) Oct. 13.—In the District Court of Shawnee county today criminal proceedings were begun against the International Harvester Company of America on fifty counts, by the filing of papers by Fred S. Jackson, assistant Attorney-General of Kansas.

The charge is made in each count that the defendant has entered into an unlawful combination with the International Harvester Company of New Jersey for the purpose of establishing a monopoly in the trade of harvesting and other agricultural implements in Kansas.

All of the counts are based on the exclusive contract feature of the contracts issued to agents by the International Harvester Company. The suit is to recover penalties for the violations of the law that have already occurred, and not as an ouster from the State. A conviction means a fine of from $100 to $1000 on each count.

VICE-PRESIDENT SPEAKS.

WATERLOO (Iowa) Oct. 13.—Vice-President Fairbanks spoke to a large audience here this afternoon, formally opening the Republican campaign in Iowa. The Vice-President spoke along general lines and in behalf of the Republican party. He declared that the Democratic majority in the House this fall would mean disaster to the country. He paid a high compliment to Gov. Cummins.

Mr. Fairbanks said in part: "The campaign in which we are engaged is an important one. We have made our largest advance and prospered most as a people when we have adhered to sound and wholesome policies in government and we shall make our greatest progress in the future by holding fast to those measures and upholding that administration which which have the fullest sanction of the best experience. It is important that policies and administrations which have shown efficiency should not be lightly overthrown, and new and untried policies, or policies which have been tried and found wanting, substituted for them. There is nothing so disturbing to business, so hurtful to progress, as uncertainty and shifting policies. It is of the utmost importance, if we would attain to our highest development, we should inaugurate wise policies and adhere to them until we have clearly outlived them and they are no longer reasonably suited to our needs."

NEWS REPORTS FROM CORRESPONDENTS OF THE TIMES.

COMBINE RAISES PRICE OF BREAD.

MAKES MORE BUSINESS FOR THE PASADENA INDEPENDENTS.

Statements of Dealers Who Advance Rates Are Denied by Rivals Who Say That Milk and Flour Cost no More Now Than at This Time Last Year.

Office of The Times, No. 26 S. Raymond Ave.

PASADENA, Oct. 13.—The effort of the local bakers' combine to force the price of bread up 20 per cent. has resulted in an increase of business for the independent bakers. The higher rate has caused many customers to change bakeries. All efforts to induce the independents to enter the combine have proved unavailing, and it looks as though the bread trust would have to go the way of its predecessors, who failed.

The claim that the increased price of flour and higher cost of help is responsible for the increase in the price of bread is flatly contradicted by the independent dealers. In fact, one independent bakers declared today that flour is now 3 cents lower in price for 100 pounds that it was last year, and that help is no more expensive.

The bread trust and milk trust both made their appearance at the same time, and have tried to excuse their action in raising the prices of bread and milk by saying that their expenses are higher this year and their profits consequently lower. Their statements have failed to gain credence and have proved to be something of boomerangs for the men who made the statements.

HUNT CLUB GIVES DINNER.

The season's gayeties of the Valley Hunt Club were formally opened this evening, when the club gave an elaborate dinner party at Hotel Maryland. The organization has been homeless since the fire of last month, which burned the clubhouse to the ground, but the fact will not interfere with the social activities of the club, and arrangements have been made whereby the Shakespeare Clubhouse will be used for the functions of the club until a new home can be built.

Tonight's party was held in the annex dining-room. Fifty members of the club were present. The tables were set to form a swastika cross, the centerpiece being a large basket of American Beauty roses. Leading from a red satin bow attached to the basket were streamers of red satin, while at the ends of the cross were tall vases filled with roses. The prevailing shade of red gave a soft light to the room. The soft, red glow of the red-shaded candles carried out the effect, and the place cards were painted in red and white, the colors of the club. Informal addresses were made by the members. After the repast the guests assembled in the Japanese room, where the game of five hundred was enjoyed. The arrangements were under the supervision of Mrs. R. I. Rogers and Mrs. Thad Lowe.

SECURING DOG LICENSES.

Humane Officer McAney is not satisfied with the manner in which dog license fees are being paid in, and this afternoon took steps to hurry up the delinquents. It has been threatened on two or three occasions that if the dog owners who have not yet paid their licenses did not come to time, they would be prosecuted, but on each occasion the humane officer has proven lenient and granted an extension of time. He announced today that his patience is at an end, and that he will enforce the law to the letter from now on.

The first victim to fall under the ban of McAney was N. E. Vinson of South Orange Grove avenue. McAney this afternoon swore out a warrant charging him with evading the license ordinance, and he will have a chance to explain in court how it came about that he failed to pay the tax on his canine.

The outcome of the case will be watched with interest, as it has been claimed that the license ordinance, as at present on the city statues of Pasadena, is not legal and will not stand a test case. The administration and the Humane Society maintain that there is no doubt as to its legality, and will see that it is enforced.

There are a number of other dog owners who are slow about buying the license tags, and more arrests will follow if some activity is not manifested. The tax and license collector still has a goodly number of tags on hand and will be pleased to hand them out at the rate of $1.50 each.

WILL GREET GILLETT.

President Elmer Woodbury of the Pasadena Republican Club has issued an invitation to all Republicans in Pasadena to attend the reception which will be tendered to Mr. Gillett at La Casa Grande Monday evening. The reception will be from 7:30 until 8 o'clock in the evening, and it is hoped that all Pasadena Republicans will take advantage of the opportunity to make the acquaintance of the nominee for Governor. After the reception the party will go to the tent on North Fair Oaks avenue, where a big rally will be held.

SOCIETY OFFERS REWARD.

The Pasadena Humane Society has taken up the case of the two cows which were chopped with an ax near San Pedro, and offers a reward of $100 to the person who will accomplish the arrest and conviction of the man guilty of the inhuman act. The case is one of exceptional brutality, and the society is determined to secure the conviction of the man responsible for it if possible. Dr. Medici de Biron has taken up the matter, and is trying to secure evidence. The owner of the cows, John Ardaise, has offered a reward of $100 for the conviction of the guilty person, making a total of $200.

WORK ON POSTOFFICE.

Inspector Hall of the Postoffice Department has placed the seal of his approval on the plans for the new postoffice on North Raymond avenue, and the building will be finished, according to the specifications lately drawn. The work on the building will be rushed rapidly, as it is the desire of the postal authorities to move into their new quarters as soon as possible.

WILL GIVE CONCERT TODAY.

The first of the new series of Sunday concerts will be held in Central Park tomorrow afternoon. It was the intention to hold the first concert last week, but arrangements had not been completed at that time, and it was found necessary to postpone the concert. The recital will begin at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. The programme for tomorrow's concert will be as follows:

March, "Victory" (Von Blon;) selection, "Bohemian Girl" (Balfe;) "Meditation" (Morrison;) selection, "Impassioned Dream" (Roras;) selection, "Echoes" (Tobani;) march, "Billet Doux" (Neilsson;) selection, "Ermine" (Meyrelles;) idyll, "Mill in the Forest" (Eilenberg;) overture, "Benefactor" (Heed;) march, "Lights Out" (McCoy;) medley of national airs.

MISS SUIGART HONORED.

Miss Florence Doolittle of No. 295 South Los Robles avenue entertained the Phi Alpha Sigma sorority and a number of their friends last evening with a "hard times party." The guests of honor were Miss Laura Suigart, who is to leave soon for Europe, and Miss Margaret Ochiltree of Berkeley.

Each guest came attired in what was her idea of a "hard times costume," and the result caused no end of merriment. The appearance of the house had been changed so as to suggest extreme poverty. The evening was spent with old-fashioned games, and later refreshments were served.

Those present were Misses Harriet Lewis, Adeline Wright, Heloise Hequembourg, Margaret Ochiltree, Laura Suigart, Alice Earley, Mary Traylor, Ethel Scudder, Helen Sickler, Gladys Barndollar, Grace Waldron, Elizabeth Woodville, Lillian Grant, Grace Dickinson, Ruth Gaylord, Helen Dickinson, Clara Nash, Harriet Judd, Serena Bland, Kraft, Scobey, Pease, Sargent, Lynch, McCament, Vaughn Fisher; Mrs. John Traylor Mrs. Neal K. Traylor, Mrs. Bardsley.

GIVEN SURPRISE PARTY.

Miss Mabelle Lewis of No. 324 North Raymond avenue was the recipient of a pleasant surprise last evening when a group of her friends dropped in for a farewell social evening. Miss Lewis is soon to accompany her family to Hollywood. The evening was passed with cards. Five-hundred and hearts were the games played. The guests had brought along several watermelons for refreshments and after the games these were served. Those present mere Misses Florence Williams, June Yeakle, Callie Lockett, Irene Moulton, Gertrude Edwards. Messrs. Chester Lewis, Carrol McCurdy, Wyman Tyler, Vest Robbins, Richard McDowell, Holliday.

GIRLS ENJOY PARTY.

Miss Clara Crawford of No. 600 North Fair Oaks avenue entertained the young girls of the Home Telephone Company last evening. The evening was spent at games, followed by a programme of vocal and instrumental music and the singing of popular and college songs by the entire company. Those present were: Miss Carrie Carson, Miss Ethel Basore, Miss Ida Niosi, Miss Lelia Chase, Miss Gertrude Kane, Miss Jewel Rider, Miss Maude Vail, Miss Bessie Chaffee, Miss Sarah Chaffee, Miss Sadie Bryden, Miss Nellie Crowell, Miss Jessie Flint, Miss Madge Dogherty, Miss Clara Crawford.

CROWN CITY NOTES.

A brush fire at the corner of California street and Euclid avenue called out the fire department this afternoon. The blaze, which started in a hedge fence, was extinguished before any damage was done.

An emergency wagon of the Edison Electric Company was smashed up at the corner of Colorado street and Wilson avenue this evening by the horses taking fright and running away. The animals ran east on Colorado street. At the corner of Wilson they broke loose from the wagon and turned south. Later they were captured in the southern part of town. The wagon was wrecked and the horses were nearly exhausted when captured.

John Merkel was arrested this evening by Officer Rice on a charge of vagrancy. He was wandering along Lake avenue in search of free food. He was escorted to the police station where a vagrancy charge was placed against him and later in the evening he was sent to the County Jail.

Tomorrow afternoon at the Y.M.C.A. Judge J. H. Merriam will deliver an address on "God-like Power." Good music has been arranged for and a general invitation is extended to all to attend. The Sunday afternoon meetings have proven popular and are always largely attended.

VENICE MAY GET AQUARIUM.

VENICE, Oct. 13.—The promoters of Venice are in communication with President Jordan of Stanford University, who has promised to visit this beach within the next thirty days for the purpose of making investigation relative to the establishment of an aquarium and experimental biological laboratory here. The beach of this bay is recognized by students of ichthyology as being an ideal site for the location of such an institution. The Venetians are deeply interested in the question, and are encouraged at the prospects of coöperation on the part of the great institution of learning.

Complications are abut to arise over the site selected by the city as a location for the City Hall. The City Trustees have accepted the offer of Abbot Kinney for a 50-foot frontage on Windward avenue, adjoining the bath-house, for a nominal consideration of $1. In addition to this the city is to pay $2499 for the foundation that has been built on the lot. The property is worth at least $300 per foot.

It seems at this time, according to the contention of the persons holding the ten-year lease on the bath-house, that this property is covered by their contract, it having been designed to build on it a gymnasium, which it was thought would be a great accession to the bathing pavilion. A lawsuit is threatened for violation of contract, if the site should be used as a city hall. The City Trustees will probably also hesitate to begin the erection of a building on the lot until all differences have been settled.

DOWNEY PERSONAL NOTES.

DOWNEY, Oct. 13.—The congregation of the Methodist Church gave a reception to their pastor, Rev. C. R. Norton, as a testimonial of their pleasure in his assignment here for another year.

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Banker left this week for Santa Barbara on a pleasure trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Riggs and son, Clifford, are enjoying a vacation at "The Terrace," in Las Crescenta.

Mrs. E. T. Bryam has returned home from a month's stay at Hermosa Beach.

T. B. Gibson of Downey is in San Francisco, acting as delegate of the local lodge of Masons at the grand lodge.

C. H. Eberle, editor of the Downey Champion, attended the high court of Foresters at Santa Barbara.

Marshall Henshaw has returned from the mines at Kofa, Ariz., and has taken up his studies at the High School.

TOURIST HOTEL FOR MONROVIA.

CAPITALISTS SEEK SITE FOR A LARGE HOSTELRY.

Men Interested in the Project Desire to Erect Great Structure at Altitude of Fifteen Hundred Feet in Picturesque Canyon—City May Sell Needed Land.

MONROVIA, Oct. 13.—Clint Sargeant, president of the Board of Trade of Monrovia, and W. R. Farman, capitalists of this city, have announced their intention to build a fine hotel for tourists. If the project is consummated, there is every promise that Monrovia will become one of the most important tourist resorts in Southern California. The beauty of the San Gabriel Valley is well known and Monrovia is one of the most attractive places in the vale.

Messrs. Sargeant and Farman, associated with other capitalists, are prepared to spend many thousands of dollars on a hotel, provided a suitable site can be secured. Such a site they have in view. It is in the Monrovia Cañon, and is a part of 1000 acres of land owned by the city. The Board of City Trustees has been asked for a lease and the request will be acted upon tomorrow evening.

The location desired for the hotel is at an altitude of 1500 feet. Magnificent views in every direction are commanded, the air is clear and bracing, and there is running water all the year.

Monrovia is an unusually desirable sight for a hotel, as hundreds of tourists visit the city every winter. It is within easy distance of a number of the resorts in the mountains.

The proposed hotel will be within three miles of the Pacific Electric Station, and, if the building is erected, it is proposed to put in a private electric line from the center of the city to the mouth of the cañon.

YOUTH AGAIN SUSPECTED.

George Collins, a boy, was arrested today on a warrant charging him with burglary. He is the son of a respectable family, who have recently become allied with the Holy Roller congregation. The boy is suspected of robbing a telephone box of its battery. It is said the theft was committed at the Applegate home when it was vacant. This is the second time the boy has been under suspicion.

Realty snaps at H. G. Udell's.

The Pope, who is in perfect health, received many people in private audience yesterday, including Archbishop Mazzella of Rossace, Italy, and the Right Rev. E. Grouard, apostolic vicar of Athabasca, Canada, intervoewing the latter as to the condition of the church in Canada.

At Goldfield

We sold Mohawk stock eighteen months ago at 15 cents per share, and it is now selling around $4.00, a price more than justified by the production and representing an actual cash profit of more than 2500 per cent. The

Goldfield Silver Pick
Leasing Syndicate

Gives Promise of Producing Another Mohawk

We quote the following from a telegram received by us last evening from Goldfield:

"Shaft down 110 feet cutting through ledge of ore 18 feet wide; resembles Mohawk and pans high"

This telegraphic advice accords with our expectations for the Goldfield Silver Pick Lease, situated, as it is, between the Mohawk Combination and January Mines—far-famed producers—must of necessity possess the same rich ledges, and with sufficient development be equally productive. Already the main workings of the lease have encountered shipping ore, and as early as practicable actual shipments of ore to the smelter will begin. With ore shipments the dividend goal will be in sight, and when these shipments commence the stock you can now purchase at

Thirty Cents Per Share

Will not be obtainable from the company at any price, but be purchasable only in the open market at $1.00 (par) or higher per share. We sold Frances-Mohawk Mining and Leasing Stock in July at 20 cents per share; this lease has already produced over a quarter of a million dollars in gold, paid a dividend of 25 per cent. on our selling price of the stock and the latter is now bid for around 80 cents per share, affording our customers 325 per cent. (including dividend) cash profit within 90 days.

We have abundant reason to be confident that the lease of the Goldfield Silver Pick Leasing Syndicate will surpass the remarkable record made by the Frances-Mohawk, for at the same stage of development no other property in the entire camp has given such strong promise of rich productiveness.

NEWS REPORTS FROM CORRESPONDENTS OF THE TIMES.

SUPERINTENDENT SUES COMPANY.

WEALTHY MEN OF NEW YORK BELONG TO CORPORATION.

Harry Wilson Brings Action Against Death Valley Concern for Four Months' Wages—Reports Current That He Misrepresented Prospects of Claims.

SAN BERNARDINO, Oct. 13.—Harry Wilson has commenced an action at Los Angeles against the Death Valley Corporation to recover $1000 for four months' salary alleged to be due as superintendent of the corporation's mining property near Death Valley. Wilson was the locator. It is said that in a letter in which he predicted big things for his properties he secured the sum of $8500 from wealthy New Yorkers, who later took over the mining claims.

Becoming dissatisfied with Wilson's reports the capitalists sent out from New York Capt. George C. W. Crawford, a mining expert, who proceeded to oust Wilson. According to the agreement between the capitalists and Wilson he was to be retained as manager at a salary of $250 a month, and a share in the net profits, which his letter declared would amount to $7,- in four years.

Crawford is alleged to have found Wilson's claims of no value whatever. Wilson had claimed that he not only had silver and gold blocked out that would run millions, but that from the sale of water to the population of a city which would establish on the desert the company would receive returns of a year, and hundreds of thousands would also pour into the sales of the corporation store.

The Death Valley Corporation is now in the hands of the Sheriff, under a writ of attachment served out on Wilson's complaint, but Capt. Crawford says that Monday he will release the attachment by executing a bond to cover the amount of Wilson's claim. Out of the case growing out of the suit the corporation will fight to a finish, with the result that Los Angeles courts are destined to listen to the unfolding of an interesting story in the way of mining operations.

The Death Valley Corporation has paid many thousands for copper claims in the region of Death Valley, all of which are pronounced by Capt. Crawford to be worth the price. An offer was made for the Griggs mine, but the owner holds out for $1,000,000, which Crawford says he may never get from the corporation, although Capt. Crawford says that the mine is a good one and may be worth from $100,000 [illegible]

BUILDING BOOM AT SANTA ANA.

OVER FIFTY STRUCTURES ARE BEING ERECTED.

Plans for Many Other Homes, Business Blocks and Stores Are in Hands of the Contractors and the Belief Prevails That Activity Will Grow This Winter.

SANTA ANA, Oct. 13.—This city is now enjoying the greatest building boom ever known in the district, more than fifty new structures being in course of erection. There are plans for many more in the hands of the contractors, including new business blocks and stores. Every contractor in the city is busy. The belief prevails that there will be more building done here this winter than in any former season in the history of the city.

A noticeable improvement in the condition of the real estate market here has made itself manifest during the past several weeks. Several large tracts of land have changed hands, and are now being cut up into smaller holdings before being placed on the market. It is intended to sell these in five and ten-acre plats, and the indications are that there will be a ready demand. In addition to the cutting up and replatting of these larger tracts, many important sales have lately been consummated, and at figures that speak well for the financial worth of investments in Santa Ana.

Among some of the recent transactions can be mentioned the sale of the J. T. Raitt property to H. J. Pullen of Los Angeles. Mr. Pullen now has a large force at work cutting the tract into small offerings. The Halesworth walnut orchard of sixteen acres has just been sold to O. S. Lewis, who recently came here from Seattle. This tract is on North West street, and brought $18,000. It is stocked with bearing trees. The J. B. Winslow ranch of twenty acres on South McClay street was sold this week to Mrs. Mabel Summers of Hollywood for $17,000. J. Gleason, the furniture dealer, has disposed of his residence on North French street, for $7000, to Col. H. Clopton of Long Beach. W. W. Fisher has sold his dwelling on South Main street to W. F. Cullen. The price was not made public, as it is understood the property was bought for speculation.

PARADE OF PRODUCTS.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Parade of Products celebration, considerable progress was reported. It has been decided to make the celebration a county affair, and reports from the cities and towns show that every effort will be made to make it a success. The committee decided to recommend Wednesday, December 5, as the date for holding the celebration, and this time will probably be settled upon. Over $1000 has already been pledged, and assurances received that at least $1500 can be had without trouble. Each locality or town that participates in the parade will be expected to be represented by one or more floats appropriate to that section. A fine display of live stock will be a feature, as well as excellent showing of trotting and driving horses.

SPORTSMEN ARE ACTIVE.

Orange county sportsmen are actively planning for the opening of the duck and quail season next Monday morning. A large number have arranged to go from here Sunday afternoon, and will spend the intervening time between that and Monday morning in locating desirable points from which to get their birds. Reports from the quail covers are to the effect that these little birds are unusually plentiful this season. Owing to the fact that late hatches prevailed large numbers of the birds are still too small to kill. Ducks do not seem quite as plentiful as might be expected at this season of the year. Club keepers in this section claim that it is due to the warm weather. Pigeon and teal are reported, but not in any large flocks.

FIRE DESTROYS LUMBER MILLS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN BERNARDINO, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Fire of unknown origin tonight completely destroyed the Brookings lumber mills at Fredalba, on the San Bernardino Mountains, involving a loss of $50,000 and throwing out of employment 200 men. The mill had a capacity of 72,000 feet of lumber a day. There are 20,000,000 feet of lumber in the yard, to save which a desperate fight is now progressing. The red glare from the fire was still illuminating this valley at 11 o'clock tonight. Four years ago the mill was destroyed, together with 4,000,000 feet of lumber.

LATER—At 12:30 o'clock this (Sunday) morning, word was received from Fredalba that the flames were raging in four piles of lumber containing 3,500,000 feet. The night watchman is missing and it is feared he was destroyed in the flames. A high north wind is blowing.

POLITICS MAKES STRANGE EVENT.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

VENTURA, Oct. 13.—C. L. Bradley, Republican nominee for Tax Collector, and William McGlinchey, Democratic nominee for the same office in this county, shared the same bed in Fillmore last night. The town was so full of politicians that there was not room for McGlinchey, who arrived late, and rather than see him walk the streets, Bradley, who had the only double bed in the town, made room for his opponent. There was no quarreling between the two during the night and both slept soundly.

TROUBLE BREWING AT MINES.

Mexican Workers May Make Outbreak on Account of Failure to Receive Their Wages.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN DIEGO, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The steamer St. Denis from Ensenada reports further trouble brewing at the Alamo mines in Lower California, where some time ago a repetition of the Cananea riots seemed imminent. The trouble, which arose over unpaid checks given Mexican laborers and dishonored by the banks on which they were drawn, was apparently settled, but another outbreak is feared from the same cause.

CHINESE FIGHTS CAPTOR.

Policeman Squiers today captured Hi Long, a Chinaman, smuggled across the border during the night. Word had reached the police to look out for contraband Chinese, and when Hi was found hiding under the steamship wharf, and unable to speak English, he was placed in custody and identified, not, however, until he had given his captor an exciting chase under the wharves.

When caught Hi showed fight, and pulled out a knife. The policeman soon disarmed him.

GETS SENTENCE OF SIX HOURS.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

SAN DIEGO, Oct. 13.—Joe Egan has just served the shortest sentence ever imposed on a man convicted of taking a bicycle without the knowledge or consent of the owner. He was charged with grand larceny, but told the court that he only borrowed the wheel for a short ride and was returning it when arrested. So stoutly did he adhere to this story that it finally carried conviction to the judge, and, to the amazement of the District-Attorney's office and almost every one else, Egan was allowed to plead guilty to a misdemeanor and was sentenced to six hours in the County Jail.

Contract Signed This Week for Equipping the Victor Ponet Apartment Building With Marshall & Stearns Company's Patented Wall Beds

The week just past saw the signing of another large contract for our Patented Wall Beds. It calls for the equipment of the Victor Ponet Apartment Building, now under course of construction at the corner of Pico Street and Grand Avenue, this city. Architect, A. L. Haley, inc., designed this building, which will be four stories in height, and when completed will be one of the best and finest of its kind in Los Angeles.

The majority of the Apartment Houses built in Los Angeles and throughout California are equipped with the Marshall & Stearns Company's Patented Wall Beds and other Fixtures. There are many reasons for this—reasons which everybody should know. It is knowledge which may be of some value to you in the future.

Come in and see us or send for a copy of "The House Ideal," which is descriptive and illustrative of our Patented Fixtures and contains much valuable information. It is mailed free upon request.

"Perspectives and Floor Plans"

Is a handsome 96-page booklet, showing the front elevation and floor plans, drawn in detail, of a large number of buildings which have been built for and equipped with our Patented Fixtures. It is full of practical designs for Cottages, Homes, Apartment Houses, etc. Mailed to any address upon receipt of 10c to cover cost of postage.

NOTICE—The Marshall & Stearns Company's Wall Beds and other Fixtures are fully covered by patents. Any infringement upon these patents, either by manufacturer, purchaser or user, will be vigorously prosecuted.

Where else can you find such choice lots with such improvements at $4.25?

Figueroa Boulevard Tract

Where else can you get such railway facilities at 5-cent fare?

$10 a Month

There are no other lots of equal value that can be bought on such easy terms. There are no others in that attractive section that can be bought at such low prices. There are none there more highly improved. These lots have graded streets, water piped in large mains and cement walks and curbs. They have the added advantage of choice location and fine transportation facilities. Figueroa street, which bounds the tract on the east, is the show street of Los Angeles. It is bordered by handsome homes throughout its entire course through the city. Hoover street on the west is also popular and a most desirable residence street. Florence avenue on the north is one of the best and oldest east and west thoroughfares. All you need to pay in this fine neighborhood to establish your own home is $50.

ONLY $50 DOWN

Ten dollars a month completes your payments. You have a location second to none and transportation facilities few other localities can boast. You have the new Moneta avenue line at 5-cent fare, the Gardena division of the Redondo line and the San Pedro Inter-Urban line.

50-Foot Lots at $425 and Up

The lots are large. The price is lower than you could buy the acreage now. You have the advantage of first-class improvements.

Come in for free tickets and go Sunday. You will not go alone. This is the fastest selling tract in the whole southwest, with good reason for its quick sales. This office will be open until 2 p.m. Sunday to give out free tickets to all who come.

Weather Conditions.—The eastern high pressure area has moved to the St. Lawrence Valley. It continues to control the weather east of the Mississippi River, and no rain has occurred in that region during the last twenty-four hours. The low pressure area over Montana has joined forces with another storm over New Mexico and the two now form a well-defined trough of low pressure extending from Manitoba to Mexico. This storm has caused rains in Western Texas and Colorado. A second high area over the Northwest has caused fair weather west of the Rockies, and under its influence fair weather will continue in Los Angeles and vicinity tonight and Sunday. Some fog is probable early Sunday morning.

Forecasts.—Local forecast for Los Angeles and vicinity: Fair tonight and Sunday.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 13.—Weather forecast:

For San Francisco and vicinity: Fair Sunday; cloudy tonight and possibly showers; light north wind, changing to southwest.

For Sacramento Valley: Cloudy Sunday, possibly showers in north portion; cooler, fresh south winds.

San Joaquin Valley: Fair Sunday; fresh south winds.

Los Angeles and vicinity: Fair Sunday; light west winds.

Arizona: Fair Sunday and Monday; warmer Monday.

LOCAL PRODUCE MARKET.

METAL MARKET.

SILVER.

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—Bar silver, 69½.

COPPER.

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—Lake copper, 21.25 to 22.25; electrlytic and casting, 20.50 to 21.50.

LEAD.

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—Lead quiet at 5.75 to 5.95; spelter, 6.15 to 6.20.

Cool weather has had an invigorating effect on the market during the past week, and all lines of produce have been in active demand. Prices were uniformly firm and there was a tendency toward scarceness of first-class stocks.

The most important feature of the market was the sudden change in aspect of the egg market yesterday. Ranch offerings were advanced to 38 cents, and fresh eastern were raised to 35 cents. Storage selected were quoted at 28 cents. Prices generally were firm at the new quotations, and no complaints were heard on account of the higher figures.

All descriptions of butter moved well yesterday. Higher prices are expected any time. On change yesterday 30 cents was offered for two carloads of eastern storage butter, but no one had any to sell. There was a moderately active end-of-the-week trade noted in fruits yesterday, and with general offerings about balancing requirements, previous prices were without important fluctuations. Receipts of grapes in small packages were moderate and the better quality sorts cleaned up quickly at full figures. Supplies of both peaches and pears were fully up to trade needs and the best lines held steady at the top quotations. Melons were in good demand at the old prices. Bellefleur had a better feeling at $1 per box. The recent warm weather injured the Bellefleur apple crop considerably, and caused the market to be glutted with all kinds of apples. However, these stocks are now well cleaned up and firmer prices are now in evidence. Other varieties of good apples are strong. Yellow sweet potatoes have advanced to $1.50 and $1.75. Blackeye beans are lower at $3.75 and $4.

Two tons of fancy evaporated chili was sold on change yesterday in the market for miscellaneous vegetables. Trade was good and supplies were equal to requirements. Fish was plentiful, but lobsters weer scarce.

NEW YORK MARKETS.

SHARES AND MONEY.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—The tone of the stock market was heavy today, and there was the same obscurity about the causes as waes the case yesterday. The gassip of the board room attributed it to political uncertainties. The added pressure after the appearance of the bank statement might seem to preclude the money situation as a motive of the selling of stocks as the consideration to the surplus gives the index of a favorable statement according to the method of professional stock market computation. The $3,460,600 addition to cash reserves was considerably in excess of preliminary estimates. The excess was supposed to represent a correction of last week's discrepancy. The $13,326,600 increase in loans was a somewhat formidable measure of the transfer of borrowings from foreign markets to this, which has been forced by the rise in foreign money rates. Account is taken also of the termination of the important movement of gold and the completion of the deposit of the government of the money designated for that purpose with the banks which have furnished the means for the building up of the banking reserve up to this point. The current of the domestic cash movement is still setting strongly from New York to the interior. Discounts rose again in London today and the Bank of England parted with $3,800,000 more gold to Egypt. The foreign exchange market is merely nominal in New York on a Saturday but the quotations for Sterling exchange today were reduced a quarter of a cent in the pound sterling. Reports of the mercantile agencies showed continuance of the intense activity in all commercial departments and the week's bank clearings show no subsidence from the high level of exchanges in the country's money markets. The market closed heavy with significant rallies from the low point. Total sales of bonds, par value $1,092,000.

GENERAL EASTERN MARKETS.

GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 13.—The wheat market was strong all day, bullish sentiment, increasing as trading proceeded. Shorts and commission houses were active bidders. Firm cables and continued lighted receipts in the Northwest were the chief strengthening factors early in the session. Total arrivals today at Minneapolis and Duluth were 505 cars, compared with 814 cars on the corresponding day last week. During the last half of the day the market was further strengthened by the smallness ofprimary receipts, total arrivals being 1,057,000 bushels today, compared with 1,175,000 the corresponding day one year ago. The market closed strong. December opened ⅛ to ⅛@¼ higher at 74⅝@74⅝@½, advanced to 75, and closed ⅝ higher at 74⅞. Fear of a car shortage which would hamper the free movement of the crop, had a strengthening effect on the corn market. December closed firm ⅜ up to 42⅜. Moderate demand by shorts and cash interests held the oats market steady, despite considerable selling by local longs. December closed a shade lower at 33⅞. Provisions were firm throughout the entire session. October ribs were especially strong, and closed at an advance of 35 cents. A 0c advance in the price of live hogs, was one of the chief reasons for the firmness. At the close January pork was up 10c, lard and ribs were each 5@7½c higher.

FLASHES FROM WIRES.

By an explosion of a converter in the plant of the Illinois Steel Company at South Chicago yesterday, about twenty workmen were badly burned, two of them so seriously that it is believed they will die.

By mutual consent, the charge of peonage preferred against Thomas H. Musgrove, a wealthy planter of Barfield, Ark., by Marion S. Emmons and Adelheide Vitt, white girls of St. Louis, which was brought to trial in the Federal Court at Helena, Ark., has been continued until the next term of court, and the civil case involving claims of $50,000 each by the two girls has been substituted for trial.

At the office of the French Cable Company in New York yesterday it was stated that there had been no fresh eruption of Mount Pelee, on the Island of Martinique.

Maxim Gorky, the Russian novelist and Socialist, sailed yesterday for Naples from New York on the steamer Prinzess Irene. He will write his farewell impressions of America on the Atlantic. Gorky gave a farewell dinner to some of his intimate Russian and American friends in the Café Martin and declined to express any opinion about America.

John G. McGraw Woodbury resigned yesterday as Commissioner of the Street Cleaning Department, New York, owing, he says, to persistence of the Mayor to "inject politics into my department." Mayor McClellan denies this.

The Lord Mayor of London, Vaughan Morgan, arrived in Paris yesterday, accompanied by the Sheriffs, Aldermen and fifty City Councillors, and was accorded an enthusiastic welcome.

The Dominican revolutionists have signed a peace agreement with the government of Santo Domingo, but the former refuse to lay down their arms so long as the government maintains an armed force at Monte Christi. A rebel force numbering 800 men, under Gen. Guellito, is camped on the south bank of the Yaque River near Monte Christi.

The American armored cruisers Maryland and Pennsylvania have entered the Suez Canal, bound southward.

Twelve inches of snow fell in the Cripple Creek, Colo., district yesterday, and was drifted badly by a high wind.

The Marine Hospital Service, Washington, has been advised of the appearance of three new cases of yellow fever at Havana; one at Cienfuegos and one at Guines.

COMMISSIONER RESIGNS.

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] John McGaw Woodbury, street cleaning commissioner, has resigned his commissionership. The Mayor has accepted it. Politics caused it, according to Maj. Woodbury's letter.

Commissioner Woodbury, in his letter to the Mayor, says: "When you informed me that you desired to continue me as commissioner you said to me that you would 'Keep the politicians off my back,' to quote your own expression. Your attitude has undergone so marked a change in the last particular, and you are now so insistent upon the injection of politics into my department, that I am satisfied that my utility and effectiveness as commissioner must presently cease. As it is, therefore, no longer possible for me to administer the office with a decent regard for the public service or consistently with the maintenance of my self-respect, I demand that I be relieved of my responsibilities."

SUMPTUOUS BANK QUARTERS.

The improvements being made for some time in the counting room of the First National Bank are about completed. The head officials all have their quarters along the Second-street windows, with a seat and desk on the outside for meeting customers. More important business is provided for in the private office inside. The row of desks down the center of the main floor for public use furnishes ample accommodation in this respect. The finishing is all very rich and this banking room will compare favorably with any in the largest cities.

Miss Sarah Kissam Treadwell, a relative of the Vanderbilts, died Tuesday in the old family home at No. 29 East Fourth street, New York, just west of the Bowery. Miss Treadwell was possessed of property valued at several millions of dollars.

TURN YOUR FACE INTO DOLLARS

Many a Man Has Failed Because His Face Was a Picture of Calamity.

It takes sunshine to produce a rose, a perfect rose. And so man, to be successful, must have sunshine inside. The life which has it not, which has no health and no happiness, is sour, surly, pessimistic, and a failure. The world already has too many vinegar faces that breathe ill will and strife. The world wants joy, comfort, sunshine, and will cling to the man who has it, who radiates gladness and true [illegible] wherever he is and under all circumstances.

Some people have a genius for seeking out the disagreeable, the crooked, the bad and the ugly. These are the destroyers; they travel in schools, they herd together, for they love their kind, and the cheerful part of the world will have nothing to do with them.

And why is it that so many peddle disaster, knowing at the same time that if they do, their lives will be ruined? Some people cannot help it, for pessimism usually comes from bodily disorders, and this cannot always be prevented. The stomach, for instance, is the most common cause of discontent, sour face, recklessness, disgust and lack of ambition. A bad stomach—there is the secret of many a failure. Anyone can have a good stomach, a strong stomach, a stomach that can take care of anything and everything that is put into it, no matter whether it is a very bad stomach now or not. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets do this very thing. One ingredient of these little tablets digests 3000 grains of food, and no matter how bad is your dyspepsia or indigestion, these tablets will digest everything in your stomach thoroughly and completely, and better and quicker than a healthy stomach can do the same thing. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will cure quickly loss of appetite, brash, irritation, burning sensations, nausea, heartburn, eructations, loss of vim and spirit, bad memory, and dyspepsia and indigestion in their very worst forms.

No other little tablets in the world can do so much. You should carry Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets around with you wherever you go and take them after meals. Then only will you realize what it is to enjoy a meal, and what perfect digestion means. Your whole body and your mind will feel the effects; your vim will increase, you will be more satisfied with what the world does, you will think happier and be happier and your face will be one of supreme contentment. That will bring you success and then more success. Your face will bring you dollars. Try it. It will cost you just 50c for a package of these wonderful Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, at any drug store on earth.

MAY DIE OF INJURIES.

Plasterer Run Over by an Engine—He Is Cared for at the County Hospital.

Patrick McGee, a plasterer living at No. 133 East Third street, was struck by a Southern Pacific engine, at Hancock street and Alhambra avenue, last night about 7:30 o'clock, and will probably die as the result of his injuries. Three ribs on the right side of his body were fractured, and his left arm was broken in two places. He also suffered internal injuries, and his head and body were badly lacerated.

From the officers it was learned that McGee was walking on the railroad track and as an inbound train approached he stepped on to the track in front of an outbound switch engine. The crew of the engine did not see him until it was too late.

When the engine struck him, it threw him about fifty feet. He laid on the roadbed unconscious for some time, and was removed to the County Hospital by the police ambulance. McGee's condition is critical.

YOUNG WOMAN LOSES MONEY.

A bold purse snatcher secured a large sum of money from Edna Haskett, of No. 532 Monte Vista street, on a Santa Barbara train yesterday. According to the report given out by the police, the young woman was standing on a rear platform when the train on Alameda street pulled out from the Commercial-street station. The thief rushed by her and snatched her pocketbook. She screamed and people from the car hurried to her assistance, but the man had leaped from the train and disappeared.

ANOTHER BOY BURGLAR.

James Forney, 18 years of age, yesterday confessed to the burglary of Morris Sofsky's second-hand store at No. 363½ East First street. The crime was committed on September 29. Forney was arrested, three days ago, by detectives. He stole a number of watches, clocks, and revolvers, most of which the officers have recovered. He is the seventh boy burglar captured by the local police within a period of a month. He is a Los Angeles product.

STRUCK AND ROBBED HIM.

S. G. Cook met a crowd of roughs in the northern part of the city last evening and became acquainted with them. He took them to eat in a restaurant on Alameda street and then bought a number of drinks for them. When the quartette became satisfied that Cook was not able to take care of his money, one of them knocked him down and relieved him of $3. This happened near the corner of Second and Alameda streets.

STOPPED BY REVOLVER.

E. Brewer fled from Officer Jack Walsh of the University substation, yesterday afternoon, at Chutes Park. Walsh was obliged to fire his revolver into the air to stop the man. Brewer was insulting women in the grand stand, according to the police. Brewer showed fight but was subdued and was later booked at the central station on a charge of disturbing the peace.

OPERATION KILLED HIM.

Henry H. Freytag, one of the victims of yesterday morning's street-car accident, died in the Sisters' Hospital last evening. Freytag had undergone amputation of both feet. He did not survive the shock following the operation. He had lived at No. 3117 Blanchard avenue. A widow and children survive him.

DEAD IN ENGLAND.

John K. Chalmers, business manager for Carl Leonardt, contractor, received notice last night of the death of his father's brother, Henry Chalmers, in London. Lewis Chalmers, father of John K. Chalmers, was for many years president of the Bank of Edinburgh, and was a pioneer of California, operating heavily in mines in Alpine county.

SAYS STOCK WILL RISE.

BOSTON, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] James J. Hill says that United States Steel common stock will sell at the price of preferred stock within the next year. There is now nearly eight million tons of steel ore ready for unfilled orders.

MRS. CRESSEY NEAR DEATH.

Mrs. Frederick J. Cressey, wife of Capt. Cressey, is lying at the point of death at the residence, No. 1644 Grammercy place. Mrs. Cressey is suffering from brain fever ,and her friends will be pained to learn that her condition is critical.

LOSES WATCH AND CASH.

Burglars took a gold watch and about $15 in cash from the room of J. L. Schooler at No. 728 Lawrence street, Friday night. The matter was reported to the police yesterday.

HAYNES HOME FROM EUROPE.

Dr. John R. Haynes returned yesterday from his tour of Europe.

OBITUARY.

Oscar Reuter.

DENVER, Oct. 13.—Oscar Reuter, attorney, for many years prominent in politics and business in this city died today in Paris, France. He was 58 years old.

Richard B. Borden.

FALL RIVER (Mass.) Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Richard B. Borden, one of the best-known cotton manufacturers in the country, treasurer of the Richard Borden and Troy mills, died here today after a long illness. Richard Borden graduated from Harvard and worked his way up from a clerkship in the mill offices.

INJURES THE SLOPE.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—A complaint has ben made to the Interstate Commerce Commission by the North Carolina Case Workers' Association, whose membership consists of firms engaged in the manufacture and sale of furniture, against many lines of railroad in the West and Northwest because of alleged unjust and discriminatory charges for the transportation of furniture, especially from High Point, N. C., and Danville, Va., to Pacific Coast points.

The complainants declare that the railroads charge them $1.70 per hundred pounds to carry furniture from the North Carolina territory to Pacific Coast points and insist upon a minimum carload weight of 20,000 pounds, whereas they claim to be able to put into a car only 12,000 pounds of furniture. They insist, therefore, that the rates are unreasonable and ask the commission to issue an order requiring the railroads to limit thirty-six feet carload lots of furniture to 12,000 pounds.

CHILEAN CABINET RESIGNS.

SANTIAGO (Chile) Oct. 13, 10:40 p.m.—The Chamber of Deputies has just voted against the government over the nomination of a member of the Council of State. This throws out President Montt's first ministry.

Don Pedro Montt was inaugurated President of Chile September 18, in succession to Jermain Riesco.

USED MAILS ILLEGALLY.

ST. PAUL (Minn.) Oct. 13.—Walter C. Cunningham, president of the American Land Company, was found guilty today in the District Court of using the mails to defraud by collecting fees from persons who placed land with him for sale.

Invest in the Shipping Industry

The recent organization of the Coastwise Steamship Company, with a capital stock of $250,000, marks the inauguration of a new industry in Southern California.

Capital invested in shipping returns larger dividends than may be obtained through other investments. The shipping industry made San Francisco what she was before the fire. The Coastwise Steamship Company has been organized by LOS ANGELES business men of the highest standing, and will be managed in the interests of LOS ANGELES and Southern California on a conservative business basis.

There is no promotion stock in this undertaking and it is not a stock jobbing scheme, but an industrial enterprise which will work to the great advantage of this entire community. It will make Los Angeles independent of San Francisco ship owners

An opportunity is afforded for the safe investment of funds in the stock of this Company, which will assure handsome returns. Every one, either with money to invest, or who have the best interests of Los Angeles and Southern California at heart, should learn the facts concerning the shipping situation on the Pacific Coast. Full particulars will be furnished upon application at the offices of the Company.

LODGING-HOUSE RAIDED.

In a raid on a negro lodging-house crap game, a squad of plain clothes men and uniformed patrolmen, under command of Sergeant Williams, arrested fifteen colored men, last evening. The house is at No. 222½ East Second street. The officers entered the place through doors and windows and caught a crap game in full blast. They confiscated money and dice and arrested two large patrol wagonloads of negroes.

Fortunes For All Who Invest Now

Greatest Electrical Discovery of the Age.

SAVES $9,711,655 A YEAR

Unusual Opportunity Now Offered the Man of Small Means to Become Independently Rich.

Every great electrical invention has made fortunes for its original stockholders. The American Bell Telephone Company has paid $200,000 for each $100 invested in its stock at its organization. People then laughed at the idea of there ever being a general need for the telephone. It was hard to make investors see the possibilities of the business. Those who did are among the world's richest people.

Such chances are not often offered the small investor. The first such opportunity in a great many years, that gives promise of duplicating the telephone in profits and universal demand is the Electric Signagraph and Semaphore.

Some of the best-known railroad experts in America declare these instruments will prevent railroad collisions. They give absolute privacy to party telephones, make it possible for a train to be stopped by the train dispatcher at any point on his division, and permit the sending of private telegrams to any one of 100 or more telegraph offices without the knowledge of other operators and without in any way interfering with the regular telegraph circuit.

RAILROAD ADOPTS SYSTEM.

No extra wires are required. The cost is so small and the advantages are so great that it is predicted by some of the best experts in America that all railroads will adopt the system. The Denver, Northwestern and Pacific has already ordered the Signagraph and Semaphore for its entire lines. The Independence Telephone Company Association has offered 25 cents a month rental for the Signagraph, to be used on party telephone lines. They have 7,000,000 telephones, most of them on party lines. One Signagraph is required for each telephone. Only 300,000 instruments will earn the stockholders of the Electric Signagraph and Semaphore Company $900,000 a year.

There are 200,000 miles of railroad in the United States, less than 10 per cent. of which is equipped with a signal service because of the inefficient systems heretofore used and their great cost. If only one-twentieth of this mileage—less than 5 per cent.—were equipped with the Signagraph and Semaphore the stockholders would earn $600,000 a year—85 per cent. on the present selling price of the stock in addition to the revenue offered by the telephone company.

50,000 LIVES LOST.

More than $9,000,00 were lost last year in property destroyed in railroad collisions, and 50,000 persons were killed or injured. This amount would cover the entire cost of the Signagraph and Semaphore system over every mile of railroad in the United States for two years and make the horrors of railroad collisions unknown.

Experts admit the necessity for these instruments. Farsighted investors are putting their money into the company.

Every statement made herein will be verified to the letter. A limited amount of the treasury stock is now for sale. No one will be asked to invest a cent until he has thoroughly satisfied himself of the merits of the proposition. All who can are urged to come and see these instruments in operation. Those who cannot and want to know the full details of the company, its organization, its patents, and what experts say of it should write at once for full particulars.

Stock is now rapidly selling at 35 cents a share, par value $1.00, fully paid, and non-assessable. The price will be advanced to 50 cents a share as soon as the present block of 50,000 shares is disposed of. The right is reserved to advance the price without notice. Those who care to take this stock before the price advances may send their remittances with the distinct understanding that the entire remittance will be returned at any time within ten days of the date of the order if they are not thoroughly satisfied with the proposition. In order to insure securing stock at the present price remittance should be sent at once with the above understanding. Payments are accepted in cash or installments of one-fourth down and one-fourth the first of each month until paid for. No subscription of less than 100 shares will be accepted. A discount of 5 per cent. will be allowed on all subscriptions accompanied by remittance in full. Address all inquiries to or call in person on National Mortgage and Bond Company, 524V First National Bank Building, Chicago.

THE CITY IN BRIEF

BREVITIES.

Madame Tully's parlors at Hotel Cumberland, 243 S. Olive street, are crowded daily by ladies who are well acquainted with this lady's reputation for positively removing wrinkles and all facial blemishes in one treatment. She is rightly considered America's Greatest Dermatologist. Madame Tully has been in Salt Lake since the fire, from which she fled, and is now on her return to California. It is not necessary to mention the merits of the Madame's work, as she is well known all over the country, where she has been engaged for twenty years in Dermatology. Deep wrinkles, smallpox pits, moles, birthmarks and scars permanently and scientifically eradicated by electricity. Superfluous hair removed with electric needle. Madame Tully guarantees all of her work and brings with her all of the latest inventions of Vibrators and all Facial Applicators. Toilet Preparations, etc. Ladies are invited to call. Address all mail, Parlors Hotel Cumberland, 243 South Olive street. Madame Tully will give a full course of instruction for professional use. The Madame has private apartments for patients while under treatment.

Los Angeles county has the lowest tax rate in the State. Also has the lowest valuation for assessment purposes of any county. Does not pay $1 taxes into State Treasury more than she should in proportion to other counties. The "machine boosters" (including a portion of the Federal Brigade) are busy making misstatements to prejudice the voters against Ben E. Ward, Independent candidate for County Assessor. Don't forget: "Every knock is a boost." Phunny how solicitous these interests get in the public welfare just a few days before election, every four years. Vote for Ben E. Ward. Why not?

No lady runs any risk whatever by order work made by Mrs. Kruseman, milliner, 1302 Pico, corner Rich, as through long European experience she is so sure of her work that she fully guarantees perfect satisfaction. Not having the high expenses, Mrs. Kruseman can be, and is, always reasonable, charging only according to materials used and work done. Mrs. Kruseman gives retrimming the same careful attention. Highest references.

The Bon Marche—a new department store organization, which is to be conducted along coöperative lines—is offering a limited allotment of shares for popular subscription. A complete plan of the proposition may be had by calling at the office of the company—or will be mailed upon request. Le Sage Bros. Company, temporary office, 320 Laughlin building.

Hardwood floors—I put down plain and ornamental floors, renovate old floors, make them like new; do the best work in the city. Have us do the work while on your vacation. Our men are careful and trustworthy; first-class work at reasonable prices. Coöperative Hardwood Floor Co., 215 Mercantile place. Home 4297. Main 5183.

Furs—The largest and most complete stock of fur novelties in the city. You may now secure your winter furs by paying a small deposit—getting the pick, and also you'll be protected from the advance price. This is the only exclusive fur store in this city. Furs made to order. D. Bonoff, furrier, 212 South Broadway. Home 3496.

Why pay $3 to $5 for eyeglasses and spectacles when we sell the best A1 crystal reading lens in a ten-year gold-filled frame for $1.50, fitted to your eyes without extra charge by a graduate State-registered optometrist. Satisfaction guaranteed. Clark's, 351 S. Spring, opposite new Hellman Bldg.

The "Ville" will offer tomorrow smart street hats at $5 which will be far in advance of the usual headwear shown at such a small figure. Even in these popular priced goods there are manifest touches of that individuality in millinery that has so characterized "Ville" hats this season.

Reichenbach's Electric Floor Polisher, the best thing for polishing hardwood floors. Phone about it. We would be glad to estimate with you. Home 7441. Main 2431. We also repair, upholster and polish furniture. Some choice antiques in furniture for sale at shop. 747 S. Spring st.

Labory & Welen, French milliners, are exhibiting a new line of turbans this week. In connection with the millinery department is a modern manicuring, shampooing and hair dressing parlor, in charge of Miss Selfke, the well-known facial massage and hair dyeing specialist.

Ladies, have you called on Miss Moore, the exclusive parlor milliner, since her return from New York? She has an elegant stock of both dress and street hats, including pattern hats and Parisian novelties. Address 533-5 Mason building, corner Fourth and Broadway.

J. W. Frey has moved his stock of mantels, grates, tiles and andirons to his warerooms at corner of Los Angeles and Twelfth streets, where can be seen the largest assortment of black and brass fireplace trimmings to be found in the United States at lowest prices.

DEATH OF FATHER HEALY.

Prefect of Studies of St. Vincent's College Passes Away at Age of Thirty-three.

Rev. Father Healy, prefect of studies in St. Vincent's College, died at the Sisters' Hospital last night, at the age of 33 years. He was a native of New Orleans, and came to this city in 1894, and had been connected with St. Vincent's in some capacity ever since.

He was a bright and affable young man of fine education, but had been affected with tuberculosis for a long time. His condition only became serious within a few days, and he visited the college ten days ago. The funeral will be held at St. Vincent's Church on Tuesday morning at 9:30. Bishop Conaty officiating. Interment at New Calvary Cemetery.

SWEDISH NATIONAL FESTIVAL.

Swedish residents of the city are arranging for a great national festival and bazaar, to be given for the benefit of the Swedish Lutheran Church at Elks' Hall. It will open on the night of November 1 and continue for five nights. More than 100 men and women will appear in native Swedish costume, and many tableaux will be given depicting familiar Swedish scenes; booths will be decorated to represent the different provinces in Sweden. One of the tableaux to be given on the opening night will represent a wedding of the seventeenth century, and an entertaining programme will be produced each evening.

MRS. ZIMMER ILL.

Mrs. N. W. Zimmer, wife of Supt. Zimmer of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, lies at the point of death in Troy, N. Y. A combination of lung and heart trouble has placed her in a critical condition. In passing over the altitudes of the Rocky Mountains en route, Mrs. Zimmer suffered a collapse, from which it is feared she will never recover. Relatives attend at her bedside and her husband will leave this city shortly. Mrs. Zimmer has always assisted her husband in S.P.C.A. work, and was greatly interested in the welfare of dumb animals.

Obituary.

LOS ANGELES, Cal.,
Oct. 14, 1906,
404 Custer Avenue.

In memory of Mrs. Mary Pierce Daniel, who died June 22nd last. Born October 14, 1840, in Pennsylvania. This is her 66th birthday. When 12 years old her father, Moses Pierce, removed to De Kalb county, Ill., near Belvidere, Boone county, where we were married May 14, 1864, and started to California soon thereafter. On account of Indian troubles we only went to Denver, Colo., where we lived many years. Two children were born to us, a girl and a boy. The boy has made his home with us. The girl is married and is Mrs. J. W. Lyall of this city.

We were sixty-four days on the plains. She kept a journal of daily occurrences, which was very interesting, as we had many narrow escapes from death or worse from Indians. The journal and many of her compositions have been lost or destroyed during her last illness. She was a sufferer from rheumatism for nearly two years. She had nearly recovered when other complications caused her death.

She was a loving wife, companion, friend and partner of Jacob Daniel. She was also a Christian mother and friend to all who knew her, and was called by many children, "Grandma Daniel," which is the only mark on her grave, except vases of fresh flowers, which we hope to keep fresh as long as we live. We hope she is happy over there and nearer my God, to Thee.

We wish to thank all the friends who assisted at her funeral, and especially Misses Irene Knowlton and Anita Davis, who kindly sang "Nearer, My God, to Thee."

Denver, Colo.; Traer, Iowa; Waterloo, Iowa; Lake Charles, La., and Belvidere (Ill.) papers please copy, and oblige.

JACOB DANIEL.

PENTALPHA LODGE, No. 202, F. and A. M., will meet on Sunday, the 14th October, 1906, at 2 o'clock p.m., to attend the funeral of Bro. Charles Jackson.

By order of the W.M.

W. W. ROBINSON, Secretary.

Attention, Stanton Relief Corps.

Members are requested to attend the funeral of Mrs. Sanborn at Pierce Bros.' chapel, 810 S. Flower st., at 2 p.m., Monday.

GENEVRA B. ALGIE, President.

New Autumn Garments

OUR Autumn Stock of Suits and Coats is now at its best. It embraces the very newest up-to-the-minute Models. Our New York buyer sends us the very latest things. In many instances we are able to show garments as soon as they are shown on 5th Avenue, New York. A visit to the Unique is like a stroll down 5th Avenue.

In the better garments each is exclusive, only one of a kind.

The colors this fall are very effective—mahogany, golden brown, dahlia, London smoke, green, navy and goblin, etc. The new shadow plaids and mannish stripes and checks are also very effective. Perhaps the swellest models are the long coats---then come the jaunty etons, and French blouses.

Half fitting box coat suits in good new stripes and mixtures---marked from $25 to $40.

The new eton effects in plain colors and dark plaids, $35 to $65.

Tight fitting coat ideas in all new fall shades and checks---$27.50 to $45.

French blouses---models all exclusive---$35 to $50.

New line of evening gowns---crepes and pastel shades, $40 to $60.

The Coats

A fine array of the new coat styles is on display. Take especially the auto coat, and we are fortunate enough to have some of the swellest and smartest models on the coast this season. Some original ideas in plaids, stripes and plain effects.

Silk rubber auto coats in plain and plaid effects, too, as well as a full showing of plaid auto and street coats, in effective color combinations---$15.00 to $75.00.

The Farrand-Cecilian is a high-grade upright piano with a brilliant, clear, sweet tone, and with the mechanism of the Cecilian Piano Player built inside the case.

You can play this piano with the fingers, just the same as you would an ordinary piano, or you can play it with the mechanism of the Cecilian Player Player, which is built into it, so it is equally available for the wife and daughter, who have spent years of patient study and practice in learning how to play the piano, and for the man who doesn't know a blessed thing about music.

Wouldn't such a piano—a piano that all in the family could play—be used far more than the piano you have now?

Come in and see it anyhow. We'll be glad to show it to you and glad to have you try it. You can buy on very easy terms and we'll take your old piano in exchange if you have one.

Gentlemen: It goes without saying that, when I arrived in New York, in November, 1888, I encountered the world-renowned Steinway piano with expectations strained to the highest pitch. I gladly confess that my demands yere not only completely fulfilled, but far surpassed.

C'est le ton qui fait la musique, and I may add—the piano. Your grand piano is distinguished by its rare beauty of tone quality; sensitive, clear as a bell, and far carrying in the treble; in the middle octaves bright and singing like a genuine Stradivarius.

The touch is simply unsurpassable for the delivery of all kinds of double notes, is equally and specially adapted to forte and piano, in diminuendo and in repetition.

Gold Teeth or Bridge Work

This method does away with plates, and while more expensive is certainly much more satisfactory. You can bite and masticate with these teeth just as you could with natural teeth. We do so much of this work and save more time by the Schiffman Method that we are enabled to save you about 25 per cent. In delicate work like this, where practice is such an element in success, does it not seem reasonable to suppose that a dentist of natural ability, wide experience and unusual practice, can do better work and cheaper than others of less experience and small practice, even if they have the same natural ability? Reason answers for us.

MILLIONS OFFERED FOR A RANCH; WHOSE WAY DOES OWNER BLOCK?

Richard O'Neal Declares That He'll Never Part With the Broad Acres of Santa Margarita, Huntington Says He Isn't Trying to Purchase, San Diego Man Talks of Trolley Right of Way.

NINETY MILES SOUTH of Los Angeles, between this city and San Diego, lies a single ranch that is an undeveloped empire. It has thirty miles of sea front, and occupies the natural path of an electric railroad that might be built between the two cities. Corporations have taken up large holdings adjoining, and somebody is trying to buy this immense ranch. The owner declines to part with it. The subject involves great possibilities and interesting questions. Mr. Huntington says he is not trying to buy this big ranch. Somebody is after it for a right of way for an electric railroad.

Like an O'Neill of centuries ago who held sway over the Emerald Isle and balked at English invasion, Richard O'Neal, known as the "Ancient Baron" of the great Santa Margarita ranch, gazes contentedly at the rugged peaks of the blue Santa Rosas and refuses millions of dollars for his holdings.

Someone who lives a decade in the future, who realizes the possibilities for development in the broad valleys and rolling mesa land of this ranch, and who believes coast frontage in Southern California to be better than a gold mine, has offered Richard O'Neal $3,000,000.

"This is my Ireland. I am 84 years old. I shall die here and never until I am gone will this ranch be sold. Millions? Huh! Were they stacked upon this porch in front of me, the glint of the sea would hold my gaze, and my eyes would not wander from the misty veil that drapes itself over yonder mountains." Such is the answer of Richard O'Neal.

"The Santa Margarita ranch blocks the development of San Diego county. H. E. Huntington cannot get right of way across it to build his electric line from Santa Ana on to San Diego. O'Neal has been offered $5,000,000 for the ranch but refuses to sell at any price. His stubborness is a blockade against the Los Angeles capital that through investment has been bringing new life and hope to San Diego." Thus spoke Edward Fletcher to a Times reporter. Fletcher is a director of the San Diego Chamber of Commerce, who represented H. E. Huntington in his purchase of water rights along the San Luis Rey River.

WHAT HUNTINGTON SAYS.

"I know nothing about an offer for the Santa Margarita ranch. I know there is such a ranch, but I am not trying to purchase it. I will not say that I am not going to build an electric line to San Diego, for I may do so, but not for several years. The water rights of the San Luis Rey River were bought by the Pacific Light and Power Company and we intend to put up a power plant to furnish power for Los Angeles. I deny the statement that I have sold out my interests in the Pacific Light and Power Company. I have not sold a share of stock—in fact you may say that I have bought additional shares of stock in that company in the last few days. I have no connection with the South Coast Land Company or the Del Mar venture. While it is true that Mr. Kerckhoff has been buying up ocean frontage there, I disclaim that he is representing me. He may have been connected with the offer for the Santa Margarita ranch, but I know nothing about it."

These statements were made by H. E. Huntington to a Times reporter night before last.

"I know nothing about the Santa Margarita ranch," said W. G. Kerckhoff yesterday. "I am interested in Del Mar and in the San Luis Rey River, but I do not wish to discuss the matter of an electric line to San Diego, for I know nothing about it."

Who is it that has run against a Tartar in Richard O'Neal?

Stretches Into Three Counties.

The Santa Margarita y las Flores Rancho extends from El Toro, on the Santa Fé railroad, to the San Luis Rey River near Oceanside. It has twenty-three miles of ocean frontage and reaches inland to Fallbrook, Murietta, Temecula and almost to Elsinore. Of more than 225,000 acres, it stretches into three counties—Orange, Riverside and San Diego—and has 133,000 acres in the latter. The San Elijo, Santa Margarita and San Onofre rivers find their sources in this domain, and wind down to the sea through fertile valleys. The outlets of these rivers form picturesque resort sites, with little inland bays and navigable channels that would be ideal for another Naples or Venice. Grazing over the rolling foothills are thousands of cattle. Six combined harvesters are still sacking grain for shipment. Yet the ranch is hardly touched, and in all its square miles there is not a town or hamlet.

CORPORATION HOLDINGS NEAR.

A corporation, said to be backed by H. E. Huntington, has gained control of practically all the ocean front from Oceanside through Carlsbad, Leucadia and Del Mar, and were this same corporation to purchase the Santa Margarita ranch, it would control the sea coast from above San Juan Capistrano down toward San Diego for a distance of sixty miles. Indications are that big holdings have been quietly taken up for small figures along this section of Southern California seacoast and that a giant scheme has been blocked by a son of Ireland who loves the quiet life better than riches and fine raiment.

From Oceanside a spur track of the Santa Fé Railroad runs up the Santa Margarita Valley to the quaint little town of Fallbrook. Ten miles up on the east bank of the river is a rough platform and sidetrack known as Ranch House Station. Once a day a worn, brown canvas bag is dropped on that platform and an amber-skinned Chinaman ambles down to get it.

Tucked up against the hillside about a quarter of a mile away is the oldest ranch-house in Southern California, the castle of Richard O'Neal, and the headquarters of the great property. It is difficult to say which is more interesting, the old adobe structure, with its walls three feet thick, and hand-hewn bars across the windows, or the owner, ripe in years, gruff in speech, but with the merry twinkle of his race sparkling in his eyes.

It has been said that reporters never return from this house, and that such a thing as a camera in the hands of a visitor means instant transportation elsewhere, but two representatives of The Times met with good treatment. Preceded by the non-committal "yellow angel" they trudged up the straw-strewn road, winding beneath giant sycamore trees, through big corrals filled with cattle, past the stone buttress upon which the forward portion of the house rests, to wide flagging that leads to the entrance. The steps arched over with vines and with an old copper bell hanging above the last land-

Richard O'Neal, owner of Santa Margarita Rancho, with his little grandson in his arms, and home scenes in his domain. The two young men on horseback are his sons, and the old man on the white horse is the "Major domo." The old adobe house has three-foot walls, barred windows, a large patio, and a beautiful main doorway, as shown in the picture.

OWENS RIVER IN A NOVEL.

And Fred Eaton, so 'Tis Said, to Be the Villain of a Tragic Story.

Mary Austin, the versatile author of "Ysidro," has undertaken a tragic story on the water question—according to the latest literary gossip—and proposes to introduce novel features in the figurative illustration of her narrative.

Among these is the villain, who, it is said, will be quite recognizable as our good-natured, highly unvillainous friend, ex-Mayor Fred Eaton.

Miss Austin has lived for some time in the Owens River country, and it is hinted that she owns property there. Her coming story will depict the simple life of the natives and their cruel wronging by the maliciously wicked city engineer.

"Ysidro" was written in the ranch-house that Mr. Eaton now owns, and occupies when he is in the north country.

He came down from there several weeks ago, and is at present at the Angelus Hotel.

TAKE TO HILLS IN A SCARE.

Deluded Los Angeles Molokane Will Move Tomorrow for Fear of Quake.

There will be an exodus of the Molokane from Los Angeles tomorrow. The 2000 or more colonists will begin their trek from the city early in the morning. They will take to the hills.

Two days they have fasted, sitting in sackcloth and ashes around their humble homes. No food has touched their lips since Friday morning. They fear the destruction of Los Angeles by earthquake.

This morning will begin the weirdest service ever held in this city. Weeping and wailing, the Molokane will prostrate themselves, beseeching God's protection, and asking forgiveness for their sins.

With their loins girded, their bundles packed, and as much of their household goods as they can conveniently carry, the Russians will march without the city gates, and will await the expected destruction.

Should the foolish prophecy of their leaders come true, and Los Angeles be shaken, they would continue their journey to another country, to which they believe a divine power will guide them.

Simple, credulous and trustful, the people have placed entire confidence in the men who have foretold the dire disaster. They believe it must come because their priests have declared the danger imminent.

Without question they have accepted the words of a fanatical crank who has for the past week been exciting them with outlandish antics.

Nightly services have been held, and the worshipers have worked themselves into throes of excitement which has culminated in their determination to leave the city.

Despite the efforts of others to counteract the influence of the fanatics, who are playing upon the superstitions of the ignorant Molokane, the belief in the prophecies of the strangely garbed priests is gaining among the colonists, and, almost to a man, it is said, they are determined to go.

Unreasoning, blind belief in their leaders is said to be responsible for their sudden plan to move. Doubts are expressed as to the number which will really begin the trek when the hour arrives. Never has there been such excitement among the Caucasians as has been aroused by this latest religious wave.

That they will return as soon as the sun sets on Monday, provided there is no seismic disturbance, is admitted by those in close touch with the leaders.

MUNICIPAL SCHEMES EATING TAXPAYERS.

Fearful Burdens Imposed by Faddists on the British Public.

Some of the Socialistic Cities of England Are Now so Heavily Burdened That They Can't Get Out of Debt for Centuries—Scandalous Frauds Grow Out of the System—How Voters Have Been Deceived.

BY S. FRED HOGUE.

[STAFF CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Sept. 19.—"Rake's progress" is the term that A. M. Torrance, Member of Parliament from Glasgow, recently applied to the advance the British cities are making in municipal trading. The expression has caught the ear of conservative taxpayers in England and Scotland and it is causing the Socialist-labor union agitators no end of trouble.

A close scrutiny of the balance sheets of the municipal trading cities fully justifies the opinion voiced by Mr. Torrence. The policy pursued by these cities in their municipal ownership operations, if attempted in California, would very likely lead to an increase in our convict labor force at San Quentin.

I have gone over a list of one hundred cities that operate gas plants, electric light plants or tramways, in some instances all three. I have failed to find a single instance in which one of these plants is owned by the city free of indebtedness, although some of them have been in possession of the municipalities for more than sixty years.

Pronounced advocates of municipal ownership have responded to my questions about the ultimate ownership by saying: "That doesn't really concern us. The next generation will reap proportionate benefits; let them pay their share of the cost." Their professed policy is that the municipalities shall not use their money to pay for these plants but to embark in other municipal ownership schemes, until the cities shall ultimately own all the means of production. The question of payment they decline to discuss seriously.

To an American citizen this attitude is difficult to understand. I devoted many days to study and research before I found a clue to the mystery.

THE TAXATION SYSTEM.

The land on which a British municipality is builded does not belong to the taxpayers but to the great landed estates. On a vacant lot there is no city tax. The tax on a building is paid by the renter and not by the owner, and a citizen's tax is regulated in accordance with the rent that he pays.

Ninety five per cent. of the land on which the city of London is builded belongs to a few wealthy land owners. The same is true to a great extent of practically every city in the United Kingdom. The middle classes and the working classes of Great Britain are all renters and the result is that they have not the interest in building for the future that animates the same classes in American municipalities. Fifty years ago England builded better. Now the renters control the municipal government, and the House of Commons as well. Under their rule the municipalities are leading a hand-to-mouth existence, mortgaging the future to an alarming extent under the delusion that they are getting something for nothing.

This policy is made easy by the peculiar laws of Great Britain in regard to the repayment of municipal debts. The more I study the laws of England the more I am filled with an admiration for the wisdom and the prudence of the framers of our national Constitution.

Our State law requires that when Los Angeles borrows money on bonds it must repay the loans, principal and interest, in a stated number of equal annual installments, a stipulated payment being made each year.

BRITAIN'S BONDING SYSTEM.

A British municipality issues bonds for twenty, forth, sixty or eighty years. There are no annual payments; the city is expected to repay principal and interest in a lump sum at the end of that stated period.

Parliament requires that a city shall set aside interest and sinking fund each year sufficient to redeem the bonds when they mature. But the act contains the remarkable qualification that a city may invest this interest and sinking fund in other enterprises.

The result of this is that when the bonds mature the city has the interest and sinking fund tied up in a number of ventures; in many cases these have proved financial failures and the money is squandered. Then the municipality issues other bonds to redeem the ones falling due.

This reinvestment is not SOMETIMES made but ALWAYS made. I have failed to find a single city that has not followed this plan, with the result that the debt of British municipalities is simply appalling.

I have prepared the following table to illustrate how the plan works. The cities named are English. They are taken in toto from a list published in the "Municipal Journal," a rabid municipal ownership paper of the same class as the "Appeal to Reason."

They were held up as beacons of light to guide other cities in municipal trading:

*Recent venture; figures not obtainable.

These figures do not tell the entire story. The column designated "Loans Raised" represents the debt created of which some part was outstanding in 1905. Loans canceled before that date do not appear. As some of the undertakings have been running more than sixty years a number of loans must have been redeemed. All the other figures are taken from "The Stock Exchange Official Intelligence" for 1906 and are to March 31, 1905. The debt named is for municipal trading only. All the cities have additional bonded indebtedness for other purposes.

To be absolutely accurate I have used in this table the English pound sterling. Multiplying the amounts by five will give roughly the equivalent in American dollars.

LOADED DOWN FOR CENTURIES.

The estimates on some of the undertakings started within the last eight or ten years indicate that they will be paid for within a generation, while the date of ultimate ownership of the older enterprises is reckoned by centuries.

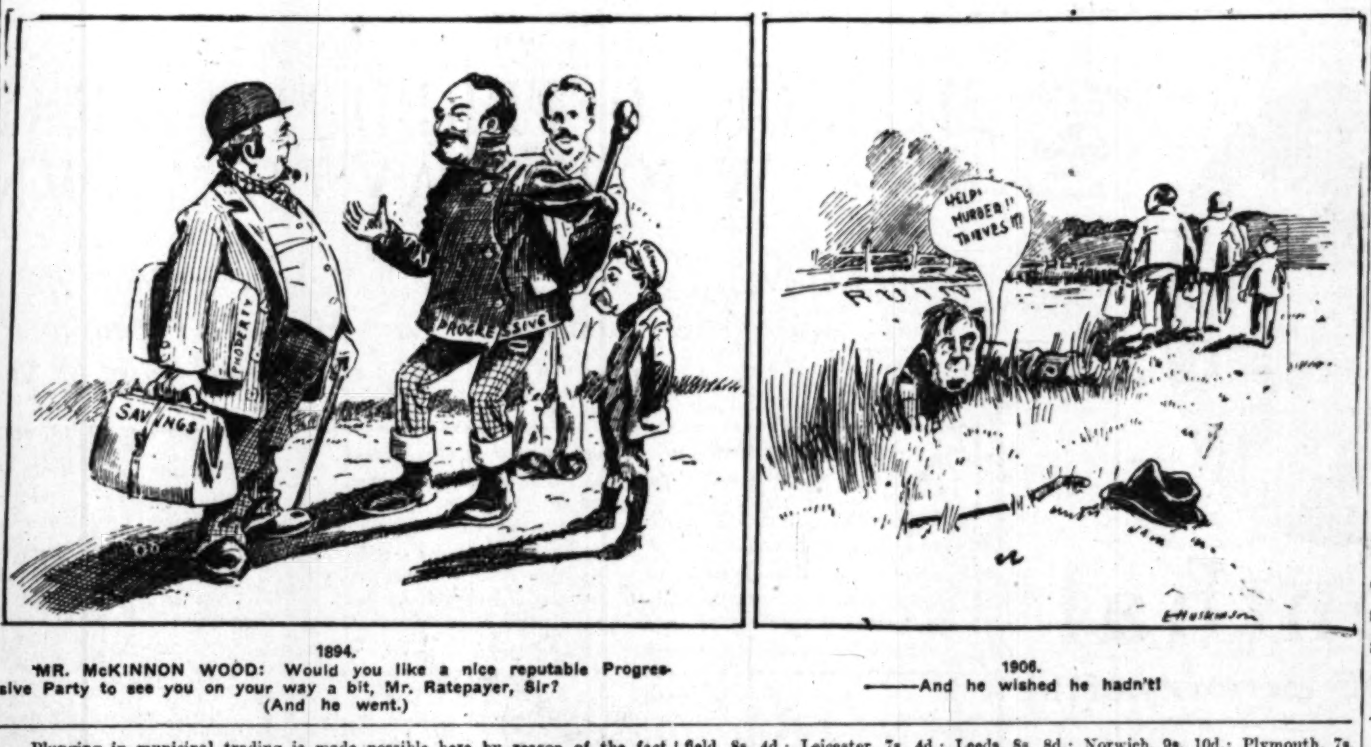
The reason for this apparent discrepancy is that none of the bonds for the newer enterprises have yet matured so there have been no second loans. The dates named are the ones when the present issues mature, but in no instance is the proportionate amount of money in the treasury to redeem them.

I have also credited each municipality with the amount of money supposed to be in the sinking fund, whereas this money is not in any fund but is invested in other enterprises and in many instances squandered.

The experience which Los Angeles has had during the last three years with its sinking fund for bond redemption is a good illustration of what happens under the wider powers of the British municipalities.

FALLEN AMONGST . . . . MUNICIPAL FADDISTS.

A cartoon from the London Argus.



1894.
MR. McKINNON WOOD: Would you like a nice reputable Progressive Party to see you on your way a bit, Mr. Ratepayer, Sir?
(And he went.)

1906.
——And he wished he hadn't!

Plunging in municipal trading is made possible here by reason of the fact that there is no limit set on the indebtedness that a city may incur. In Los Angeles the limit is $5,000,000, exclusive of water and sewers, and the State limitation for all purposes is fifteen per cent. of the assessed valuation. In Great Britain a city may borrow just as long as there is any one to lend.

BONDS AT A DISCOUNT.

This has gone on until municipal bonds are now issued at heavy discounts. There is no requirement here as in California that bonds must be sold for par and accrued interest.

The London County Council recently sold an issue of municipal bonds, whose face value was £5,000,000 for £4,500,000 cash, a discount of $2,500,00. Some of the County Council's municipal trading ventures have since become so wobbly that these bonds are quoted at a considerable discount below this selling price.

When the Council desired to place another issue of £5,000,000 this year the Bank of England advised the Finance Committee not to attempt it as it would be practically impossible to market them even at a great discount.

During the last six years the County Council has made a practice of borrowing £5,000,000 a year for municipal trading ventures. The city's indebtedness for these ventures alone at the present time is £48,000,000.

A glance at the table which accompanies this article will show that London's municipal trading indebtedness, population considered, is no greater than that of the average municipal trading city.

TAXES FIERCE.

And how has this result affected the tax rates of the municipal trading cities?

Contrary to the expectations of the Socialist-labor union prophets, it has increased the taxes on an average of twenty five per cent. in the last ten years. This is the feature of municipal trading that has caused the present reactionary movement.

English cities fell into the slough of municipal ownership while following the lure of a promised lower tax rate. But the tax rates have grown higher instead. The more they have struggled to escape these high rates the deeper they have become imbedded in the trading bog.

The statistical reports issued by the Imperial Board of Trade, the English equivalent to our Department of Commerce and Labor, show that the indebtedness of the English public trading cities is about five times that of the average American municipality.

They further show that the middle and working classes pay at least three times the amount of local tax that is paid by these classes in America.

And all the local taxes have increased at least twenty-five per cent. since the cities started to follow the Socialistic lure of municipal trading.

JOHN BURNS'S FALLACY.

Bernard Shaw and John Burns assert that the rates would have increased regardless of municipal trading; that the increase has been occasioned by the wider range of duties of the municipalities. A comparison of the rates of English and American cities for a number of years effectually disposes of this fallacious argument. The resident of an English city enjoys the advantages of cleaned and lighted streets, a sewer system, removal of garbage, police protection and free schools in return for his taxes. An American city supplies the same. But in America it is not necessary to make the tax rate higher each year than it was the last in order to provide the recognized necessities.

Many English municipalities go farther. They provide public baths, but they charge enough for their use to make them supposedly self-supporting. They build public lavatories in the streets—but the doors are locked and one must pay an entrance fee to use them. They erect workingmen's homes, claiming to clear away the slums—and the rents they charge are so high that the people who lived in the slum tenements cannot use them; they are crowded back upon another street, forming a new slum, while the municipal buildings are occupied by a class that could afford to pay for decent lodgings elsewhere.

The baths and workingmen's housing schemes bring the municipalities in competition with private capital. When the baths are finished the city must charge less for their use than is charged by private companies, otherwise there would be no excuse for their existence. An axiom as thoroughly established here as in America is that a city cannot conduct a business as cheaply as can private capital. The invariable result of the public bath system is that the city loses money every year—money that must be made up out of the rates.

But that cannot be done directly; the already overburdened rate payers would raise too great a clamor. Here is where the accountants get in their work. Enough of the cost of the baths is charged against some other fund, one that is supported directly by the rates, to make the baths apparently self-supporting.

ANOTHER FRAUD.

With the model tenements the same system is followed. The city must rent them for enough to pay expenses—the rate payers will not advance one penny toward them knowingly—and at the same time the rents must be at least as low as that charged by private landlords. Manifestly this is impossible. Again the imposition is practiced on the rate payer of assessing enough of the cost of this municipal housing against another fund to make the houses apparently self-supporting.

The same principle obtains in the management and operation of gas plants, electric light plants and tramways. The rate payers demand service as cheap as that of the private companies, and that the enterprises shall be self-supporting. More manipulation of accounts results.

This juggling of municipal accounts has become a public scandal. A committee appointed by Parliament to investigate some of the transactions in municipal trading reported back that before it could make progress the present system of auditing would have to be abolished. The committee recommended that a system be established by which the accounts of municipality should be finally audited not by an elective official of the city but by an auditor brought from another part of the kingdom.

This recommendation pierced the very core of the political cancer of English mismanagement, both of municipal and national government. The Liberal party remains in power by reason of the support it receives from the Socialist-labor union ring that dominates English municipal politics. In return for this support the Liberals are pledged to protect the ring in their municipal ownership grafts.

THE SCANDAL GROWING.

For three years the Liberal party has fought against carrying out this recommendation for a new system of audit. For three years the scandal of the present system has been growing. This protection afforded by the Liberals has been taken by many members of the ring for license to rob municipalities of their cash outright and to cover the theft by further manipulation of accounts, confident that the thefts will never be detected.

Accompanying this article is a cartoon from the London Argus. It illustrates the admiration which the public feels for the Socialist-labor union ring and their municipal trading plans.

IN ONE BOROUGH.

By way of practical illustration of the local tax rate I shall take the borough of Poplar, England. It has a population of 168,000, the borough government is under the control of the Socialist and union labor agitators and it has probably embarked in as many municipal trading enterprises as any borough in Great Britain.

The current municipal rate for Poplar is 12 shillings on the pound of rental value. It amounts to this:

A workman rents a house for say $20 a month. This means $240 a year rental. The tax he must pay to the city for the year is just three-fifths of this sum or $144. In addition to this sum he must pay an imperial tax of one shilling on each twenty shillings that he earns. And he owns nothing. If he rents a place of business he must pay the same rate on that.

I have used the borough of Poplar by way of illustration for the reason that it is referred to by the Socialist press as the paradise of municipal trading. The rates are considerably higher than those in the cities that trade less; but I studied the tax rate of fifty large municipal trading cities in Great Britain and I have failed to find one in which the tax rate on the middle and working classes is not twice that of Los Angeles. I refer to the taxes that go for the support of the municipality only. The Imperial taxes are not included.

I found one poor little Socialist infected borough that is struggling along under a local tax of twenty shillings and six pence on the pound, there the taxes are higher than the rents. This is made possible by reason of the fact that in English tax rates, like California poker, the ceiling is the limit.

Here are the tax rates in a few of the larger municipalities in Great Britain where the municipal ownership lure is working: Birkenhead, 6s. 4d.; Blackpool, 5s. 6d.; Bristol, 7s. 10d.; East Ham, 10s. 4d.; Halifax, 8s. 10d.; Huddersfield, 8s. 4d.; Leicester, 7s. 4d.; Leeds, 8s. 8d.; Norwich, 9s. 10d.; Plymouth, 7s. 8d.; Southampton, 8s. 7d.; Swansea, 8s. 8d.; West Ham, 10s. 8d.

These are the rates in shillings and pence that a renter must pay to the city on each pound that he pays in rent to his landlord.

In this letter I have outlined only a few of the conditions as they actually exist in the country that our pink-tea reformers have told us is fifty years in advance of us in municipal government.

There were 30,000 letters delivered by special carrier last month, an increase of 10 per cent. over the preceding month, August, and of 50 per cent. over the sales of August, 1905. An increase is noted for October, and it will reach at least 5 per cent.

Postmaster M. H. Flint has made a thorough investigation and study of the methods in use in the postoffices in the principal cities in the East, and out of these, together with his own ideas as to the betterment of the service, has evolved a system that is as near perfection as anything can be that is not an exact science. In this new and original plan the principal features are the "card system," the "directory of cities," the "five-minute system" and the employment of a chief clerk for the special delivery department. These improvements have not yet been adopted by any other postoffice in the United States, but it is likely that the officials will learn wisdom from Los Angeles and adopt them later on. Heretofore there was no foreman for the general delivery and the postage due station. In order to run out his new plan, Mr. Flint made application for such appointments, and they were made.

A PERFECT SYSTEM.

The system is so perfected that of the 500,000 letters received daily during September, there were only about fifty complaints daily. Of the 1500 complaints during the month, all of the letters were found except three. Of the 15,000,000 letters, only three of them went wrong. Most of these complaints, however, were from those who knew that "something was surely wrong" because they did not get a a letter, and from women who had changed their names two or three times, or had forgotten to give their addresses.

Postmaster Flint has adopted the "five-minute" system in his new plan, and under its workings the 10,000 letters received daily at the general delivery are cased and ready for the caller within five minutes from the time the mail is landed in the postoffice. The same rapid-transit system is applied to the private boxes. Mails are coming and going at all hours, and as soon as a bunch arrives it is attacked by three expert "throwers," who distribute the letters into heaps, arranged alphabetically. There are as many heaps as there are letters in the alphabet. The clerk on duty at each of the delivery windows makes a rush every few minutes and gets what is coming to his window, and immediately boxes the letters.

The card system invented by Mr. Flint provides for a card for every caller at the general delivery. On this card the caller's name is written, and when he takes out a letter it is noted, and also the day and hour. This serves as a tracer. If a man takes out a letter that does not belong to him, and the owner, who has a similar name, calls for a letter, the man who has taken it out is traced by this card. He is questioned when he calls again, or, if he does not call, he is looked for and brought in.

There are 40,000 of these cards on file at the general delivery on an average. Each card is changed as a person changes his address, or leaves the city. The cards are kept on file for two years, so as to give ample time for tracing missing letters. Six hundred of these cards were issued daily during September, which partly indicates the travel to this city, even in a dull month. This system is not in vogue anywhere else in the world.

About five hundred cards were written daily during September, to persons who had misdirected their letters, and about half that number of letters were received from persons who directed their letters to the correct street and number, but to the wrong city. This makes extra work for the directory men.

DIRECTORY MEN BUSY.

This directory is Mr. Flint's idea, and the system works admirably. The cities and towns of the United States are arranged alphabetically. Few cities have a San Pedro street, for instance, and, if a man is not located here, the letter is sent to San José, or one of the other cities with a street of that name. As the directory also shows at what number such street begins, this simplifies the matter by showing that there is no such number in that street in San José, and the letter is sent to the town that has that number. Such misdirected letters are sent under cover to the postmasters in the cities where they belong.

During last month about 12,000 letters were received upon which there was no return address, and remained uncalled for. These were sent to the dead letter office. Forty-six clerks are employed in handling misdirected letters, tracing the persons to whom they should go, and supplying the proper address. So complete is this system that a misdirected letter passes through the hands of seven different searchers, when the man is finally found. There is a directory for every letter in the alphabet, with a blank page opposite each page of names. Opposite the name the correct address is written when the person has been located. This is also part of Mr. Flint's new system, and his own idea.

NEED GOOD MEMORY.

Another part of this system is a monthly catechizing of the letter distributors, who, of course, are selected with a special view to their rapidity of work and good momery. This faculty must be developed to its highest tension, just short of not remembering everything. If the man falls below 99 per cent. he is requested to sharpen his memory. He must know nearly everybody who is anybody, and his business; that is, his public business. Distributors handle letters for the 192 carriers, and must know in which carrier's box to throw a letter. If the distributor throws it in the wrong box, that carrier has extra freight, the letter is delayed in delivery, and there is complaint from the man to whom it is bears the echo of it. The distributor bears the echo of it. The

What the distributor does not know, the carrier does know, or if not, he finds out. He keeps track of every person in his district, his business and movements, and soon learns his face as that of an old acquaintance.

CITY IN "BLOCKS."

Another unique method in Postmaster Flint's rapid transit is the "block." The city is mapped in blocks according to population, and each carrier is assigned to a block. Heretofore the city was mapped mainly with a view to territory, and the carrier did a great deal of side-stepping and zigzagging across the street. As constituted, the boundaries of the districts frequently overlapped each other. Now the lines are distinctly drawn. A carrier's "block" may consist of one or two large houses, but there is always enough work to keep him on the jump. A part of this system is to "log" changes. That is, when a man moves into another block the carrier makes a note of the change in his "log" book. This is given to the carrier into whose district the man has moved, the name is "logged" as a new arrival, and the letter is delivered to the new address without delay.

Cuba is reported free of fever. Dr. Taft's prescriptions have evidently worked like a charm.

Speaking of the money power in politics, there is no better example of it than William R. Hearst himself.

Another football player has succeeded in marrying a rich girl. A magnet cannot attract gold, but the gridiron will.

The population of this country is made up from various races, including those who bet their money on the horse races.

There being a time for everything, perhaps no kick shold be made that the football players have now decided to butt in.

"Betrayed confidence" is the cry in the financial world, while in the world of love-making it is the wail of "betrayed affections."

Coney Island is reported to be sinking into the sea. The Lord has probably stood the thing about as long as He could.

The banks report a mysterious scarcity of $5 bills. Maybe the price of votes in the present campaign throughout the country has gone up.

A Texas national bank has elected a woman as its president. She certainly can't do much worse than some men have done in the same position.

The strangest political bedfellows who ever exhibited themselves in this country are now visible in New York—Meek Murphy and Hell-roaring Hearst.

Gillett and Bell are both Eagles. It is not known, exactly, what Langdon is, but if he can have himself elected Governor of California, he'll be a bird, all right.

George Knight certainly made what may be properly termed a fiery speech at San Bernardino. "We could have thrown Abe Ruef and his crowd to hell," said George.

It is difficult to see how the election next month is to be carried off in one day. It will require about an hour of the time of each citizen in the polling booth just to read the names of the candidates.

If, by any mischance, Hearst shall be elected Governor of New York, it will be interesting to see whether he will carry out that threat he made at one time to put his friend, Boss Murphy, in Sing Sing.

Jim Hill said in a recent interview that he would rather have credit than money. So would a great many others of us, but the danged thing is to get the fellow who has the money to lend to take that view of it.

The coal supply of the United States is estimated to last another million years; but a great many people in the East are now trying to estimate how they can get enough coal in their cellars to last them through the winter.

The young man who has come to the point where he must decide as to what business it were best for him to engage in might give serious consideration to the fact that there are 250,000,000 people in this world who have not yet taken up the habit of wearing clothes.

Mr. Taft's reason for sending the marines to the Isle of Pines, is given as "a desire to promote a feeling of security." On the theory, doubtless, that while the inhabitants are working off their stories on the marines, they'll forget to continue the devilment.

The bird known as the nighthawk, or "bull-bat," travels 20,000 miles each year in search of a climate that suits him. He covers the ground between Patagonia and the Arctic circle, both ways, annually. He is an idiotic bird, to say the least. By locating in California he could save his wings, grow fat, live long and be happy.

THE ONLY INDEPENDENT CANDIDATE FOR GOVERNOR.

What do a few misguided Republican voters about here mean by talking of a "railroad collar" around the neck of James N. Gillett, the Republican candidate for Governor of California?

These false rumors originated and have been spread in the direct interest of Theodore Bell, the Democratic and Labor Union candidate for Governor. We have no word of personal criticism to offer on Mr. Bell's account. Let him go for what he is. But when those who for purely political reasons are circulating these false reports set up Gillett with a railroad collar around his neck, it is a clear case of the thief crying "Stop thief" in order to divert attention from himself. Theodore Bell is weighted down with a collar so heavy that he is and will be unable to stand upright. He has accepted the nomination of the Labor Union party and no man ever obtained their indorsement without putting on the totem of the organization and entering into an agreement to wear that collar and "to be good." The labor-union crusade in politics is one for special privileges to labor unions and the denial of all rights to every man not in their organization.

This is exactly the position in which Theodore A. Bell stands before the electors of the State of California. He stands, bound head, neck, hand and foot, weighted down by this tremendous millstone, the collar of these labor unions, in which he has willingly placed his head. If the next to impossible should occur and by any miracle the people of this State should elect him Governor of the State, when he should stand up to take his oath of office, that ceremony would be a solemn mockery. He would give us a State government run purely in the interests of labor unions to the utter disregard of the rights of every citizen outside of that organization.

Then there is Langdon, the so-called nominee of the Independence League really the talking-doll of William R. Hearst, set up here to carry on a political propaganda, hopeless of success, defeated before it was set on foot, but as a deliberate act of resentment on the part of Hearst attempting to punish the Democratic party of the State of California because in a moment of forgetful sanity that party had retreated from its degrading position of two years ago and refused its indorsement of Hearst as an aspirant for President two years hence. Langdon wears Hearst's collar, bound so tightly around his neck that he cannot turn his head. Hearst has the string and the whip and Langdon goes wherever Hearst bids him go and says what Hearst commands him to say.

These are facts. They are patent to the eyes of all men. The two men stand forth wearing necklaces so tight, so heavy, so conspicuous, that only the purposely blind can fail to see the harnesses around their necks.

The State of California, from the Oregon border to Tia Juana and from the crests of the Sierra Nevada Mountains to where the league-long rollers of the Pacific break upon the shore, is challenged to come forward and put a finger upon one single instance, great or small, important or trivial, wherein James N. Gillett has ever shown by act or word any subserviency to any private or corporate interest or any influence superior to or outside of his oath of office and his duty to the commonwealth. What was the event, what was the time, and what was the place wherein any such act was done by James N. Gillett?

We do not need the assurance of any man, friend or foe. We have Gillett's own political life before us. When Herrin with his political machine in the Legislature of California, with the aid of Democrats who are now trying to elect Bell to the Governorship, would have foisted the unspeakable Dan Burns upon the people of this State as United States Senator, Gillett was one of the leaders in the Senate of the State of California who by his own work on the floor of the Senate and among his colleagues outside of the Senate chamber and by his vote fought against the election of Dan Burns and helped to return Thomas R. Bard as the Republican legislators' choice for United States Senator. So in Congress. When the President was so intensely interested in passing the railroad rate bill, Gillett of California was one of the hardest workers for the passage of this new law controlling the railroad companies.

There stands this man's record. It is a consistent one. He has always stood with the independents in Republican politics and never with the machine manipulators of politics. The Southern Pacific Railroad Company never had anything to do with him, nor he with them, excepting to oppose their purposes in politics. With this record behind him, he stands today in an absolutely unassailable position before the people of the State of California as the only independent candidate in the State today for the Governorship. He is the candidate of the Republican party. No machine has had a finger in the nominating of him. He has given pledges to no person, corporation, association, society or combination of any kind, shape or description. He stands as a free man, asking the votes of independent freemen. He stands with an absolutely clear record behind him, a clear conscience within his soul, responsible to no influence, pledged to no interest but that of the commonwealth. He is the only man who seeks the office of Governor of the State of California who can stand up before the court and with a clean hand and a clean heart take the oath of office without reservation and pledge himself to serve the people of the whole commonwealth, regardless of party, of business interests, of association, or of any string whatever.

If the people of California should elect Langdon, his boss, William R. Hearst, who is paying every cent of the expenses of his campaign, would be the real Governor of the State. If the people of the State of California should elect Theodore A. Bell as Governor of the State, the labor unions, or rather the cunning, conscienceless trouble-makers who boss these misguided laborers, would be the power behind the throne to such an extent that Bell would be as powerless to resist their dictates as Langdon to defy those of his boss, Hearst. Bell and Langdon stand not for the commonwealth of California. They stand not for themselves, for their own conscience and their own personal freedom as citizens. They stand as the pledged, bound representatives of bosses.

This is a commonwealth of intelligent, independent American citizens. They want a Governor who will be the Governor, and will govern the State to the direct interest of all the people. They want a Governor who is subservient to no boss, to no corporation, to no selfish interest. They want one whom neither Herrin and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company nor Hearst and his mischief-making yellow journals, nor low-browed Furuseth, Pinhead McCarthy, Dick Cornelius, Hay, Fennessy, Wilson, Drake, and the rest of the gang of public enemies will control. They know exactly who he is. He is not Langdon, Hearst's doll. He is not Bell, the labor union's man. He is James N. Gillett the independent, unsullied, absolutely untrammeled candidate nominated by the Republican convention at Santa Cruz.

A PARTY OF FAILURES.

For nearly fifty years past, the record of the Democratic party has been a story of failure. The decline of this once great and dominant party began some years before the breaking out of the Civil War, in its demonstrated inability to keep step with the march of events. If the Democratic party had had the keen foresight to keep abreast of public opinion, it would not have stood as the sponsor and defender of the monstrous institution of human slavery. If it had had the capacity to govern in consonance with the moral awakening which preceded the Presidential election of 1860, the people would perhaps have permitted it to remain in power indefinitely. But its incapacity was revealed in numerous events leading up to the war period, and its downfall was decreed by the inexorable popular will.

From the career of incompetency and failure upon which it embarked in 1860, the Democratic party has never recovered, and the prospects are that it never will recover. Only twice in the period since 1860 has the Democratic party succeeded in electing a President, and only once in all this time has its President been supported by a Congress Democratic in both branches. Mr. Cleveland's two administrations were so pronouncedly failures that the people repudiated each of them at the next succeeding election.

It is needless to go into detail regarding the reasons which have placed the stamp of failure upon the Democratic party. Perhaps these reasons could best be summed up in the one word "incompetency." Bad leadership, insincerity, and inability to understand the trend of popular opinion have helped to pile up the load of failure, until the tough old Democratic donkey is sinking under the burden.

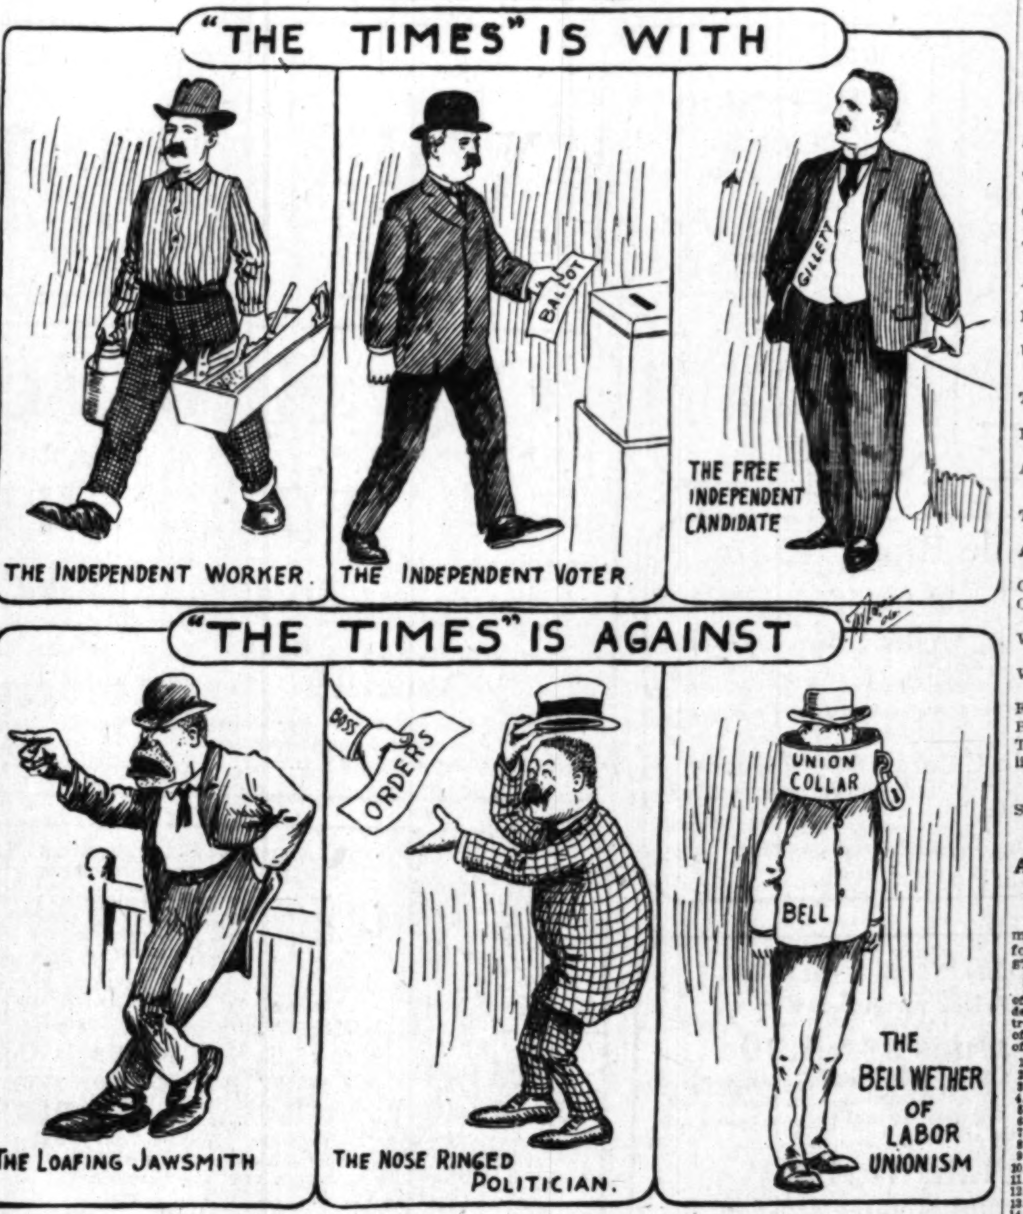
Viewing this long record, why should any intelligent voter at the November election, in California or elsewhere, cast his ballot for State candidates of the party of demonstrated incompetency? In local elections we lose sight of mere party issues. But State elections bear issues of national importance, and party principles are distinctly at issue. Republican success in the several States means Republican success in the nation. If California should step out of the Republican ranks in 1906, it would be more difficult for her to step back into the column in 1908. And besides, there is no valid reason for turning over the State government to the party of proved incapacity. On the contrary, there are many valid reasons, vital to this particular campaign, for not doing so.

As the issues are drawn, Democratic victory would mean the triumph of social disorder, and the extension, so far as possible, of the intolerable conditions which are making San Francisco infamous. It is useless for Democratic leaders to deny this. They have allowed their party interests to become so thoroughly involved with the elements of lawlessness that differentiation is impossible. They must stand or fall with the issue. They will fall.

The affiliation of Democracy with the elements of disorganization and disorder is simply another proof (which was not needed) of Democratic incompetency and failure.

The official filling by the Union Labor party of their State ticket headed by the name of Theodore A. Bell for Governor, pretty definitely fixes his status. His apologists cannot dodge the fact. He is tied to the union laborites and walking delegates. He is their man.

THE SAME OLD STAND.



GOD SAVE THE REPUBLIC.

Out of many a heart has that cry been wrung: "God save the Republic!" From many a lip has it faltered in fear or leaped with joy since the days when the bare feet of the troops at Valley Forge were red with blood in the snow. "God save the Republic," said Betsy Ross when she sat sewing together with her needle the Stripes and the Stars of the Flag. It is the one cry that every patriotic American man and woman must keep alive in their souls.

For now about a century and a quarter the republic of the United States of America has been a reality. From a weak and puny nation our dear country has grown to be the foremost among the governments of the world. The thirteen original stars on the flag have multiplied to forty-six, and there are still more to come. Our area of possession, that at first was composed of but a narrow strip of land along the Atlantic seaboard has widened and widened until now it stretches from ocean to ocean, from Cape Cod to the Golden Gate, from the Great Lakes to the Gulf. From 3,000,000 inhabitants we have grown to nearly 90,000,000. It is the freest, the bravest and the best land that God ever made, so far as the knowledge of man runs.

Yet, from the beginning the republic has not only had its foes from without, but also its foes from within. There has been not only the armed alien who ceaselessly waited the opportunity to strike a death blow, but there has also been the sneering pessimist, the bitter-tongued critics and the prophets of evil who dwelt beyond seas casting the republic's fate in the horoscope of doom. Had this been all, it had been bad enough, but within its own gates, warming themselves in the very bosom of the republic, there have been and still are worse foes of the nation than the alien enemy with the mailed fist and his carping sympathizers who assailed us with voice and pen.

Everywhere throughout the length and breadth of the republic stand today the foes of free government revealed before the naked vision. Emboldened by a tolerance that has been perhaps mistakenly extended to them, these shameless and conscienceless ingrates would turn on the hand that blessed and fed them.

Wherever one turns, at the present hour, one beholds the mountebank politician, the crazy theorist, the Socialist holding out to the ignorant promises that can never be fulfilled, and the anarchist boldly proclaiming our government a plutocracy perpetuated for the sole purpose of grinding the faces of the poor.

Think of these mischief-brewing scoundrels, these dishonest fakers, these demagogues whose red mouths water disloyalty, and whose black hearts foment treason with every breath!

It is a time for wise men and for true men to stand together. These leeches and vampires must be stamped out with no effort at mercy. The republic has stood for more than a hundred years on the foundation that the fathers builded. There is no other foundation upon which it can stand. The time to scotch the snake is when it raises its head.

Do it now. God save the Republic!

MAGIC OF THE WATERS.

Is there any owner of a home in Los Angeles, any citizen with a gleam of imagination, who does not see with his mind's eye what the bringing of the waters of Owens River to this southern valley means to Los Angeles and her sister cities and towns? The great conduit, which the people instructed their official servants to build, when they voted the bonds for the acquisition of water rights a year ago, will bring to the north gate of the city ten times as much water as is now used for all purposes in Los Angeles. That means a total supply of 427,680,000 gallons of water in twenty-four hours.

Figures do not convey a clear idea of such a volume of water, but the owner of a home, with a lawn, flower garden and trees about it, knows what it means to have all the water he can use, with no restriction of irrigation to certain hours and no fear of being forced to let the grass and the flowers and the trees go dry in hot weather.

Ten times as much water as we now have means that every bit of ground in Los Angeles, not covered by a building, may be converted into a green lawn or a blooming garden, and kept green and luxuriant at all seasons of the year. It means that the lakes in public parks may be filled with fresh, live water and never allowed to become stagnant pools. It means that fountains may flow perpetually in public and private parks; that every street in residence sections may have its strip of green sward, its flower plats, its shade trees.

South and west of the closely-built district are broad acres of rich land, subdivided or waiting to be subdivided into residence lots, now brown and bare for months at a time. When the Owens River flows to Los Angeles, all those acres may be made evergreen, and the most beautiful of the residence parks in the older home sections may be duplicated a hundred times in the new additions to the city. Los Angeles may and will be made a city of parks and boulevards, lawns and gardens; a great oasis of living green and perpetual bloom.

All Southern Californians know what miracles of growth are wrought by the touch of water to this fertile land. The wonderful transformations of barren, sun-seared fields into semi-tropical jungles of shrubbery, trees and flowering plants, that have been effected in three or four years in favored spots here and there, can and will be repeated in every part of the city when the water comes down from the Sierra snow banks to San Fernando.

And when Los Angeles has used all she can possibly need, there will be plenty of water to spare to her neighbors. Pasadena need never go dry nor stint her lawns, gardens and streets for fear of drought. San Fernando farmers, when Owens River flows into their fertile valley, may soak their lands with no fear of injunction.

All around and about Los Angeles, groves and orchards and fields will flourish and produce untold wealth. From the upper San Fernando to the cities by the sea, this blessed land of sunshine will be a garden of the gods, and millions of the most contented people on earth will live in this garden of delight, when the water comes down from the Sierra.

A SQUARE DEAL FOR CUBA.

There has been no doubt at any stage of the Cuban imbroglio as to the intention of the governmnt of the United States to give "a square deal" to Cuba. Some outcry was raised among the Cubans themselves, at the beginning of the trouble, to the effect that the government of the United States had an ulterior object in intervening to prevent the Cuban factions from drenching the island in fraternal blood. These complaints were few and feeble, however, and they have now practically ceased, as it has become more and more apparent that the Americans are actuated by no mercenary motives, but are animated solely by a desire to benefit the Cubans and to guide them back to a solid basis of stable and rational government. They have had daily and hourly evidences of our beneficent intentions from the day when American bluejackets were first landed upon Cuban soil, a few weeks ago, down to the present moment. So convincing have been these proofs of our friendship that the most intractable of them can no longer, with reason doubt the integrity of our motives.

The interesting and informing letters by Mr. Hogue, as to the disasters attending municipal trading experiments in European cities, will be continued in The Sunday Times for the next two or three months. They are attracting attention all over the United States.

If anything had been needed to reveal to the Cubans the disinterestedness of our intervention, it was furnished on Friday by two important events. One of these was the reply of Gov. Taft to the committee of revolutionists, headed by Alfred Zayas, which called upon him to inquire what the future policy of the United States toward Cuba is to be. The other was the reply which Mr. Taft made to President Stark of the Isle of Pines Association, who called upon him to urge the separation of the Isle of Pines from Cuba. To the revolutionary committee headed by Zayas Gov. Taft declared that he could not outline the policy of the United States more clearly than was done in his proclamation establishing a provisional government for the island. He said that as the representative of the United States he was just as anxious to surrender governmental affairs to the Cubans as they were to regain them. He told them further that the peace commissioners of the United States were under a responsibility to build up conditions in the island which would give to the Cuban government a reasonable assurance of stability; that the task could not be abandoned before its completion, and that the Cubans themselves have it within their power to hasten the time of the restoration of Cuban autonomy if they are disposed to do so. A fair and honest election, upon the results of which the Cuban people will be willing to abide, Gov. Taft declared to be one of the necessary prerequisites to the withdrawal of American authority from the island. With this declaration the Cuban revolutionaries declared themselves to be satisfied.

Speaking to President Stark of the Isle of Pines Association (an organization devoted to the purpose of securing the annexation of that island to the United States) Gov. Taft declared that the provisional government could not consider any proposition looking to the separation of the island from Cuban sovereignty. "It is absolutely impossible," said Gov. Taft, in a formal statement, "for the provisional government of Cuba to recognize for a moment that the Isle of Pines is not completely under the jurisdiction of the provisional government as part of the republic of Cuba." Further on in his formal statement, Gov. Taft emphasized his position by declaring that to consider any question of separation "would be a violation of the sacred trust imposed upon the provisional government to preserve the interests of Cuba intact during the incumbency of that government."

The United States is in Cuba against its will, but in pursuance of what it regards as a solemn obligation to the Cubans themselves and to the civilized world. The duty which our government is discharging in the island was not taken up lightly, to be disregarded at will. Having assumed responsibility for the preservation of peace and order in Cuba, we must discharge that responsibility faithfully and well, or confess before the world that we were insincere when we assumed it.

Marriage Is Not a Failure.

Among the statistics recently published by the municipal authorities of Paris, relating to widows and widowers, show that marriage is not much of a failure in Paris at any rate, for few men and women who have lost their wives or husbands remain single long.

Out of the 1907 widows registered at the Prefecture within the last three years 1904 remarried within less than eighteen months after the death of their first husband.

A CANYON OF MOON

The moon is fond of loves
To brim them with the light.

She has a witching, way
When first she peers above hill-crest,
Suffusing all the farthest heights,
Then lets her magic fall sheen
On now a leaf, a branch, tree—
Trunk, root, the hillside
  derly—
A slow embrace of light yields,
Down reaching to the glade,
Until the whole sweet valley
  vealed.

Then flood on flood of pours
Her siren laughter, night,
And thrilled with nameless over all.

There is no color more,
  her,
And every form is through grace
Grown fine, ethereal, as if
Of some dream-world we have known
When we perchance, in time,
Were stars or moon, and through boundless space
For lovely valleys to receive Beholding in their
The answer to our wonder

Pardee when arrangements were being The Governor at that time was that there was plenty of time for formalities and Curry was certain that there was no time the Legislature would be shut a consequence. The Governor his way and as a result the next will meet at the hall of the of Red Men. It is a very good the ordinary hall goes; but its simply bristle with inconveni- and the cost of its hire will be for car accidents in that city has caused consternation among our railroad officials who say the public is to blame and it should be a penal offense to hang onto a strap or climb on the top of a car.

That crime is rampant here may be trite, but it is nevertheless true, and now that we have plenty of time at home nights we are trying to get a scapegoat. The Call says the little boss did it; the Chronicle says "with few exceptions we have a government of crooks for crooks and by crooks;" while Labor Leader Tveitmoe says that imported strike-breakers are the criminals. Meanwhile, peaceable people think of sectional gas pipe with horror and hope that something effective will result from the mass meeting Sunday to discuss the war situation and spur tracks.

Our criminal record is now appalling with over sixty hold-ups in two months; with a Police Judge who wants to be a Superior Judge freeing five crooks who promised him to leave town; with a Police Chief who has been given thirty days to do something more than arrest two boys for joshing a bartender; and with people saying that our overworked Mayor will never return after the joy of the $90-a-day Waldorf-Astoria and his statement that it will take San Francisco ten years to rebuild. Quien sabe?

When some of our citizens foolishly disgruntled over our municipal government heard that John D. Rockefeller had registered as a voter to fight official corruption they wished that he would turn his attention this way, because press and public here are loudly crying "graft," and the administration insurgents who were overlooked or shabbily remunerated are sneeringly referring now to the little boss with the big mitt. One insurgent with a title of rank high enough to command a regiment who was disappointed in Congressional ambition, says that his former general in politics is a crook, having received half a million for an overhead trolley franchise and $25,000 from liquor dealers to keep high license off the ballot. The maligned one says he pays no attention to flea bites and wonders how the maligner could be so cruelly accurate with his figures.

Apropos of that muchly-abused word graft, Big Frank Maestretti, who was jerked from the Works Board by Acting Mayor Gallagher and who sent a piteous but futile telegram to our Croesus Chief at the Waldorf-Astoria to save him, has nothing to say now about the $13,000 paid at Santa Cruz for a political delivery, the $25,000 refused from a San José millionaire and the tithing tenth of teaming demands paid "some person," but instead he says that he is going to fight the boss along political not moral grounds. Perhaps Theatrical Manager Fischer of Los Angeles will also fight because he says he could not compete with administration pets in the matter of temporary buildings, and that small bossism makes business here unsafe. The only remedy for these two is to consult a Haywards lady who cures all diseases by color and who could cure conditions here by substituting for yellow the favorite color here, that of pink which produces love for fellow humans.

The city officials will go on paying high rents for quarters, now that Judge Seawell has prevented them from illegally erecting a temporary City Hall on the public library site, and they laughingly sent to a committee the appeal of the Merchants' Association for an auxiliary water supply to extinguish fires. Works Board President Duffey has threatened property owners with dire results unless they clean in forty-eight hours streets and sidewalks that it will take weeks to clean, and the Supervisors are contemplating a law to create a new commission to examine car men, while one of them is after a State office "on his record."

IN DEFENSE OF KISSING.

Participation May Be Dangerous, but Not Compared With Going Without.

The Indiana State Board of Health has been credited by an ingenious and fake-loving reporter with having issued a pronunciamento against kissing, particularly in the public schools. The kiss—imprinted on a little glass disk—so the report goes, has been subjected to the passionate scrutiny of the microscope, analyzed, denounced and forbidden, and teachers have been instructed to enforce the abolition of the kiss.

Now, there is no truth in any word of this. The Indiana State Board of Health is made up of sane, intelligent, industrious, self-sacrificing men, who have no desire to rob childhood of any of its precious joys, nor to make little sanitary adults of otherwise normal boys and girls. The silly story has been quoted from Scituate to Seattle, and no denial can expect to overtake it. However, it can do no harm. At best, or at worst, it can only make the State board the object of humorous attack—the kind of humor that newspaper readers most enjoy and most quickly forget.

Ever so often kissing is objected to on hygienic grounds—according to the paragrapher. But who is going to be hygienic at such a sacrifice? And what's the use anyhow? Disease germs surround us like a cloud of witnesses; indeed, they invest us and are slain by countless millions in our own vigorous bodies. The microbe, with all his genius—which is an infinite capacity for giving pains—is round about us on every side. To move, therefore, in the discharge of duty or in the pursuit of pleasure, dodging a microbe here, ducking one there, is to create a superfluous grievance in a world which is at best sufficiently vexatious. A little sanitation now and then is well enough, but an atmosphere of apprehension is a hindrance to life—a "hell rope" that can be nothing but a handicap. As for kisses, the participation in them may be dangerous, but it is not to be compared with the danger of going without them.—[The Reader for October.

An Unappreciated Pun.

John F. Stevens, chief engineer of the Panama Canal, has been in various limelights in Washington during the investigations, but he carried his point and has been told at last to go ahead and build the kind of canal he has advocated. He is a man to carry points when he makes them. He is an ideal engineer, rugged and strong, and every motion indicates unlimited reserve power. His face is rather handsome, but determination dominates, from the thick, dark hair and heavy eyebrows to the brief, strong mustache, over lips which close like a punctuation mark when he has said his say. He missed it once, however, and told the story as though he rather enjoyed it. He was sitting on the counter in a western grocery store, when a cowboy came in, and taking him for a clerk, said:

"Gimme some raisins!"

There had just been a couple of impromptu hangings in the next town, and looking up without moving, the young engineer asked:

"Do you want the same kind of raisin's they had over yonder?"

The next instant he was looking into the business hole in the cowboy's shooter. He says that it was as big as a cannon, and he was getting ready to slide off and hunt for raisins when the proprietor came to the rescue, begging the cowboy not to spatter up his place. He took advantage of the pause to apologize.—[New York Press.

Fruit as Medicine.

That fruit is a wholesome article of diet is, of course, a generally accepted fact, but the important place which it takes through the medicinal effect it exerts upon the entire system has only recently become well known. The mechanical effect is not direct, but the fruit encourages the natural functions by which the several remedial processes which they aid are brought about.

The fruits which come under the head of laxatives are the orange, figs, tamarinds, prunes, mulberries, dates, nectarines and plums. The astringents, pomegranates, cranberries, blackberries, sumach berries, dewberries, raspberries, barberries, quinces, pears, wild cherries and medlats. The diuretics are gooseberries, red and white currents, pumpkins and melons. Lemons, limes and apples are stomach sedatives. Taken in the morning early an orange acts very decidedly as a laxative, sometimes to a purgative, and may be generally relied on. Pomegranates are very astringent and relieve sore throat and uvula. The bark of the root, in the form of a decoction, is a good anthelmintic. Figs, split open, form an excellent poultice for boils and small abcesses. Strawberries and lemons, locally applied, are of the same service in the removal of tartar from the teeth.

Apples are corrective useful in nausea and even in seasickness. They immediately relieve the nausea due to smoking. Bitter almonds contain hydrocyanic acid and are useful in a simple cough; but they frequently produce a sort of nettle rash. The persimmon is palatable when ripe, but the green fruit is highly astringent, containing much tannin.

Seasoned With Spirits.

Cannibal: How will you have that Spiritualist cooked, Your Majesty?

King: Medium done.—[Boston Transcript.

This closes the interesting contest which has been carried on for nearly two years.

Cow Talk I wish to thank my young friends most heartily for the good times we have had together the past 2 years, nearly. It has been a delight to me to use this means of getting you and your mama's acquainted with the purity and goodness of that best of all creams, St. Charles and Silver Cow—and by this means enabled hundreds of girls and boys to earn their first money. I am not going to quit being good to my friends. I will redeem the labels for a better list of prizes, and as I have the addresses of several thousand of my boy and girl friends no doubt you will hear from me by mail. I would like to have every one of you write to me, tell me what you think of St. Charles and Silver Cow Cream, and as a good-bye word let me ask you, one and all, to remember the name, St. Charles, whenever you go to the store to buy cream for mama. PUBLIC SERVICE.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY.

At the close of business yesterday the City Tax Collector stated that $37,557 more in taxes had been paid than during the same period last year. The payments have now reached over $87,000.

The city has been sustained in the suit of J. R. Gager over the proposed opening of Thirty-fifth street, from Naomi avenue to Central avenue.

The City Council has passed an ordinance providing for the employment of six additional tunnel men at the rate of $4 per day each.

Mrs. Hannah Wolfe and Mrs. Ellen Boyer, step-mother and daughter, respectively, are at outs regarding the ownership of the home place in East Los Angeles, and the court is adjudicating their claims.

The Salt Lake Railroad is condemning the frontage of Myers street, between Aliso and First streets, for freight-yard purposes.

Architect Haley yesterday described his state of impecuniosity from the witness stand and expressed his inability to pay for his daughter's hats, purchased from a fashionable milliner.

AT THE CITY HALL.

TRIBUTE PAYERS BREAK RECORD.

LARGE INCREASE OVER SAME DATE LAST YEAR.

City Tax Collector Has Ten Deputies Busy and Will Put on Night Force Tomorrow—Most Taxes Being Paid in Full, and Many Redemptions Have Been Made.

Probably nowhere is the general prosperity of this city more apparent than at the City Hall, where the great rush of taxpayers to place their tributes of gold and silver in the city's treasury is now on.

This year will beat all records for the promptness with which the people are meeting the demands. A very small amount of delinquencies will be shown on the Tax Collector's books, if the present rate of payment is continued.

Last year at this period of the tax-paying time, Tax Collector Johnson had received payments amounting to $49,443. Yesterday at the close of business there had been paid in round numbers $87,000, making an increase of $37,557 in collections this year over the same period a year ago.

City Tax Collector Johnson has ten deputies at work, and tomorrow will add a force of six men to work on the books at nights. A constant stream of men and women have been lined up each day in the corridors of the City Hall, and daily the line grows. There are many redemptions, which is also a striking indication of the general prosperity of the people.

A large mail business is done, and remittances come from many widely-separated outside points in payment of taxes on property held by non-residents.

More Tunnel Men.

The City Council, at its session on Friday, passed an ordinance providing for the addition of six men to the force of tunnel men, at a rate of $4 per day each.

Would Raise Temple Street.

Mrs. Minnie F. Swink has petitioned the City Council to change the grade of a portion of Temple street, extending from a point 320 feet east of Burtz street, to a point 460 feet west of this street. Mrs. Swink owns the entire frontage interested, which is on the north side of Temple street, and the purpose of the petition is to secure the raising of a low section in the street before permanent improvements are made.

Echo Park Improvements.

The city chain gang is now employed in completing the filling of the southerly section of Echo Park, lying between Bellevue avenue and Temple street. It is this portion of the park which will be converted into a children's playground by the Playground Commission. While this commission will have control of the central part of the tract, the Park Commission will maintain the parking around the playgrounds. The chain gang will complete the grading this month.

City Sustained in Suit.

Judge Trask has sustained the city in the confirmation of the report of the referees in the proposed opening of Thirty-fifth street, from Naomi to Central avenue. An interlocutory judgment has been ordered. J. R. Gager is the party to the suit. The street opening was to extend through Gager's property, and he placed his valuation of damages at approximately $11,000. The referee allowed him $4250. The case was argued by Asst. Dist.-Atty. Howard Robertson.

City Hall Notes.

Residents of the vicinity of Park View avenue and Sixth street have petitioned the City Council and the Water Commissioners to abate the nuisance of muddy streets and stagnant water caused, they allege, by the constant leakage of water mains in those streets. They ask that new pipes be laid, as they claim that constant patching has failed to secure dry streets.

Petitioners have asked the City Council to place an arc light at Pico and Paloma streets.

Property owners on Maryland street have petitioned the City Council to provide for the placing of cement curbs and sidewalks on both sides of that street, from Boylston to Lucas street.

M. L. Wicks has petitioned the City Council for permission to place cement curbs and sidewalks on Orme street, between Stephenson avenue and Venice avenue. A petition has been filed with the City Clerk, asking for the improvement of Houston street from Soto to Ganahl streets.

The assessment diagram has been delivered for the paving of Carr street between Main and Hill streets.

A petition has been filed with the City Clerk, asking for the sewering of Colton street.

Property owners in the Highland Park tract have petitioned the City Council to abandon that portion of Glassell street lying within this tract. They declare that the street was opened long before the tract was subdivided, but that it is not now in use, although it has never been abandoned.

Permission to improve the south side of South Court Circle by private contract, is asked of the City Council by property owners on that street.

OUT OF POLITICS.

MAYOR'S FORMAL STATEMENT.

Mayor Owen McAleer yesterday afternoon issued the following statement of his intention to refrain from seeking a reëlection to the office of Mayor of Los Angeles, thus corroborating the statements to this effect made in The Times several weeks ago:

> To My Neighbors and Fellow-Citizens: As there has been some uncertainty expressed as to whether I would be a candidate for re-election as Mayor of this great city, I have felt it but fair to my friends to take this method of notifying them of my final decision.
> With the wonderful development of Los Angeles there has also been a great increase in the business of the Republic Iron and Steel Company, of which I am vice-president and manager, until it has become imperative that I could not for another term assume the important and exacting duties devolving upon the Mayor. Therefore, I shall not, under any circumstances, be a candidate for that office at the ensuing municipal election.
> On all questions there is room for honest difference of opinion, and I shall retire from office with the best wishes to my successor and kindly feeling toward all.
> To those who have believed in me and supported me, I desire to express my deep appreciation. I have at all times honestly and fearlessly performed what I believed to be my duty. While various important matters have arisen during the past twenty-two months, the most important in my opinion is the securing for the city of Los Angeles the water of Owens River.
> It has been my pleasure, my pride and my duty to do everything possible to further and advance this enterprise, and as a citizen I trust that future administrations will as unreservedly work for the satisfactory completion of what will be the means of the future growth and prosperity of Greater Los Angeles—adequate water supply.
> I might also add that one of the most important and last official acts, before presenting this statement to the public, was the signing of the ordinance making possible the securing to Southern California a free harbor at San Pedro.
> [Signed] OWEN McALEER,
> Mayor.

AT THE COURTHOUSE.

STEPDAUGHTER VS. STEPMOTHER.

MRS. WOLFE TRIES TO PUT HER OUT OF HOME.

Daughter Holds Title by Deed Made by Her Father Before His Death, but the Widow Claims the Instrument to Have Been Obtained by Fraud.

Mrs. Hannah Wolfe is eager to eject her stepmother, Mrs. Ellen J. Boyer, from the family home in East Los Angeles, and the family quarrel, with its curious complications, is now being considered by Judge Wilbur.

Mrs. Wolfe, the daughter of the late John Boyer by a first wife, has title to the property, which is valued at $3000, but her stepmother claims that such title as she holds was obtained by fraud, and that she owns merely a half interest, as being one of the two surviving heirs.

As a matter of fact, Mrs. Wolfe established such title as she has by filing for record a deed of gift from her father to the disputed property the day after he died, which was on June 24 last. Both stepmother and daughter are prominent in church circles, but this contest has pressed them widely apart.

Mrs. Boyer claims that her stepdaughter brought undue influence to bear upon her aged parent, who at the time of his death was 84 years of age. But the stepdaughter tells a far different story. However, the stepmother had with her what may almost be termed a presumpoion of law, in that the deed to the property was filed after the decease of the person making it. Courts look askance at these deeds, there being presumably something shady about them, for they are generally made in order to avoid court expenses.

Mrs. Wolfe explained from the witness stand that her father made over the home place in East Los Angeles by deed of gift, so that upon his decease there might be no expense or delay in probating a will and so that she might, by recording the deed at once, pass into possession.

But when on his deathbed Mr. Boyer appeared to have doubts whether he had done wisely in cutting his second wife off. His daughter stated that her father mentioned it to her. Just then Mrs. Boyer entered the room and her husband spoke of the matter to her, whereupon, according to Mrs. Wolfe's story, her stepmother made an ill-natured reply.

After that there was some further discussion and the stepdaughter said that they knelt down and prayed over it, but somehow her stepmother's prayers and her own were not struck off in the same key. There was no result, and praying and argument having failed, Mr. Boyer conceded that his daughter had better hold to the deed of gift just as it had been made out.

Shortly afterwards Mr. Boyer died, and his widow stayed right along in the home place. The deed to the property had been filed, and Mrs. Wolfe wanted to feel that the place was her very own, and she couldn't do that so long as her stepmother inhabited it. To bring the matter to an issue Mrs. Wolfe brought a suit in ejectment against Mrs. Boyer.

Mrs. Boyer married the deceased in 1896, and Mrs. Wolfe claimed that it was about this time that the deed of gift was made to her by her father. Both women are well advanced in life, and appeared in court draped in heavy mourning.

SAD LITTLE GROUP.

MARRIAGE WAS A FAILURE.

A sad-eyed marriage party grouped themselves in the marriage license bureau yesterday, and what beseeching glances and shy eyes lifted tearfully to "Cupid" Watson would do to move his stony heart was done. A party of four wanted to be married, but "Cupid" just fluttered his wings and said: "Nothing doing."

Two pretty young girls, sisters, had just arrived in Los Angeles from Arkansas, intending to be at once united to Frank Fletcher and Arthur Stone. All parties had been on intimate terms East, and the young men, after coming here, counted the days until their affinities rushed to them as fast as an express train could bring them.

Bessie Enyart, the younger of the sisters, was engaged to Arthur Stone, he having just attained his majority. But Bessie was only 17, and had not thought of equipping herself with a properly certified consent from her parents. Sister Stella, who is 21 years of age, has been engaged to Frank Fletcher, and while she no longer needed a consent from parent or guardian, he did. Frank has just turned 17, and though his parents were on hand to chaperon the crowd and give formal consent to the marriage of their son to Stella, the license was not forthcoming. Under 18, even the guardian's consent goes for little or nothing.

Though the party looked disconsolate for a time, the boys, who had determined to be Benedicts, were not downcast. For a small charge the whole party could get transported to Santa Ana, in another county, and there, by not following too closely in the steps of George Washington, they would be able to get the much coveted parchments at the rate of $2 a pair.

HE OWNED UP.

BRYANT GETS EIGHT YEARS.

It is not often that a young man with a record such as that possessed by William Bryant is willing to plead guilty and take his sentence. Bryant acknowledged a string of offenses yesterday before Judge Smith, and was sentenced to eight years at Folsom.

Bryant is not a tough-looking young man. Indeed, he has a rather sedate and clerical appearance, accentuated by the spectacles that he wears. Horseflesh has been his bane. Some months ago he worked at the Lynewood Dairy and robbed three of his associates there of $36.50. That seemed easy money and on September 22 he hired a saddle horse at the Tallyho Stables and rode to Pasadena. There he sold the $40 Mexican saddle for $10, and turned the horse loose on the streets.

On October 4 he hired a rig at the Richmond Stables, and the thoroughbred sorrel mare and the harness he sold for $20 at the Watkins sale yard. The rubber-tired buggy he abandoned on Lyons street, and it was recovered shortly afterward. Encouraged by the success of these thefts, Bryant on October 5 hired a rig from the Reavis Carriage Company. He sold the buggy at Seventh and Los Angeles streets for $14, and turned the horse loose. Two days later Bryant got another rig from the Fashion Stables on East First street. The horse was a blooded animal worth $125, and the buggy was a valuable vehicle. Bryant took the rig to No. 721 South Main street and sold the horse for $40, and traded off the buggy for another one and $5 thrown in.

Bryant said it was all right, he had done it all, and didn't demur when he was handed down an eight-year sentence.

LANDS APPRAISED.

OWNER'S ESTIMATE HIGH.

The Salt Lake Railroad is trying in court to condemn all the property on Myers street, between Aliso and First streets, and so far they have succeeded in condemning the two principal blocks at what may be considered reasonable prices. The property is opposite the freight depot and is needed for an extension of freight and yard facilities.

Inasmuch as the owners contended that the block fronting on both Myers and Aliso streets, and Myers and First streets, are the most valuable by reason of the double frontage the first suit was brought to condemn this property, and a jury in Judge York's court fixed the values.

The owners put witnesses on the stand to show that on First street property is worth $250 per front foot, and on Aliso street $200 per front foot. After hearing both sides, however, the jury rated the First-street frontage at $75 and the Aliso-street frontage at $70 per front foot. On Monday the property on Myers street between the two blocks condemned will be subjected to the judgment of a jury in Judge York's court for a determination of the value.

BANKRUPT ARCHITECT.

A. L. HALEY IS PENNILESS.

A. L. Haley, the well-known local architect, was before Justice Young yesterday on supplementary proceedings. A judgment stood against him for $34, and Attorney A. M. Norton brought him into court to see if he had any property with which he could liquidate the indebtedness.

The bill owing was for two winter hats supplied by Spiers, the fashionable milliner, to Miss Haley. The winter hats have long gone the way of outward finery, and Haley said that he was absolutely without means to pay for them.

He stated that his business had been taken over last March by the A. L. Haley Company, incorporated with a capital stock of $25,000. He said he holds only one share, A. D. Butt holds 1250 shares, worth $10 each, and a man named Todd owns one share. The corporation pays him $250 a month, and that is all there is in it for him. He would have been glad to pay the $34 out of his current salary, but for the fact that he had drawn his October salary and most of that coming to him for November.

Asked if he had some money or jewelry upon his person, Haley said that he hadn't a cent upon him, was without money, jewelry, household furniture or anything else, and owned just what was underneath his hat. If he wanted to know what time it was he just spied in at some window or took chances, and as for spending-money—well, he had to do the best he could.

The interrogating attorney could not get track of anything in the shape of property, and though loath was compelled to let Mr. Haley go. In a week or two he will be again haled into court to repeat himself, and so on ad infinitum until money looms up to defray the bill or the attorney finds that he can spend his morning hours more profitably.

NO CHANGE ALLOWED.

CURIOUS LEGAL EXCEPTION.

The law generally admits of a case being taken outside of the township wherein an arrest is made, and the trial being held in an outside bailiwick. In liquor cases and cruelty to animal cases this has been frequently done, for certain towns are noted for their antipathy to whisky and Pasadena or Pomona may always be reckoned on to convict.

Recently a man named Alexander Monroe was arrested at San Pedro at the instance of Humane Officer Zimmer, on the charge of cruelty to animals. In order to get all the chances on his side that he could, Mr. Zimmer had the case taken to Pasadena, where the man was duly convicted and got thirty days in jail, and the Pasadena justice and constable made a little extra money apart from the business of their own township.

But the attorneys who had represented Monroe applied for a writ of habeas corpus, on the ground that their client was being restrained of his liberty. And sure enough Judge Smith yesterday had no alternative but turn Monroe loose. It appeared that though the law does permit cases to be taken and tried in a township other than where the arrest is made or the crime committed there is one exception—and that is in the case of cruelty to animals. In being extra anxious for a conviction and in taking Monroe to Pasadena the officers overshot the mark.

COURTHOUSE NOTES.

BREVITIES MISCELLANEOUS.

TOOK A WHEEL. Thomas Conklin pleaded guilty to petty larceny before Judge Smith and was sentenced to four months in the County Jail. He stole a bicycle belonging to William Nimmo.

BALDWIN'S HARNESS. Jim Cooper stole some harness from "Lucky" Baldwin's stables at Arcadia, and was allowed yesterday to plead guilty to petty larceny. Judge Smith sentenced him to serve four months in jail.

MUCH FOR LITTLE. A youth named Charles S. Phillis pleaded guilty to grand larceny yesterday and will be before Judge Smith on Monday to be examined for parole. Phillis stole $1 from the person of Rafael Sublata, but there is a strong effort being made to have the youth released.

WANTS DAMAGES. A. B. Chubbic, a machinist conducting a repair shop, has begun suit against Dr. W. Harriman Jones, to recover $5500 as damages for alleged malpractice. On June 27 Chubbic sustained a fracture of the right arm and put himself under the care of the doctor. He claims that by negligence his arm knit together crooked and deformed, and that he will not be able to carry on his business as heretofore. For deformity to the limb he asks $3000; for loss arising out of his inability to carry on his business $500 is demanded; and for being disabled so that he will not be able to follow his calling as a machinist $2000 is asked.

DEMOCRATS WERE LATE.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 13.—Frank H. Gould, representing the Democratic State Central Committee, has filed a petition with the Supreme Court for a writ compelling Secretary of State Curry to place the names of Dr. C. W. Nutting, Democratic nominee for the State Board of Equalization from the Third District, and C. M. Habyl, candidate for clerk of the Supreme Court on the official ballot. Curry declined to place the names of these candidates on the ticket on the ground that their certificates of nomination were filed too late. The Supreme Court will hear the petition at Los Angeles Monday afternoon.

Easy-Form Music

The latest musical invention. Simplicity itself. If you know your A B C's you can learn to play with little practice.

The ordinary system of music notation is so complicated that comparatively few people have the time or patience or ability to thoroughly master it. This new invention does away with all the difficulties and enables everybody to learn how to play correctly in a short time.

Not a mechanical player in any respect. It's an invention that's going to revolutionize music and form the basis for a complete musical education.

Like most of the other good things it comes to the Fifth Street Store first and will be demonstrated here tomorrow. Price complete $5.00. Full instructions and 10 pieces of music. Good on any piano.

RAILROAD EXTENSIONS.

Four Thousand Miles of New Road Being Built.

To Give Closer Connection With Pacific Coast.

Greatest Activity for Many Years in West.

As under the old Roman empire all roads led to Rome, so all the transcontinental railroads of the United States in effect lead to Los Angeles and Southern California. At the present time there is more railroad mileage in construction by the transcontinental lines than for a good many years past, the purpose of which is to give a closer connection of the centers of population East with the Pacific Coast. In all the network of main line railways in the United States there is no one line extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific under one ownership or management, though it is reported in financial circles that the Southern Pacific is now engaged in securing control of such eastern lines as will give it a through line from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific. We quote from the Engineering News: In this respect there has been a marked difference from the Canadian railway system; for the Canadian Pacific Railway has its own transcontinental line, the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway will have a second (although a part of this will be owned by the government,) and the Canadian Northern Railway seems likely to eventually complete a third route from ocean to ocean. The term transcontinental railway is, however, commonly applied to the trunk lines from the Mississippi River to the Pacific. In the map of the transcontinental railway system which is presented herewith we have omitted the new Canadian lines. The Canadian Pacific Railway is shown, however, on account of its connections and close relations with the railway system of the United States.

Most of these so-called transcontinental lines commence at points on the Great Lakes or the Mississippi River, and several of the through routes are composed of two or more railways. There are various connections from these points to points on the Atlantic seaboard, but no trains and very few cars are run through east or west beyond the eastern terminals of the transcontinental lines. A detailed description of the several routes or lines would not be of particular interest, but we may briefly review some of their characteristics in connection with the several important new lines and extensions which are shown on the accompanying map, from the Engineering News, and are described more fully below.

The two northern lines are the Great Northern Railway and the Northern Pacific Railway, each of which starts from St. Paul, on the Mississippi River, and terminates at Seattle, Wash. (1829 miles,) and from Portland, Or., (2053 miles,) respectively. Each of these roads has a direct line to Duluth, at the head of Lake Superior, and there are several connecting lines between St. Paul and Chicago. The Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway has now under construction a Pacific extension which will form a third northern line, from St. Paul to Seattle (about 1900 miles,) practically parallel with the Northern Pacific Railway, which it crosses several times; this road, however, will not depend upon foreign connections, having its own line from St. Paul to Chicago. There is still another route from St. Paul, that of the Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault Ste. Marie Railway, which runs northwest to Pasqua on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and is operated in direct connection with the latter road. The Chicago and Northwestern Railway is now extending its own line westward across South Dakota from the Missouri River at Pierre, and it has many times been rumored that this road intends eventually to push its line west to the Pacific Coast, about midway between the Northern Pacific Railway and the Union Pacific Railway, but at present there seems to be nothing more tangible or definite than this rumor.

Across the center of the western part of the continent is the first of the transcontinental lines, formed by the Union Pacific Railway from Omaha (on the Missouri River) to Ogden, and the Central Pacific Railway from Ogden to San Francisco, 1786 miles in all. Within recent years, the great open belt of the country between the northern and central routes has been crossed diagonally by two lines: (1) the Oregon Short Line route connecting the Union Pacific Railway with Portland, and (2) the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railway extension from Lincoln, Neb., to Billings, Mont., thus affording (with the Northern Pacific Railway) direct routes from St. Louis, Kansas City and Chicago to the Pacific. The "Burlington" railway has also a line of its own from Chicago to Denver; which affords still another route to the Pacific. Between Omaha and Chicago (as between St. Paul and Chicago) there are a number of railways operating through service to the Pacific Coast over various connections.

South of the Union Pacific Railway is the Denver and Rio Grande Railway, joining the Southern Pacific Railway at the West and having a number of connecting lines east to Chicago, Kansas City and St. Louis; it thus affords various combinations for through service. South of this group of lines again are the two southern routes: (1) the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railway from Chicago and Kansas City south and west to San Francisco (2576 miles,) and with a Gulf Coast connection under construction; (2) the Southern Pacific Railway from New Orleans to San Francisco (2489 miles.) The latter also forms part of two or three routes in combination with the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway, the Texas and Pacific Railway and the Missouri Pacific system. An examination of the map will show very clearly the several lines and routes referred to, and their relation to one another. The Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway is also completing an extension which will give it a line from El Paso (on the Southern Pacific Railway) to Memphis, Tenn., available for connections east of the Mississippi River.

Ten important additions to the transcontinental railway system are indicated on the map, one of which is in operation while the others are under construction. Some particulars of these new lines are given below:

San Pedro, Los Angeles and Pacific Railway—This was the first of the new railways in the transcontinental system to be completed, and was opened to traffic in 1905. It gives a route of 770 miles from Salt Lake City to Los Angeles or 797 miles to the new port of San Pedro, Cal. Its through service is operated in connection with the Union Pacific Railway and the Chicago and Northwestern Railway. The highest summit elevation is 5971 feet at Crestline, Nev., where the line crosses the edge of the great Salt Lake basin; the maximum grades are mainly 1 per cent., but with one stretch of 2 per cent. and a short pusher grade of 2.2 per cent. The sharpest curves are of 3 and 5 per cent. Some extensive washouts occurred last spring in Nevada, and the line was rebuilt at a higher elevation to avoid future trouble.

Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul—This is the longest of all the new lines, and will form an entirely new route from Chicago and the Mississippi River to the Pacific Coast. From St. Paul, the railway has a line extending across South Dakota to Evarts, on the Missouri River, 386 miles; from this point the new line will run direct to Seattle, Wash., and will be about 1500 miles in length, giving a route of 1900 miles between St. Paul and Seattle (or 2300 miles from Chicago.) Work is already in progress at several points along the route.

Oregon Eastern—This is a line about 400 miles long, in the Southern Pacific Railway interests, running through an undeveloped part of the State and extending from Ontario, on the Oregon Short Line Railway, to Natron, the present terminus of a Southern Pacific Railway line from Portland.

Western Pacific—This line is equally important with the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway extension to the Coast, and perhaps even more important, since it will form a link in the chain of lines of the Gould system extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific and all under one ownership. The Gould system already comprises the Wabash Railway from Pittsburgh to St. Louis, the Missouri Pacific lines to Pueblo and the Denver and Rio Grande Railway to Salt Lake City. The maximum grades on the entire line of the Western Pacific Railway are of 1 per cent., and the sharpest curves are of 6 per cent., with the exception of a few 10-per-cent. curves in the Feather River Cañon, east of Oroville, Cal. The total distance from Salt Lake City to San Francisco (or Oakland) will be about 920 miles. Contracts have been let for all the work in California (380 miles) and in Utah (122 miles,) and this is under construction. Bids have also been received for 102 miles of the work in Nevada (422 miles.) In California, about 4000 men are at work, and some thirty miles of grading are completed at various points; eighteen miles of main track have been completed west from Stockton. The elevation at Salt Lake City is 4213 feet; crossing the range east of the desert, the elevation is 4640 feet at the Grass Mountain Pass, and beyond the desert the line rises to the rim of the Salt Lake Basin at an elevation of 5905 feet in the Silver Zone Pass; there is then an almost continual fall to the California State line, except for a short ascent to cross the Antelope Range (4524 feet.) From Wells to Winnemucca the line lies along the Humboldt River, and parallels the Southern Pacific Railway. At the State line, the line again begins to rise and attains an elevation of 5018 feet in the Beckwith Pass, beyond which there is a continuous fall to Oroville, 207 feet elevation, and Stockton, twenty feet. At Altamont is a summit of 750 feet elevation, and then the line falls to practically sea level at San Francisco.

Denver, Northwestern and Pacific—This is now under construction and will form practically a direct east and west line between Denver and Salt Lake City, 569 miles in length, as compared with 741 by the Denver and Rio Grande Railway. There are 126 miles completed and in operation west from Denver, and eighty miles more are under construction. The maximum grades are 2 per cent., with a maximum length of eleven miles east-bound and forty-two miles west-bound; the sharpest curves are of 12 per cent. The maximum summit elevation will be 9930 feet on the main line, but the temporary line over the Continental Divide (to be superseded by a tunnel,) has a summit elevation of 11,660 feet. With the completion of this projected work about 4000 miles will be added to the existing so-called transcontinental lines, all of which are calculated to give the Pacific Coast a closer connection with the eastern seaboard and the Gulf of Mexico. The effect will be to promote the development of the whole Coast by opening up new sections to settlers, and affording better shipping facilities to eastern markets for the products of this part of the country.

THE Monte Christo Mining Company
OF NEVADA
Represented in Los Angeles by The Winton & McLeod Company
Who Have Large Personal Interests in 120 Claims

This Company laid out, surveyed and platted the townsite of MONTE CHRISTO, recognizing this locality as the only possible townsite within a radius of 30 miles. Surrounded by mining camps of great promise, located on a heavily mineralized belt, without doubt the same strata running through Esmeralda down to Tonopah and many less famous producing camps.

A finely illustrated booklet with carefully prepared description of this interesting place and its opportunities will be given you upon request.

We have no stock for sale—no florid inducements offered—just a normal business proposition that will prove interesting and profitable.

In offering this opportunity to our friends and clients we do so after a long and thorough investigation. We are personally heavily interested in the adjoining mines and are soon to construct large reduction plants which will employ many men.

This with other facts set forth in our booklet will prove most interesting and profitable to the general public. CALL OR SEND FOR OUR BOOKLET.

Would You Pay 15c per Share for Mining Stock if it Paid $1 on Each Share per Year in Dividends?

OUR neighbor, the Gold Roads, pays One Dollar per year on every share of its stock. Our mine, The Heck Group, is situated right in the heart of this Gold Roads district and has by far greater prospects than the Gold Roads had at the same depth. Also remember we have an average assay value to 48 feet of $39 per ton --- greater than any mine in this country at the same depth. There is every reason in the world why you should invest in this great property. A few pertinent reasons are:

FIRST—It's surrounded by big producers on all sides. You can have your expert examine it at our expense.

SECOND—The company is composed of honest and experienced men, all living in Los Angeles.

THIRD—There is a big ledge of pay ore in sight just waiting treatment. It grows richer as depth is attained.

FOURTH—The company is an Arizona corporation; thus all stock is non-assessable and protected by the state laws.

FIFTH—The company owns five full-sized claims, any of which is a big thing in itself.

SIXTH—The company offers best bank reference right here in Los Angeles.

HERE is a report on the Heck Gold Mines that ought to make you sit back and take notice. Remember, you don't have to invest a dollar in these mines until you have examined them at our expense.

VIVIAN, Ariz., September 9, 1906.

California Promotion Syndicate, Los Angeles, Cal.:

Gentlemen—You ask me to give you my impartial views of the Heck mines, also give you data for your market letter regarding the Gold Roads district.

I am sending you samples of ore just taken out by myself at a depth of 48 feet. I have no hesitancy in saying that this ore will average way over $40.00 per ton. I also have sent you a small quantity of crushed rock, and if you will pan a little of this yourself the gold in the pan wil more vividly tell the story than the most rosy word painting.

That we have gold, and lots of it, is as certain as there are stars above—but strange to say, few people realize what mining means, and no matter how much ore you have blocked out, it takes money to operate with. You can safely say to your clients and others that I have been 30 years actually engaged in mining and never before have witnessed such prospects—gold in sight prospects—as there are in our mine.

When we get two or three shifts agoing for a few months you can just lock up your subscription blanks because we won't want any more stock sold. You can also say that of all mines producing in this section, not any looked as good as ours at the same depth, and our neighbor, the Gold Roads, has taken out millions, and I hear they have recently struck a ledge which ran over $40,000 to the ton. Our ore at 48 feet is richer than theirs was at three times our depth. Every producer here- -and we are surrounded on every side by them— has gotten into richer ore the deeper they went, so at 48 feet, with our average assays at $39.04, what can't we expect at twice that depth?

The Victor Virgin, a little east of our claim, have opened up a large body of high grade ore at 300 feet, and the owners are certainly excited. This property was formerly known as the Gold Dust, was located at the time of the Gold Roads, but owing to lack of capital has lain idle. It is now in operation, having been purchased by Thomas Ewing and a Denver syndicate. They will erect a 20-stamp mill immediately.

Another mine neglected for the want of money to operate is the Iowa group. It has recently been bonded by California people, who have struck rich ore at 100 feet. They will also erect a stamp mill. The latter property is on the same ledge as ours. The famous Leland will open up again. They have been tangled in litigation, but a settlement has been made and they will again soon be producing at the old rate.

Thomas Ewing of the Victor Virgin, is erecting a power plant near Needles, and electricity will be supplied to all the srruounding mines, thus facilitating development considerably.

I will be in Los Angeles shortly and will be glad to meet any parties you may desire who are interested in our stock. As I said before, give us enough to go on for awhile and we will all make money—lots of it, at that.

Sincerely yours,

CASPER HECK, Superintendent.

Here's That $1 for 15 cents

You don't have to be a great mathematician to figure how we can give you one dollar for every fifteen cents you invest now. You won't have to sit up nights and worry where the fifteen cents goes, either. It's guarded by some of the ablest mining and business men of the community. It's to help develop the Heck Gold Mines, destined to be one of the world's greatest producers—a mine but a short distance from the famous Gold Roads. Do you know what that means? Not only do we practically join the Gold Roads, but are surrounded on the east, west, north and south by mines, many that have been producing gold and others that will very shortly. We are a few hundred feet from the famous Vivian mine, which property consists of but a fraction of a claim, and still they have erected a big mill on their property.

The Heck Group is in the heart of all this rich mineral section, and has over five claims--that's one hundred and twenty acres or more.

Could you get into a better proposition? Could you find more honest men? We can let you in now—right at the start at 15c. A few months you can't get in at all.

The opportunity will not be knocking at your door forever. Better heed this warning. A little venture today may make you rich tomorrow. Please bear in mind our stock is forever non-assessable—and we have no debts of any kind. We owe only our obligations to you—that is our honest endeavor—and you certainly will get that.

YOU MUST ACT NOW

The Heck proposition is so good—so full of great possibilities that we can't hold it open always. Remember you can send an expert to these mines at our expense. If his report doesn't back up ours, your money back and all the expense, pretty fair offer, and honest as well.

ARIZONA MINES ATTRACT CAPITAL.

Great Activity Predicted for Vivian.

Work Begun on Heck Property—Eastern People Believed to Be Quietly Buying Up Claims in Mohave County.

Special to The Herald.

KINGMAN, Ariz., Oct. 3.—W. T. Bean, accompanied by a corps of engineers, passed through Kingman yesterday en route to Chicago. Closely following the visit of S. H. Harris, a prominent mine owner of Nevada, points directly to the fact that the predictions recently given out to the press are about to be realized. When Mr. Bean was questioned by a Herald correspondent at this place he would make no direct reply to the question as to whether he represented an eastern syndicate intending to operate in the camp of Vivian, 23 miles southwest of here, or whether he was interested in the proposed water and power plant to be built by Thomas Ewing from Needles through to Vivian to supply the Victor, Virgin, German-American and the Heck properties with water.

The recent discoveries and rich assays made from ore on the Knight and Heck mines has caused many rumors to be circulated and it seems almost certain that great activity will soon take place at Vivian and in the adjacent country. The phenomenal success of the Gold Road and other producers is no doubt attracting eastern capital, some of which has already been diverted from Nevada for the reason that Vivian is in the same belt and only 50 miles from Searchlight, Nev., and has the advantage of having several producers to back it up, while Nevada's properties are practically in their infancy.

Capital Buying Quietly

While the mad influx of Nevada is going on it is thought that eastern capital is quietly buying up Mohave county properties and thus be able to secure valuable claims at a very low price.

Mr. Bean, while evading the questions directly put to him, stated, in answer to what he thought of the future prospects for mining:

"The opinion is held by many people of foresight in Wall street that this country is entering upon an era of mineral production and mining stock speculation, which has rarely, if ever, been equaled in our history. There is no doubt that the productive era has, in recent years, been greatly increased. The United States geological survey reports a production of over $1,000,000,000 by the mines of the United States in 1902, and the yield of the present year will probably exceed this by 20 per cent. Discoveries of great mineral fields have in the past few years been made in Nevada, Arizona, Idaho and southeastern California, which have not yet been developed to a producing basis, but which will soon be adding very greatly to the nation's mineral production, especially that in Arizona.

"The rapid increase in production has been largely due to improvements in the methods of mining, it now being profitable to work the vast bodies of low grade ore which were left untouched in the early days, while the placer gravel, which was worked by the 'forty-niners' of California, is now being again worked at a profit of about 11 cents a cubic yard. The building of railroads and smelters throughout the Rocky mountain region has also made paying mines of what were formerly considerer valueless prospects."

Asked as to what he thought of the country he had just been through he said:

Impressed With Outlook

"I visited many mines in and about Vivian and am very favorably impressed with the general appearance of the country. While I did not make any assays I found outcroppings very prevalent and many ledges carrying apparently considerable mineral. The specimens from the Knight, German-American and the Heck mines seemed to run very high in free gold. At the Heck mine, where very active work is contemplated, I found at one point where two ledges came together a shaft down nearly forty-eight feet and a five-foot ledge was exposed, carrying free gold plainly visible to the naked eye. The former and present success of that camp with the indications can but point to very rich strikes, and no doubt will bring Vivian up to one of the foremost camps of the west, but it will be necessary to do considerable development work, though it can be safely carried on, as almost assured profits are awaiting the investor."

NEWS OF THE MINES—Review of the Week's Diggings in the Southwes

PINAL COUNTY IS PRODUCING HEAVY ORE SHIPMENTS.

Completion of Phoenix and Eastern Railroad Results in Development Work Being Rushed—Great Copper Concentrator Will Be Constructed at Kelvin—News of Improvements.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

PHOENIX (Ariz.) Oct. 13.—Since the completion of the Phoenix and Eastern Railroad, Pinal county is assuming place as one of the most productive mineral sections of Arizona. Particularly is this true of the Mineral Creek district, on the southwestern slopes of the Pinal Mountains. On scores of properties the expense of development and profit beside is being paid by ore shipments, mainly to the Humboldt smelter. From the Bryan mine, at Kelvin, three carloads a week are being shipped, netting $100 per ton in copper, gold and silver. Seventy tons a day are being shipped from the Calumet mine, near Ray, running about 18 per cent. copper. From Winkelman the Saddle Mountain Copper Company is daily shipping nine tons of matte, 55 per cent. fine. Scores of small mine owners are shipping occasional carloads, the total receipts meaning the addition of thousands of dollars a month to the county's income.

It has been announced that the Ray Company is preparing to build a 1000-ton copper concentrator at Kelvin, on the Phoenix and Eastern, and to rebuild, broad-gauge, the railroad to the mines, six miles up Mineral Creek. The extent of the company's ore bodies now are being demonstrated by diamond-drill borings.

The Big Lead Company, which owns a half-dozen claims adjoining those of the Ray Company, is building a fifty-ton concentrator at the mine, designed to handle low-grade sulphides. Sixty tons a day of surface conglomerate ore from this property are being leached at Kelvin by the Kelvin Reduction Company.

TO BUILD RAILROAD.

At Troy, the new ownership of the Troy-Manhattan property will put in a great concentrator and will build a railroad connection with the Phoenix and Eastern. In the same locality a company headed by J. J. Coleman is building a twenty-stamp mill upon a gold property reputed to be of remarkable value. High assays have been returned from the total width of a thirty-foot ledge.

An eight-foot body of carbonate and oxide ore has been cut on the 650-foot level of the Superior mine, running as high as 40 per cent. copper.

Around Globe, a hundred small mines are being worked, contributing toward the wealth that has come to the camp since the starting of the new Old Dominion works. Most of the ore goes to the local smelter, which particularly needs sulphides. Silicious ores are shipped in great quantity to Douglas, to the Copper Queen and Calumet smelters, including forty tons a day from the Eureka mine.

The Inspiration Company is opening up what is considered one of the greatest mines of the Globe district. There are immense bodies of low-grade leaching ore, averaging 4 per cent. copper. The company is erecting a concentrator, which will be in operation within a short time. Much copper ore, averaging 20 per cent., is being shipped from the Keystone property. From the celebrated Gibson property, which has returned its owners a fortune already, late development work is bringing out ten or twelve tons of ore daily that averages 30 per cent. copper. The ore, which is eagerly bought by the smelter, is chalcopyritic in character. The owners are now opening up the mine in a more systematic manner, for more effective and cheaper handling of the ore.

NEW CONCENTRATOR.

On Pinto Creek, between Globe and Salt River, the Pinto Creek Mining and Smelting Company will have a 100-ton concentrator in operation within sixty days.

The Octave Gold Mining Company, which lately renewed work upon its property in Southern Yavapai county, ten miles from Congress, has demonstrated already the need of heavier equipment for pumping and for sinking the main shaft from its present depth of 2000 feet to the proposed depth of 3000 feet. During the past few months the shaft has been driven 350 feet deeper, developing a flow of water that can hardly be handled. The added depth has all been in ore of good value. It is now proposed to generate electric power, with crude oil fuel, at the railroad, transmitting it by wire to the mine. The mine is well equipped, having a forty-stamp mill, a 1000-ton cyaniding plant and all necessary shops, offices and residential buildings.

A large reduction plant is to be erected soon upon the Victor-Virgin mines, in Western Mohave county, a property owned by Thomas Ewing. It is proposed to pump water from the Colorado River and to transmit power electrically from a power plant to be established on the railroad at Needles.

On the 600-foot level of the Tennessee mine at Chloride has been opened up a three-foot body of 60-per-cent. lead ore.

A new hoisting plant has been received by the Victor Mining Company, which is developing twenty claims near Crown King.

M. Klein of Pueblo, Colo., has purchased of J. B. Richman a half interest in the Phoenix mine in Martinez district, a short distance from the Congress mine.

WILL ENLARGE SMELTERS.

Both the Copper Queen and Calumet smelters at Douglas are to be enlarged still again. Nine furnaces are working in the Copper Queen, a tenth will be ready soon and more are in prospect. The Calumet and Arizona has been working five furnaces on exceptionally rich ore. Two more furnaces have been ordered, with all necessary appurtenances, the works thus enlarged to have capacity for the reduction of 2200 tons of ore a day. The new furnaces are intended especially for ores from the Superior and Pittsburgh mines. It is believed that before many months the smelter equipment at Douglas will be handling 6000 tons of ore a day. Corrected figures on the September output show that the Copper Queen's product was 8,200,000 pounds of converter bar and that of the Calumet 3,850,000 pounds.

Work has been begun upon the Savage smelter in the Chiricahua Mountains, at Paradise. It will have capacity for fifty tons a day. Awaiting its operation, 3000 tons of ore already are on the dump.

The Chiricahua Development Company has purchased, for $30,000, the Burns group of mines near Paradise. In the same district, the Paradise Development Company has struck a large body of black sulphide, running 15 per cent. copper and about $10 to the ton in gold and silver. This latter company is largely owned in Los Angeles.

Interests directly connected with the Calumet and Hecla mines of the Lake Superior region have taken an option upon 800 acres of copper land, eighteen miles from Moctezuma, Sonora. The property, known as the Rosa Amarilla, is owned by Dr. R. C. Van Dorn.

BAMBERGER BUYS IN SEARCHLIGHT.

SALT LAKE CAPITALIST GETS INTEREST IN CLAIMS.

Purchaser Is Among the Largest Operators in the World—New Camp Thurman Is Forging to the Front—Montana Operator Decides to Begin Work in District.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SEARCHLIGHT (Nev.) Oct. 12.—One of the most important developments of the week in this district was the acquiring by Louis Bamberger of Salt Lake City of an interest in three claims formerly owned by John Wheatley of Searchlight, located about three and one-half miles east of here, near Fourth of July Mountain. A company known as the Bamberger-Wheatley Mining Company has just been incorporated in Arizona to develop the property.

Wheatley had already done 500 feet of work, sinking and drifting, while trenching has been started. Some good ore has been found, running as high as $40, and it is free milling. The Bambergers are among the largest operators in the world.

The new Camp Thurman, where two local prospectors made a sensational strike about three weeks ago, is leaping into prominence and attracting miners from other camps. Dozens of claims have been located during the past week, and specimens of free-gold bearing quartz are brought here daily. Water has been found in abundance, bubbling from the hillsides, which obviates the necessity of hauling from the Empire mine, three and one-half miles distant, and a movement is on foot to establish a town there.

John T. Nagle, who at one time held a bond on the famous Minnie Healy mine, which is now one of the biggest properties of the Amalgamated Copper Company, after a study of this district, extending over three weeks, has decided to operate here. Thoroughly familiar with the mines of the Butte district, where he has resided until recently, Nagle makes the statement that some day this camp will be as great as a producer as that region. He thinks that with proper depth this will be preeminently a copper camp, but that gold mining will continue for many years on an ever-increasing scale of importance. In the beginning, when surface mining was carried on in Butte for gold alone, he says, people would have laughed at the idea of deep mining, but time proved that the richest deep mines in the world are at Butte, and some day that story will be repeated in this district.

At the 500-foot level the Cyrus Noble is cross-cutting to the ledge. At this level most of the gold values are found. On the 400-foot level, directly to the north, a widening of the ledge has been encountered which looks encouraging for a large ore body.

The Searchlight-Wyoming, at a depth of something over 200 feet, has found ore which horns freely and sinking and drifting are both in progress.

E. J. Fenlon, a New York broker, representing large capital, has been inspecting the Searchlight district as the guest of Carlsen & Ethen, local brokers, and is so well pleased with what he has seen that he left direct for New York, dispensing with a trip to Bullfrog and Goldfield, which he had intended to make. He will return in a few weeks.

Bids for sinking the shaft to a depth of 300 feet on the Bank Roll claim of the Searchlight Belle Mining Company are being received by the general manager. The company is preparing for extensive development work.

DRAGOON MOUNTAIN MINES.

New Railroad Wakes Up Johnson Camp, Which Is a Producer of Copper Ore.

TUCSON (Ariz.) Oct. 10.—Johnson camp, which is located 10 miles north of Dragoon Summit on the Southern Pacific, is coming rapidly to the front. The work on the railroad, which will run from the Southern Pacific main line to this camp, has caused renewed activity in that section. T. A. Cox, chief engineer of the road, says all the grading will be completed by November 1. While this road is being constructed by the people who are interested in the Arizona-Michigan Development Company, the other companies in the district will share in the benefits, and it is expected that when the road is completed it will haul at the start at least 30 tons of ore for the El Paso smelters, and very likely a considerable quantity more. The Michigan-Arizona company expects to ship at least 200 tons daily from the Copper Chief mine, which has undergone the most development. This company is expending money liberally, and its main shaft is down to a depth of 400 feet and the bottom is all in ore. A double compartment shaft is also being sunk, and this is down to a depth of 120 feet at present. A large hoist is in operation, and the company will have two machine drills in operation as soon as an air compressor can be installed.

The Republican, Peabody and Empire are the other companies which are helping to bring the Johnson district to the front. These companies have done a great deal of development work and expect to contribute more than 100 tons to the daily ore shipments when the railroad is completed. Ore shipments have been made by wagons to Dragoon from Johnson camp on a small scale for a number of years.

It is reported that a property in the Tucson mountains, about 12 miles northwest of Tucson, has been bonded to the Pontotoc Copper Company by John D. Burgess for a considerable sum of money. The Pontotoc Company is made up of Texas and Mississippi people and it is announced that they expect to do development work on a large scale.

The Tucson Chamber of Commerce has arranged with Mammoth mining men to bear half of the expense of putting the wagon road between Mammoth and Oracle in good condition, in order that mining supplies can be freighted out of Tucson and ore brought to this city for shipment. The Mammoth district is about 35 miles north of Tucson. It has recently come prominently before the public.

Another strike is reported at the Superior mine in Pinal county on the 650-foot level. It is reported that the ore body discovered is eight feet wide and that some of the copper runs very high.

The Alta Mining Company in Pinal has sent out a corps of surveyors to survey for a wagon road from the mines to the mill site on the Gila River at the Arthur ranch, which the Alta company owns. The Phoenix and Eastern road runs near this ranch. The new road will shorten the distance from the mines to the mill four miles.

COPPER STRIKE IN GOLD LEDGES.

EXCITEMENT FOLLOWS FIND IN JOHNNIE DISTRICT.

Prospectors Rush to Field and Many Claims Are Taken—Red Metal and Yellow Mixed in Same Granite Formation in Curious Manner—Rich Gold Ore Is Sacked.

JOHNNIE (Nev.) Oct. 10.—The discovery of copper here caused a rush of prospectors into the field, and within the last two weeks nearly a hundred locations have been taken up. The principal discoveries have been made in the northeastern and southwestern parts of the district, and in many cases outside capitalists have become interested in the showing of the red metal here and have contributed money toward its development.

The original discoverer is an old prospector known as "Frenchy," who made many journeys through here on his way to the various camps in this State. He is familiar with the copper camps bordering on Death Valley, and he said that he considered his holdings in Johnnie as valuable as any he has. Another man who has large copper holdings here is Fred Bowler, the original owner of the Bowler lease, on Minnie Mae Hill. Bowler is now in Philadelphia negotiating with capitalists there for the sale of some of his copper properties.

Robert Browne, another copper magnate, has just returned from Denver, where he interested financiers in his copper properties, and he is now in the field developing them in their interests. The last two properties are in the southwestern part of the district, about eight miles from town. On the mines Browne is working there is a vast deposit of copper which assays on the surface $8 in gold and 4 per cent. copper.

About 4500 feet to the north Browne has another property that he says has an 18-inch ledge from which he obtained assays running $4 in gold and 35 per cent. copper. U. M. Thomas on the Midway-Johnnie got assays of 11 per cent. copper and $10.40 in gold. H. Wagner and Tim Connors are developing a copper property in the northeastern part of the district that assays 20 per cent. copper from a two-foot ledge. The copper is in a granite formation, the metal having been forced through the rock by deep-seated disturbances.

Local engineers are discussing the peculiarity of the deep formation in the Johnnie Consolidated mine. The main shaft follows the ledge at an angle of 45 degrees when suddenly the formation flattens at a depth of 535 feet. On the level it was necessary to run a drift thirty feet before the vein was caught and on the 700 level drifts over 140 feet were dug. On the lower level the formation was found almost horizontal, and Superintendent Moser says he thinks that he has between 300 and 400 feet of stoping ground on this level, thus increasing cheap mining. A gigantic fault was discovered which threw the ledge fully sixty feet.

The Clanahan mines are making a good showing, and yesterday the men broke into a two-foot galena ledge in a new drift. Ore is being sacked for shipment.

The Frost-Rathborne lease is still being worked in rich ore from the forty level. It is the intention of the manager to continue this drift until the end line of the lease is reached, when the lower level will be opened up.

On the Globe property, the lower tunnel has broken into a ledge of good ore that will go $30. The formation is gradually changing, and indicates that the men are approaching the rich ground.

C. C. Beauregard is continuing to sack ore on his lease, and in a short time he and the Frost lease will have enough ready to ship a carload.

On the Leadville-Johnnie the ledge still holds strong in No. 2 shaft. The ore is being sorted, and there is about half a carload now ready. The management are considering the erection of a concentrating plant for the galena ore, so that the mines on Mineral Flat will be able to ship the concentrates instead of the raw material.

Superintendent Simmons reports good progress on the Battery mines, and says that the extension of the Johnnie lode in his ground shows a five-foot ledge that will go about $30.

DEATH VALLEY WORK.

Active Operations at Slate Mountain Will Begin Now That Cooler Weather Is Here.

The Slate Mountain Gold Mining Company—newly incorporated and owning one of the most promising groups of claims in the Death Valley district—starts a force of men from this city tomorrow morning, with instructions to push work night and day until the property is in shape for actual production. The ore body upon which the greatest amount of development work is contemplated is composed of quartz and porphyry, of a width as yet undetermined, and carrying values ranging from a few dollars up into the hundreds per ton, in free milling gold.

As soon as the property is sufficiently developed the company purposes putting in a mill for the reduction of their ore, which, owing to its extremely friable nature, can be treated at a minimum of cost. George W. Shehi of No. 407 Forty-seventh street will have charge of the development of this property.

Now that the heated season is over, mining operations will be resumed all along the famous porphyry dyke of Slate Mountain, and the outlook for the whole district is most favorable.

A GOLDFIELD DEAL.

Lou Dillon Claim Sold for Four Hundred Thousand Dollars to a Syndicate.

GOLDFIELD (Nev.) Oct. 10.—One of the most important recent mining deals was the purchase of the Lou Dillon claim by a syndicate of Nevada capitalists, including L. M. Sullivan of the L. M. Sullivan Trust Company, Peter Grant of the same institution, Gov. John Sparks, and other prominent mining men. The price paid was $100,000. The purchasers have announced that they will incorporate a company to take over the property and develop it.

The Lou Dillon property, comprising approximately twenty acres, adjoins the Silver Pick, on the west, and is not more than 1000 feet from the Mohawk. Developments of recent date on the Silver Pick have been of sufficient importance to give great value to the Lou Dillon, aside from its contiguity to the Mohawk. On a lease, which is within a few hundred feet of the Dillon, several veins of high-grade ore have been encountered that carry average values of from $70 to $340 per ton in gold. Sinking is being done as rapidly as possible in order to open these veins at the same depth at which the Mohawk ore bodies were disclosed. At least four ledges of gold ore have been exposed on the Lou Dillon ground that have their apex within the boundaries of the claim.

Jack Campbell, general mine manager for the L. M. Sullivan Trust Company, who was formerly Charles M. Schwab's consulting mining engineer in Nevada, states that he considers the Lou Dillon one of the best pieces of ground in the entire camp.

The man who located the Lou Dillon claim, about two years ago, is G. S. Phenix, and he walked into this camp, hungry, back in 1903. He isn't hungry nowadays, and he doesn't have to walk unless he wants to. He is an expert on the ups and downs of the wheel of fortune. Some of his belongings have been so hard to keep that he had to stand over them with a shotgun. Occasionally, in attempting to burn the bridges of adversity behind him, he has set fire to himself. But, like the mythological bird suggested by his surname, he has mastered the stunt of rising from his own ashes. And now, though he has laid away but a million or so, he begins to hope that he can keep the wolf away from the door.

Tailings.

At Fairview the Nevada Hills Company has shipped ore valued at $100,000 to date, and there is sacked at present as much more waiting to go out.

An idea of the importance attached to Bullfrog as a mining camp by those who are identified with it is shown by the expenditure of millions of dollars in railroad construction to reach it and secure the tonnage awaiting transportation.

Tonopah is interested in the development of the coal deposits at Coaldale by the Pittsburgh syndicate that recently purchased them. The tests that have been made thus far with the coal show that while it is not aged sufficiently to produce the average standard of heat, and burns with considerable ash, it is still valuable as fuel on account of its comparative cheapness. Bituminous steam coal delivered in Tonopah costs from $16 to $18 a ton, while the local product can probably be mined and delivered for one-third that amount.

At the grass roots on one of the claims owned by the Battling Nelson Mining Company in the Jumbo district, Nevada, free gold ore has been struck that assays $34.40 to the ton.

Another big strike is reported in the Dyke district on Jackson Mountain, Nevada, in the shape of a porphyry dyke of great width, traceable for miles, and which samples $9.80 to the ton.

Three hundred thousand dollars was paid by the principal owners of the Tonopah Mining Company, to Seymour and associates for the Nevada Wonder group, the original discovery in the new camp of Wonder.

J. Ross Clark and associates of United States Senator W. A. Clark have obtained an interest in the property of the Homestake Extension Mining Company at Bullfrog.

C. O. Whittemore, vice-president of the Las Vegas and Tonopah Railroad Company, is president of the Homestake Extension Company.

The output of the Shannon Copper Mining Company for September was 1,256,000 pounds, an increase of 372,000 pounds over that of August.

The Great Bend Mining Company, in the Diamondfield section of Goldfield, Nev., has resumed regular shipments. The ore comprising the shipments that are now being sent out is coming from the 70-foot level.

The Detch-Brewer lease on the Daisy property at Diamondfield has sent out a consignment of high-grade ore.

Copper Near Reno.

A ledge of copper ore, carry and silver, and assaying up to been found by L. T. Brockbank of Reno, Nev., close to the line. According to the Nevada Journal, Brockbank, whose extends over Montana, Utah and Nevada, has been investig district since last January, and only about two months ago ran across the ledge which higher values. The other lower grade show values of and there appears to be an quantity of both the high grades.

IN THE EARTH.

RARE MINERALS, MINES AND METALLURGY.

POPULAR QUERIES AND EXPERT ANSWERS.

[Answers to legitimate questions in mineralogy, metallurgy, chemistry or mining will be given here, but only when of interest to the mining or commercial world. Personal questions from curio dealers and mineral collectors, on ores, minerals, earths or metals of non-commercial value, and assays for metal, will not be answered, but should be written direct to analysts and assayers. Address The Times.]

Kind Words and Useful Tests.

VALLEJO, Oct. 1.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I take great pleasure in reading your "In the Earth" and during the past two years have utilized all of your references to "chemistry," by filing such in my scrap-book.

As yet, I fail to observe in your helpful lessons any reference to the following questions, and, being unable to find in pharmacopedias, or other formulary, the proper methods (by the term proper I mean practical) to pursue; I ask these numbered questions: (1) Give a simple test for formaldehyde in milk. (2.) What is the best method for making stannous chloride? (3) Give me a test for platinum. (4) What is meant by the term—"strike of a lode?" (5) I observe in a technical journal, the terms (mineralogical) uraninite, and uranit; are they two separate and distinct minerals? Yours gratefully, C. J. W.

ANSWER: It is a pleasure to reply to your kindly communication. (1) A simple method of testing milk for the presence of formaldehyde is the "Hebner Test." Proceed as follows: Take milk diluted with equal volume of water and float this mixture upon strong, chemically pure, sulphuric acid. The presence of formaldehyde is shown by a violet blue at the junction of the two liquids, which is permanent for two or three days. In the absence of formaldehyde, milk gives, with sulphuric acid, a greenish tinge, and, on standing, a brown color develops.

Formaldehyde is a gas (formic aldehyde, oxymethylene.) An equeous solution of about 35 per cent. is an article of commerce. This solution is a colorless, volatile liquid possessing a pungent odor. "Commercial formaldehyde contains copper, methyl alcohol, and other impurities that render it unfit for use in or on the human body. Only the medicinal grade is eligible for therapeutic purposes." (Merck.)

(2.) This department of The Times finds the following method of stannous chloride (protochloride of tin; dichloride of tin) to be all that is desired in metallurgy, i. e., file a piece of granulated tin into powder and add thereto hydrochloric acid, chemically pure. Allow the beaker or porcelain dish containing the tin and acid to become hot near the boiling point) and keep tin in the solution even if you have to add more. When no bubbles arise (no hydrogen gas is evolved) dilute with four times its volume of pure water (four times the volume of the tin solution,) then acidulate, slightly, with hydrochloric acid, and filter. Keep the filtrate in a glass-stoppered bottle with a small piece of granulated tin added thereto. All metallurgists know that without the presence of metallic tin in the stannous chloride solution the liquid is in danger of changing into stannic chloride with precipitation of oxychloride of tin (a white substance,) which renders the reagent unfit for the exact purpose of detecting gold.

(3.) Platinum does not readily combine with other metals. The compound native sperrylite (an arsenide) is sparingly found at the Rambler and other mines in Wyoming. It is of a tin-white color; hardness about 7.1; specific gravity 10.7. Native platinum is malleable. It is very heavy (its specific gravity;) it is gray in color; it is ductile; it dissolves in no simple acid but with difficulty in boiling aqua regia (four parts hydrochloric acid to one part of nitric acid, both acids to be chemically pure.) Lead melts quickly under the blowpipe flame and leaves a yellow coating on the charcoal; platinum will not melt under the hottest flame and leaves no coating. Platinum holds back better than gold, when panning gravel, because its specific gravity is greater than gold. It is retained by the fire assay for gold if platinum is present in the ore. By the wet method: Powder the ore and place in a beaker. Add aqua regia, say, a fluid ounce to one-half an ounce of the ore. Heat the beaker and contents gently. Add stannous chloride solution to the cooled filtrate, then, if platinum is present a dark brownish-red color will be obtained, but no precipitate. (4.) By the term "Strike of a lode," is meant—the course of a lode in a horizontal direction. (5.) Uraninite (pitchblende) is an oxide of uranium. Uranite—uranit (more properly, autunite,) is a phosphate of uranium—two separate and distinct minerals. Phonetic spellers would, perhaps, be excusable in "spelling" uranit as follows: You-ran-it.

Books on Mineralogy.

CORONA (Cal.) Sept. 26, 1906.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Will you please state what the specimens of mica I sent this day to you are. Whether the mica is commercial or not. The specimens I have marked 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. Any information will be greatly appreciated.

Yours truly, DR. J. W. C.

P. S.—Will you please mention the name of a good, concise manual of mineralogy? J. W. C.

ANSWER: (1) A gray-white silicate of aluminum; no carbonates present. Could be utilized as a component of cement. Try it as a second-grade clay. (2) Blue-gray in color, calcareous, and carrying quartz, with sheets of iron-sinter floating on acid, not attacked by acid. (3) A green-brown, chloritic, mica-like, pyramid-shaped substance, with calcite inclusions; of value only as a mineral specimen. (4) A blue-black (5) Probably from an outcrop of granite, carrying bronze mica, calcite, pseudomorphous serpentine. To one so familiar with the "word language" as you are, the works of Dana, "Dana," are required; for beginners "Osborn's Prospectors' Field Book and Guide." "Frazer's Mineral Tables" are exceedingly useful. "Brush-Penfield" is a necessity to the scholar.

Fine Grade of Manganese Dioxide.

Among samples received by The Times for determination, there is a manganese containing dioxide of manganese of a very high, commercial grade of value. No communication or reference appears therewith. The specimens, at sight, resemble massive (granular) plumbago of Ceylon, as also the black oxide of copper from Saratoga, Wyo., and again it looks like the micaceous iron ore from Black Rock, Utah. Owing to the fine grade of ore, a complete chemical test was made thereon, resulting in the percentages of manganese, 63; oxygen, 34. Both the specimens named are several samples of granular massive manganese carbonate (rhodochrosite.)

MILLIONS FOR A RANCH.

ing, form a beautiful picture. From the low-roofed veranda a full sweep of the valley, reaching down to the long, white line of breakers, is had. To the left rises a hillock with an old wooden cross upon it, marking the graves of a forgotten Indian village. To the right, foothills covered with cattle and dull blotches of color where sheep graze, roll away to the base of the Santa Rosa Mountains.

The massive front door swung back in response to the rap of a heavy knocker; an arm waved toward a long bench, and the words, "Sit down," thundered through the now closing aperture. Thousands of blackbirds squabbled in a pine tree and the shadow of the tile roof crept along the porch floor many inches before the big door swung open again.

KIND WORDS WITH BRISTLES.

"Go in and get a good meal. People have to eat. Eat all you can, and then I'll talk with you. I am Richard O'Neal."

The words had bristles on them. They shot from a man who in face appeared no more than 50-odd years of age, but who found much difficulty in seating himself in his favorite chair.

The visitors obeyed, passing through a long hallway into an inner patio entirely surrounded by a porch, and thickly grown with flowers and shrubbery. The "yellow angel" smiled at them from a door around a corner of the arbor. It was his first smile, but remained almost unbroken while he served old-fashioned ranch dishes that can't be found in Los Angles, and let the photographer forget all about his big camera and the old gentleman who "would shoot you if you tried to take his picture."

NO AGENTS FOR HIM.

"Young man, you are prying into my private business," thundered Sir Richard, a little later. "I never saw Mr. Huntington, and if Mr. Huntington wants to buy my ranch he has got to come and talk business with ME—I don't deal with any agents."

"But didn't Fletcher offer $3,000,000 for your ranch?" ventured the reporter.

"Huh? How do I know that he has $3,000,000? I don't want to sell this ranch. I am going to die here. After I am gone I will have no control over what my sons do with it, but I don't look like a corpse, do I?"

Except for that merry twinkle in Sir Richard's eyes, it might have been thought that he was angry.

Toddling down the porch came a mite of a boy in spick an dspan blue jeans. He ran to his "dampa" with a happy cry, grabbed his legs, and begged to be taken up. That little boy did the trick, and Richard O'Neal had his picture taken—for his grandson's sake. Bless little Sir Richard III! Then came Richard, Jr., and the other son, Jerome, who is manager of the ranch, and Ambrusio Valenquela, the Majordomo who was born on the ranch forty years ago, and who claims to be the best rider in the State. Many pictures were taken then, and the happy grandfather became jovial.

BUILT BY PIO PICO.

He told how the house had been built by Pio Pico in 1838, who was the last Governor of the two Californias under Mexican régime. "Why, those are the very mountains, up there in the Barancas, where Pio Pico ran into hiding when he feared United States soldiers would take his life," he said. But when it came to stating how many head of cattle there are on the Santa Margarita ranch, or just what interest Jim Flood of San Francisco has in the ranch, he became a fire-eater again. Flood is said to have a half interest in the holdings.

From the Santa Fé Railroad it is learned that about 2500 head of cattle are shipped from the ranch annually, and it is estimated that there are 15,000 grazing there at present. Grass grows plentifully in all the valleys; in fact, there is good grazing everywhere except on the barren Santa Rosa Mountains. These mountains are said to contain mineral deposits well worth working, but O'Neal will not allow prospectors on the ground.

PESTERED WITH HUNTERS.

"We are pestered to death with hunters," said Jerome O'Neal. "From the number of antlers around here, you may judge that there is some game on the ranch," and he pointed to the brown prongs that stick out over all the windows and from the supports of the tile roofing. "There will be 200 gunners in here next month, and I will have to detail a band of men to clean them out. We can't shoot them, and they just keep coming. Some of them are real hunters, but most don't know a deer from a calf, and when they see a pair of eyes in the underbrush they blaze away without thinking where that bullet is going to carry to. Many of our cattle are killed every year by this kind of work. And they build fires without knowing how to smother them. Just last week 10,000 acres was burned over and I worked with seventy men for two days and a night before the flames were checked. Some people may say we are selfish, and all that, but those people never tried to run a ranch that is almost as big as a county."

Just as the whistle of the only train out that day was heard faintly in the distance, one more question was put to Baron Richard: "If Mr. Huntington wanted a right-of-way for an electric line to San Diego across your ranch, wouldn't you give it to him? It might build up some towns on your ranch, you know."

The old gentleman glowered as he had not glowered before, and there was a long silence, broken by another whistle.

"Would you sell it to him?" breathed the reporter.

"Thank you. Thank you. That is better. I am not giving anything away, and if Mr. Huntington wants that right-of-way he has got to pay for it, and come and see me about it. Towns? What do I care about towns? I am happy just as I am."

CONSUL IS DISMISSED.

CITY OF MEXICO, Oct. 13.—Rafael R. Serano, who for some time has been the Mexican Consul at St. Louis, has been summarily dismissed by President Diaz, because of his alleged relations with the revolutionary junta, whose quarters were in St. Louis.

REGAINS SIGHT THROUGH FALL.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Maria Louisa Goodyear of Headingly fell and struck her head. The blow caused a pressure of the skull on the optic nerve and she lost her sight.

Now Miss Goodyear has fallen down a flight of stairs again. Her fall was followed by severe pains in the head and the sudden return of sight just in time to see her mother before the latter's death. Her sight is now excellent.

APART YEARS; MEET IN JAIL.

Brothers Once Rich, Separated Twenty-five Years, Are Reformed by Union.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

OMAHA (Neb.) Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A special from Des Moines, Iowa, says: "Roger and Andrew Kelly, brothers and members of an old and honored family living near Rutland, Vt., met in a cell in the County Jail here today, where they were both prisoners, the one on a charge of vagrancy and the other on a charge of intoxication.

"The brothers had not seen each other before for nearly twenty-five years and neither knew what had become of the other, yet they recognized each other instantly and their meeting was affecting in the extreme.

"They sat down on a hard wooden bench in their cell and talked over old times for several hours, and there before the jail officials they promised each other to give up all bad habits, go to work and live respectable lives. They declare that henceforth they will live together."

ESCAPES DEPORTATION.

Chinese Laborer Remains Because He Was Merchant When Law Was Passed.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

CINCINNATI (O.) Oct. 13.—Although a laborer at the present time, the fact that he was a merchant when the Chinese exclusion law was passed saved Jung Yuen, a Cleveland Chinese, from deportation. The United States Circuit Court of Appeals so decided today.

District Judge Taylor ordered Jung Yuen deported, as he was working in a Cleveland laundry when arrested. His attorney maintained that as Yuen was a merchant in New York at the time the law was passed, he was, therefore exempt from deportation, and the Court of Appeals today sustained this contention.

HOLDS RECORD FOR DUTY.

Mrs. Collis P. Huntington Pays $20,000 Cash Customs on Purchases Made in Europe.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—One of the largest amounts paid in customs duties at this port in several years on articles duly declared and brought in by an individual was paid by Mrs. Collis P. Huntington, when she arrived Tuesday by the Kaiser Wilhelm II. She declared merchandise worth $32,000 bought in Europe, of which $27,000 represented two articles of jewelry. The duty amounted to about $20,000.

Mrs. Huntington holds the record for paying the largest cash amount of duty declared on articles ever handed over to the government officials on the dock. It was $32,000 in 1901.

DESERTER SURRENDERS.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 12.—Rev. James R. Slayton, Jr., presented himself to the Assistant Secretary of the Navy today, and asked that he be arrested for deserting the navy five years ago. Slayton said that his conversion to religion and service as a minister of the gospel caused him to see the wrong he had done in leaving the service, and he requested that he be tried for the crime. Assistant Secretary Newberry referred Slayton to the navy yard officials. At the navy yard the commandant told Slayton he could not be held because of the statute of limitation.

BARKEEPER IS SHOT.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 13.—John Lovejoy, a barkeeper from Sacramento was shot tonight during a quarrel in a saloon near the main entrance of the Golden Gate Park by a man named William Bolte. The bullet entered Lovejoy's back, and his condition is believed to be serious. Bolte was arrested.

NEWFOUNDLAND RESISTS.

ST. JOHNS (N. F.) Oct. 13.—The Colonial Cabinet at its meeting last night decided, it is understood, to resist to the fullest possible extent, the enforcement of the modus vivendi arrived at by the British and American governments. It is said the modus vivendi is objectionable, because it attempts to grant to the Americans fishing rights additional to those conferred by the treaty of 1818.

FIRE DESTROYS HOTEL.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 12.—The Armour Hotel, an adjoining lodging-house, a bakery and the dwelling of D. O. Daggett were destroyed by fire at midnight last night. The damage amounted to $50,000, which was only partly covered by insurance.

GOVERNOR WARNS EMPLOYERS.

LODZ (Russia) Oct. 13.—The Governor-General today warned the shopkeepers and factory owners of Lodz to pay no wages to the striking workmen and clerks under penalty of $1500. The wealthier residents are leaving in fear of an anti-Jewish attack.

The Fountain of Youth.

"The fountain of youth, I am persuaded," said Mr. Cheerily, "springs in our own bosoms only. The mistake we make in searching for it, as we all do, is in looking for it elsewhere.

"Here it is, as one might say, right under our noses, but that fact we never realize; and we all go searching for it, near and far, as Ponce de Leon did centuries ago in Florida.

"Here's the trouble, the real trouble. The fountain within ourselves, if we don't watch out, is likely to get sealed up; and it is when it ceases thus to flow that we begin to look for it elsewhere, always more and more aimlessly, and always with increasing weariness, for it is worry that prompts us on this vain search and that leads us farther and farther away.

"That's the secret of the whole business—freedom from worry; it is worry, and worry only, that seals the true fountain and starts us on that fruitless quest.

"Don't worry, and you will never have to search for it; you will discover it, springing perpetual, within your own heart—the true and only fountain."

Not Afraid.

"How dare you kiss me!" she hissed, stretching herself to a height of another inch.

"Dare?" he repeated. "You don't think I'm afraid of a few germs, do you?—[Cleveland Press.

The MacIntyre Service of "Salesmanship Advertising"

But it's worth what it costs—

A business concern is always reluctant to admit that its prices are higher than those of competing firms, yet when a concern has proved beyond all doubt that its goods are worth all they cost, then the world is ready enough to pay the extra price and enjoy the extra value.

The MacIntyre Advertising Co. has been guided by only one Great Purpose, to manage advertising so successfully as to earn, if possible, the position as the most successful and esteemed advertising agency in its field.

To achieve this position has cost a fortune in study, work and loyal service.

ADVERTISING WRITING is a poor name for the MacIntyre service, which includes suggestions and recommendations for bettering the system of a business, suggestions regarding the price and character of the thing advertised. It includes the framing of a campaign, the selection of mediums, arrangement of schedule and accurate execution of details.

It is our purpose to create advertising which shall be recognized and complimented for its unusual force, selling power, strength and resultfulness. We confess that behind our work is the determination to make our advertising stand apart as something of a better kind—the best that can be had.

MacIntyre
Advertising Co.

Into our advertising we have worked all the devices of persuasion, logic and allurement; we have captured attention with splendid illustrations; we have utilized every art exercised by the skilled salesman, and then, to crown our work, we have inspired every advertisement with a spirit of enthusiasm; we have woven into words a tingling, living argument, which makes cold type leave a warm, active impulse on the brain.

Most of the really big enterprises, the enterprises which are so important that no possible risk can be taken, the enterprises that require business sagacity, level judgment, brilliant campaigning and successful execution—these enterprises now are, and for six years have been, clients of the MacIntyre Advertising Co.

We could lower our prices by lowering our standard and, perhaps, make more net profit.

But we prefer to build on the solid rock of real merit.

Occasionally we are offered accounts which we cannot, in justice to ourselves, afford to accept.

We are, however, always glad, always anxious to talk over the subject of advertising with any business man.

After all, the cost of our service is so low, a small fraction of an advertising appropriation, that it hardly seems necessary to mention that our charges are slightly higher than others.

It is our conscientious aim to concentrate the full strength of our organization on the advertising of every client—to be as eager for your success as you are—to pull for your success with every ounce of our power.

If you don't believe in buying cheap medicine, if you don't consult a cheap lawyer, if you don't wear out-of-date clothes, why not have your advertising managed by the MacIntyre Advertising Co., acknowledged by every impartial newspaper man to be the most successful agency in Los Angeles?

Would you not be satisfied if we presented YOUR proposition with as much strength and conviction as the above?

Soap Makes Vast Fortun

Western Company Actually Owns a Soap M Which Reduces Cost Almost to Nothing—Enormous Profits for Stockholders—Small Investors Can Buy Ttock and Be Protected.

Some interesting statistics have come to light on the consumption of household necessaries. For example, it is estimated that about $100,000,000 worth of soap is used up annually by Americans—over $7,000,000 a month, or $250,000 a day. This is based on the fact that there are 20,000,000 families in the United States, and that, conservatively, each family spends on on an average of 35 cents a month for soap

From a merchandising standpoint this is especially interesting because, unlike many other commodities, these millions do not represent the mere purchase price of an article that lasts for months or years, but soap is bought and rebought every few days. Merchants know what it is to deal in articles that once bought are quickly used up, only to be rebought again.

The meaning of it is shown in such millionaire firms as Proctor & Gamble, Fairbanks, Kirk, Babbits, Pears, etc. The fact that all the big packing houses manufacture soap is a good indication of the profit there is in it. Recently a plot of ground was discovered out in Nebraska from which a soap is being made that is better, purer, and cheaper than any other soap ever made. All other soaps are artificial soaps, this is a natural soap. It comes from a "soap mine."

Strange as it may seem, there actually is a soap mine, though, so far as known this is the only one. It was found near the town of Orleans in Nebraska, several years ago. The finders thought it was simply a peculiar earth formation, but a strict analysis proved it to be a lava deposited there by a geyser extinct for perhaps centuries. This is a geological and scientific fact.

Experiments proved that the lava had saponacious qualities, and tests showed that it could easily be converted into a very powerful cleansing soap that had, in fact, genuine medical properties as well. It was, for example, very antiseptic.

The Omaha Bee, the leading newspaper of Nebraska, says of the finding of this soap mine:

"Colorado capitalists bought the property outright, and they thus control the only soap mine known. They have taken thousands of dollars' worth of soap out of the very earth, and it seems reasonable that fortunes will be made from it in the years to come. Among the prominent Coloradoans who interested themselves financially in the mine are Frank A. Joslin, a well known Denver merchant; Hon. Harper M. Crahood, a leading member of the Colorado bar; Lieutenant Governor Parks, President Daly of the Capital Life Insurance company; F. G. Bonfils, publisher of the Denver Post; Crawford Hill, publisher of the Denver Republican; United States Marshall Bailey, and many others. It will thus be seen that the company has considerable standing, and that there must be a substantial basis of fact. These men could not afford to be involved in anything that was not genuine.

"The firm controlling the property is the Geyserite Manufacturing company, Forty-First and Blake Streets, Denver, Colo. The company manufactures from this lava a toilet soap known as 'Geyserite' soap, which already has a very wide use, though it has only been on the market for about fifteen years, and the sales were never forced. Those who visited the Chicago World's Fair may remember the unique exhibit the company had and the awards of merit it received.

"Other soap manufacturers have to buy all their ingredients in the open market. The fats and oils that go to make up the average soap are expensive. The Colorado concern, owning as it does, a soap mine, is able to avoid the expense for material that confronts other soap manufacturers. The geyserite, which forms the greater part of every cake of 'Geyserite' soap, costs practically nothing, as the supply is limitless and the property was bought at a very low figure. more, the raw material can be ited in the Denver factory than one-half cent a pound.

"From this it will be seen the profits of the company must be ous. The market is world America alone, as outlined above $100,000,000 worth of soap in a year. There is no reason should not use more Geyserite than any other kind, as, in the fact that it costs very manufacture, it is the only pure soap on the market. The pany has recently issued a which the complete analysis and this shows clearly that this remarkable soap. The fact that used all over America today, through one person telling about it, proves conclusively has remarkable merit.

"The company, however, has that stage in its development it must spread out. It must larger factory and get more $100,000,000 spent annually for It will take increased capital, secure this capital some must be made.

"At the present time the capacity is only 20,000 They want to increase this to 100,000 a day. This can only by publicity. To push to give publicity to your publicity or advertising It also means that more be put on the road. Such require capital, but the capital comes back with large the increased sale of the order to get more capital the plant, the present the Geyserite Manufacturing pany will sell some of their the public, and in order to proposition attractive to the vestor, the stock can be had low par at the present

"The par value of the per share; it can be cents a share until Oct. After that date the advances to 35 cents; now can make a clean cent, and as dividends the par value of the unreasonable to profit should be 100 desiring to invest with the executive pany at 61st and Colo. Ask all the look into the matter point. Investigate the present stockholders. issues a booklet ness that makes A copy can be had by company.

"We know of no better ever offered to the general Here is a soap company. The supply of limitless. It makes the best manufactured. If any reader paper has never used 'Geyserite' he can receive a sample by to the company. The and entire plant in mine, are owned outright by pany, as well as patents, etc. It can manufacture a than was ever before made, small cost, and yet the each cake of soap will be the profit on any other market. It isn't every day son with $100 or $200 a partner in an established and-proven household in with such prominent professional men as are holders in this company.

"We cannot recommend the sition too highly to all stock can be had at a very and on small monthly convenient, and we believe invested will be amply looks certain to realize dends. We urge readers to company and see what they offer."

ENDEAVORERS' EMINENT GUEST.

Will Hold Institute Here Next Week.

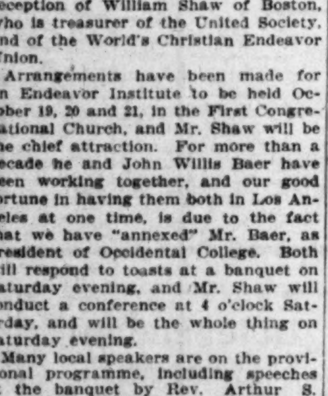
Speer's Many Engagements Keep Him Busy.

Speech Programme for the Baer Banquet.

Christian Endeavorers of the city are making elaborate preparations for the reception of William Shaw of Boston, who is treasurer of the United Society, and of the World's Christian Endeavor Union.

Arrangements have been made for an Endeavor Institute to be held October 19, 20 and 21, in the First Congregational Church, and Mr. Shaw will be the chief attraction. For more than a decade he and John Willis Baer have been working together, and our good fortune in having them both in Los Angeles at one time, is due to the fact that we have "annexed" Mr. Baer, as president of Occidental College. Both will respond to toasts at a banquet on Saturday evening, and Mr. Shaw will conduct a conference at 4 o'clock Saturday, and will be the whole thing on Saturday evening.

Many local speakers are on the provisional programme, including speeches at the banquet by Rev. Arthur S. Phelps and Paul C. Brown, the latter being president of the State Endeavor Union. Rev. T. C. Horton will speak on "The King's Business," on Friday evening, and will be followed by the principal address by Rev. Frank M. Dowling of Pasadena. On Saturday afternoon Capt. J. D. Fredericks will speak on "Christian Citizenship."



WILLIAM SHAW,
Treasurer U.S.C.E. and World's Christian Endeavor Union.

The institute will open on Friday evening, October 19, at 7:30, and on Saturday, sessions will be held at 9 a.m., 2 and 7:30 p.m., the banquet coming between the last two, at 6 p.m.

The new officers will be installed at the close of the evening session, by the State president.

A Junior rally will be held at 3 o'clock on Sunday afternoon, in the Sunday-school room, led by Miss Austermell, and at the same hour the main auditorium will be occupied by the Intermediates, under Leon M. Shaw.

A feature of all the sessions of the institute will be the chorus singing under the direction of John Brower of Chicago, who is well known here as an efficient leader.

SPEER AND BAER.

A STRENUOUS PAIR.

A strenuous time awaits the arrival of the eloquent Robert E. Speer in this city on Thursday morning, October 25, the day preceding his congratulatory address at the inauguration of John Willis Baer, as president of Occidental College.

Dr. Baer, himself a globe-trotter for missions, knows his man well, having been directly associated in work with him for years, and he knows just how much work can be piled on him without reaching the limit.

Immediately upon the arrival of the train on Thursday morning, he will be met by Dr. Baer and rushed to the University of Southern California, where he will address the student body at 9:30. At the close of this address the two will enter an automobile and will be driven to Claremont, thirty-six miles distant, where Dr. Speer will speak to the students of Pomona College before the noon adjournment. This done, they will proceed to the town of Pomona, several miles across the valley, where they will lunch, and then Mr. Speer will deliver the address at the installation of Rev. T. T. Creswell as pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Pomona. Thursday evening will find him in Pasadena, where he may possibly sleep that night.

On Friday morning he will be the principal speaker at the inauguration of Dr. Baer, and on the same night will be one of the speakers at a banquet to be given at the Westminster Hotel, this city.

No fixed engagements have yet come to light for Saturday, but Mr. Speer will find enough on Sunday to keep him busy. At the special request of Dr. Hugh K. Walker, pastor of Immanuel Presbyterian Church and chairman of the board of trustees of the college, Mr. Speer will occupy Dr. Walker's pulpit at the morning service; at 3 o'clock in the same church, a great union gathering of young people will be held, especially to hear Mr. Speer on the subject of missions; at 4 o'clock he will address a meeting of men under the auspices of the Y. M.C.A., which meeting Secretary Luther hopes to arrange for one of the theaters; at 7:30, if none of the machinery breaks, he will be in Pasadena, and will speak in the First Presbyterian Church.

On Monday morning he will take the first train for Chicago, just having had a taste of California climate, a la Baer.

Mr. Speer is one of the leading Presbyterians of the country, having for fifteen years been a secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions, in which field his success has been very great, bringing him into touch with the people of the entire continent. He is considered one of the most popular and forceful speakers to students to be found anywhere, and speaks in some college or university every Sunday.

He is a graduate of Princeton, coming out with the highest honors, and at the completion of his college course entered the theological seminary, but withdrew before graduation, and he has never been ordained as a minister. He has always refused to accept the pulpit of any church, though at least once in his life had had a most exceptional opportunity. Upon the death of the famous Dr. John Hall, pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York, no less a personage that the late D. L. Moody urged Mr. Speer to be ordained and take charge of that great congregation.

Dr. Baer said of him yesterday: "He has been my intimate associate and brother beloved for a long time. I consider him the prince of speakers, and never have met any one who has a greater intellectual equipment or greater spiritual power."

BANQUET TO DR. BAER.

AFTER-DINNER PROGRAMME.

The managers of the banquet to be tendered to Dr. John Willis Baer, on the evening following his inauguration as the president of Occidental College, will be an event of great interest. The host is the Presbyterian Laity Association of Southern California, and the function will be celebrated at the Westminster Hotel on the evening of October 26. The full programme following the dinner is as follows:

Invocation by Rev. Dr. H. A. Newell, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Hollywood; address of welcome to Dr. Baer on behalf of the Presbyterians of Southern California, Dr. H. K. Walker, pastor of Immanuel Presbyterian Church; greeting from representatives of colleges: David Starr Jordan, president of Leland Stanford, Jr. University; George F. Bovard, president of the University of Southern California; E. C. Norton, dean of Pomona College; C. E. Tibbits, president of Whittier College; greeting from the University Club of Los Angeles, Dr. Walter Lindley; Greetings from the people of the State, Hon. Frank P. Flint, United States Senator for California; response, Dr. John Willis Baer; address, Robert E. Speer, secretary of Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions; music, Occidental College Glee Club.

Guests of honor other than speakers: Lyman Stewart, O. T. Johnson, Dr. E. O. Moore, Superintendent of Public Schools of Los Angeles; Dr. James F. Millspaugh, president of the State Normal, Los Angeles; Hon. Thomas F. Bard; Dr. W. S. Young, late acting president of Occidental College.

MYSTERY OF A PAINTED ANKLE.

MRS. SWANSEN WRITES THAT IT IS TRULY SPRAINED.

Explains Why Swansen Told Judge Her Ankle Was Blackened—Throws Hot Bouquet at Youthful Prosecutor Who Took a Peek—Says Ankle Is There to Speak for Itself.

Still is the same suspicion of mystery about the ankle of Mrs. A. Swansen of No. 1448 San Fernando street. Her husband says that it is painted; Mrs. Swansen now writes to The Times that it is not painted.

Was it ever painted?

The latest indications at the time of going to press are that Mrs. Swansen's shapely ankle is NOT painted—at least at present—unless it be with iodine. In iodine only can there be a solution to the chaste remarks made to a police judge Friday by Mr. Swansen, and the iteration of his charming wife anent that self-same ankle.

Mrs. Swansen's bright letter follows:

> To the Editor of The Times: Sir—I read in your morning issue of today rather a startling announcement respecting my alleged "lampblacked ankle." Permit me through the medium of your valuable paper to say that through Mr. Curry's ungallant action while he was in a state bordering on intoxication, I have been confined to my room for three days, and I am compelled to remain there for the present.
> Fortunately for myself and my injured ankle it is not Mister Swansen who gives his undivided attention to me, but bestows it upon the kind, benevolent watchmaker, Mister Curry, who in return for such fidelity finds a good supply of alcohol for the consumption of both.
> The reason I raised Mr. Curry's rent was because I wished to be quit of him upon my property; because he was using the premises, No. 1448 San Fernando street, for purposes which were not in accordance with morality during the silent hours of the night; and having a wife living in San Francisco.
> Apparently the Deputy City Prosecutor who came to enquire the reason of my absence at the hearing yesterday does not know his business. I showed him my bruised and swollen ankle, and he pronounced it unfit for use for the next fourteen days; apparently he has a defective memory, or he should consult an optician and have his defective eyesight catered for. Thanking you kindly for an early insertion.
> [Signed] MRS. A. SWANSEN.

LOSES ELDEST SON.

Rev. L. M. Walters Receives Word of the Death of E. H. Walters in Council Bluffs.

Friends of the Rev. Luther M. Walters (retired,) a local elder of the Westlake Methodist Episcopal Church in Los Angeles, will be sorry to learn of the loss Rev. Mr. Walters has just sustained in the death of his eldest son, who died Friday at Council Bluffs, Iowa. Edwin H. Walters was 45 years old, the eldest of eight children born to Rev. and Mrs. Walters, all of whom survive him.

Only a few days ago Rev. Walters returned to Los Angeles from a trip to Council Bluffs made purposely to see his son, who was then seriously sick but was much better and on the high road to recovery when his father left. Now comes word of his death.

Mr. Walters was born in Sullivan county, Indiana, July 24, 1861, and while still a boy entered the employ of the Brunham, Tulleys Banking Company of Council Bluffs. Here he rose from office boy until at the time of his death he was head of the old firm under the name of Walters & Wadsworth. The funeral will be today in charge of the Elks of the Council Bluffs Lodge, of which Mr. Walters was Exalted Ruler.

VOLUME STIRS FRANCE.

"Recollections" of Von Hohenlohe Throw Sidelight in German Policies Toward the Gauls.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

PARIS, Oct. 13.—The revelations resulting from the publication in Germany of the late Chancellor Von Hohenlohe's "Recollections" continue to make a great stir in France on account of the sidelights thrown upon German policies toward the republic, and today, in connection with the centenary tomorrow of the battle of Jena, which opened the gates of Berlin to the victorious French army, the newspapers here are filled with articles on the subject.

The general verdict is that Emperor William's determination for dismissing Prince Bismarck for counselling infidelity to Germany's ally Austria was highly honorable to the Emperor, but nevertheless entailed grave consequences. The Republique Francaise points out that Bismarck's object was to repair the bad effects of his policy at the Berlin congress by insisting on a renewal of the secret "reinsurance" arrangement with Russia previously existing, despite the Austrian alliance.

Emperor William, the paper adds, threw Russia into the arms of France, thus becoming responsible for the diplomatic situation of which he now complains and which he vainly attempted to modify by his bold stroke of policy at Tangier.

CLEARS HONOR; WINS A BRIDE.

CHICAGO YOUNG MAN EMERGES FROM LEGAL ORDEAL.

Accused of Kiting Check for Quarter of Million Dollars on Bankers Who Trusted Him, Fiancee Makes His Acquittal Price of Her Love and Hand.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Samuel W. Hoffheimer, nephew of Nelson Morris the millionaire packer, was found not guilty today of defrauding Simon Straus of Straus Bros., bankers, of $250,000. The jury returned the verdict in Judge Kersten's court.

There was a wild demonstration by Hoffheimer's friends when the jury filed into the courtroom and the verdict was read because the young man, besides winning his freedom, won a bride.

Miss Ethel Jacobs, declared to be the most beautiful Jewess in Chicago, had promised to marry him if he proved his innocence.

The ending of the trial was one of the most peculiar and romantic ever known in the criminal court. As Assistant State's Attorney John Newcomer made his closing argument for the State, accusing Hoffheimer of having "kited" checks and defrauded Straus Bros., bankers, who trusted him in business, Hoffheimer took a pencil from his pocket and wrote a love letter to Miss Jacobs, who lives at Forty-seventh street and St. Lawrence avenue. In this letter he assured Miss Jacobs that despite the strong plea of the prosecutor he would be acquitted and that he would call on her as soon as he could leave the courtroom.

TROUBLES ARE INCREASING.

Conflict Between Church and State Becomes More Keen in Spain—Five Bishops Ignored.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

MADRID, Oct. 13.—The conflict between church and state is constantly growing more intense. Minister of Justice Romanones proposes that the bishops who, by virtue of their position, are Senators, interpellate the government on the question of the civil marriages at the reassembling of Parliament, October 20.

The government has declined to acknowledge the receipt of the communication from the five bishops who recently met at Burgos and sent a message to the government violently protesting against the "anti-Christian movement" and announcing that they will not obey laws which violate the rights of the church.

DENIES HIS DISMISSAL.

Mexican Consul at St. Louis Declares He Has Received no Notice of Discharge.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 13.—Rafael R. Serrano, Mexican Consul in St. Louis, when seen today said he had not been notified of his dismissal by President Diaz of Mexico. The published dispatch from the City of Mexico was the first intimation he had of any friction between the Mexican officials and himself.

"I have received no notification of having been dismissed by the Mexican government. The charges contained in the dispatch are ridiculous. The only grievance the Mexican officials could possibly have against me was that I may not have been active enough in suppressing the publishers of 'Regeneracion.' I don't know who they are."

this day of the horseless carriage, the fireless cook stoves, and automatic this and that, are we to have the "girlless" telephone?

Even the telephone people themselves are divided on this score. The Home company, with the new automatic machines which it is putting in, announces that it will shortly have several dozens of girls of assorted sizes, shapes and styles ready to put upon the matrimonial market. The management says that soon it will have nothing more for the girls to do when the automatic 'phone is installed, and the inference is that the whole batch of girls, and they are, for the most part, charming young things, will soon be out hunting a husband and making quick connections with dinners and suppers instead of plugging in on the accustomed switchboard.

NO "GIRLLESS" 'PHONE.

On the other hand, Division Manager John Lawrence and District Manager C. M. Seeley of the Sunset company as emphatically declare that the telephone girl is here to stay, and that no voiceless, inanimate thing of metal, wound with copper wires and filled with magnetos, can ever take the place of the much-abused and little-appreciated "hello girl."

An official of the company said the other day: "Practical experience has demonstrated to the satisfaction of the management that the public prefers a live operator, capable of giving reasons when things go wrong, to any mechanical device yet invented, and we are not experimenting with nor intending to install any form of automatic telephone, as has been erroneously reported.

"In fact, the company is on the lookout for capable young women, who desire to perfect themselves in a calling offering unusual opportunities for advancement."

It is considered probable, therefore, that the Sunset people may take over all or a good part of the Home girls when they may be turned out from their present "Home" by the automatic apparatus.

The gigantic strides made by the telephone business in Los Angeles have been such that it would not be at all out of the way to predict that the Sunset company would be able to make room for all of the girls of the other company within a short time after their being let out of their present positions.

KNOW A GOOD THING.

Twenty-four years ago there were ninety-one telephones in Angeles. Today there are approximately 50,000, or one 'phone for every five persons in the city, all connected with the main and sub-offices and operating within the city limits.

In view of this mighty increase in numbers within such a comparatively short time, Division Manager John Lawrence of the Sunset company has in his possession a relic which he holds priceless. This is the only existing copy of the first telephone directory every published in Los Angeles. Through the kindness of Mr. Lawrence the first page of this interesting relic is here reproduced for the first time. There are but ninety-one 'phones listed in all. The directory, which was composed of but four pages, covers and all, did not boast of any "A" names, and began well down in the "B's" with Broderick.

Must the "hello" girl really go? In this day of the horseless carriage, the fireless cook stoves, and automatic this and that, are we to have the "girlless" telephone?

Even the telephone people themselves are divided on this score. The Home company, with the new automatic machine which it is putting in, announces that it will shortly have several dozens of girls of assorted sizes, shapes and styles ready to put upon the matrimonial market. The management says that soon it will have nothing more for the girls to do when the automatic 'phone is installed, and the presumption is that the whole batch of them, and they are, for the most part, charming young things, will soon be hunting a husband and making connections with dinners and dances instead of plugging in on the old-fashioned switchboard.

NO "GIRLLESS" 'PHONE.

On the other hand, Division Manager John Lawrence and District Manager C. M. Seeley of the Sunset company as emphatically declare that the telephone girl is here to stay, and that no voiceless, inanimate thing of metal, wound with copper wires and filled with magnets, can ever take the place of the old-fashioned and little-appreciated "hello girl."

An official of the company said the other day: "Practical experience has demonstrated to the satisfaction of the management that the public prefers a live operator, capable of giving reasons when things go wrong, to any mechanical device yet invented, and we are not experimenting with nor intending to install any form of automatic telephone, as has been erroneously reported.

"In fact, the company is on the lookout for capable young women, who desire to perfect themselves in a calling of unusual opportunities for advancement."

It is considered probable, therefore, that the Sunset people may take over quite a good part of the Home girls when they may be turned out from their present "Home" by the automatic system.

The gigantic strides made by the telephone business in Los Angeles have been such that it would not be at all out of the way to predict that the Sunset company would be able to make room for all of the girls of the other company within a short time after their being let out of their present positions.

KNOW A GOOD THING.

Twenty-four years ago there were ninety-one telephones in Angeles. Today there are approximately 50,000, or one 'phone for every five persons in the city, all connected with the main and branch offices and operating within the city limits.

In view of this mighty increase in business within such a comparatively short time, Division Manager John Lawrence of the Sunset company has in his possession a relic which he values as priceless. This is the only existing copy of the first telephone directory published in Los Angeles.

Through the kindness of Mr. Lawrence the first page of this interesting relic is here reproduced for the first time. There are but ninety-one 'phones listed in all. The directory, which was composed of but four pages, covers and all, does not boast of any "A" names, but starts well down in the "B's" with Broderick.

Compared with the facility for getting connections today the crudity of the old-time system seems little better than sending one's messages by boy. For instance, all of the 'phones then were wall machines. There was no such thing as a desk 'phone, and the 'phone was usually bolted to the office wall somewhere, and a sound tight booth built about it.

HAD TO "HOLLER."

It was not possible then to carry on a conversation over a telephone without the principals giving an imitation of Megaphone Cook, announcing the events at a prize fight. This not only made impossible the privacy of a telephonic conversation, but it was at the same time extremely annoying to other members of the office force. And as for residence 'phones, no one would have dared talk over the wires after the other members of the family nad gone to bed. So the booth was provided to herd the noise inside, and get it safely conveyed through the little hole in the middle of the small square, wooden box which served as transmitter.

There was no taking down the receiver, murmuring the number to a nimble-eared girlykins at the central office, and speaking immediately to your "party." Not so, for formality of talking by 'phone in those good old days was aggravated by the cranking process which made a polite conversation or a business call more closely resemble the woe of a luckless automobilist struggling with a fractious motor.

Even to attract the attention of central and apprise her of your real intentions in the matter, it was necessary to ring twice, or to give "two bells," as it was called. Then central would make the connection and tell you to go ahead and do all the damage you could. You knew by that that you were at liberty to begin cranking for dear life in an attempt to attract the attention of Jones at the other end of the line, and bring him running to stop the insistent spluttering of his bell.

THE WINDLASS SCHEME.

If, as it frequently happened, Jones didn't happen to be in, you would twist the handle off the crank, and finally kick the apparatus down from the wall in your exasperation at the contemptuous silence which answered you back from the mocking receiver.

So it was with the first phones put in here, less than twenty-five years ago. It is different now, and yet it is possible that we are not sufficiently appreciative of the immensely better service the telephone people are giving.

Thre are a number of names on that old first telephone directory which have long since become household terms in the upbuilding and development of Los Angeles. William Broderick was one of the first insurance men to come to the pueblo. Jacob Baruch managed to keep the same number that he started with, "63," until a few years ago. The Confidence Engine Company was practically the whole of the fire department. The Coulter Dry Goods Company is set down on an inside page for Nos. 30 and 32 Main street.

J. M. Griffith, the lumberman, has fought all attempts to change his number, and today has the same number, Main 3, that was printed opposite his name in this first diminutive father of telephone directories. The Southern Pacific offices have No. 1. The police headquarters on Spring street, Henry King chief, carried the number then that they do today, Main 30, only then there were no prefixes.

The Mirror office had its telephone, and its place of business is given as No. 9 Temple.

WATCHED IT GROW.

John Lawrence was at that time superintendent of the company, and he is today very proud of this first telephone directory. He has remained continuously with the company ever since its organization here, and has watched over it and assisted in its growth from the crude little "central" which started business in the little Mexican pueblo, to the great and up-to-date system which is today such an important factor in the business and social life of the city.

Those who are best able to judge declare that the commendation for the marked success of the company lies very much with Mr. Lawrence and C. M. Seeley, who entered the employ of the company under Lawrence, when a mere youngester, about twenty years ago.

The first telephone exchange occupied a small space in the old Baker block on North Main street. The equipment consisted of a small switchboard and the long-distance lines necessary to connect the more thickly settled portions of Southern California. These long-distance lines ended upon ordinary eighty-ohm telephone bells of different tone, and it was necessary for the operator to familiarize herself with the different sounds of the bells in order to know what town was calling.

The succession of moves to larger quarters was not long delayed. From six rooms in the I. W. Hellman building at No. 117 North Main street, the move was made to the Second-street building, soon outgrown and now the home of the Union League Club.

STILL REACHING OUT.

Then it soon became a question of establishing substation after substation, until the company has today a whole circuit of branch offices and switchboards extending in an unbroken chain about the whole city.

The latest and present central offices of the Sunset Company were erected six years ago at No. 622 South Hill street. According to plans at that time drawn, it was thought the building would be large enough to answer the needs of the company for many years to come. But even at this early date it is apparent that the time is not far distant when the cenral offices must be considerably enlarged to handle the rapidly growing volume of business.

In all of the offices the conditions are the pleasantest possible in order to make the quarters bright and cheery for the young women who work there night and day under greater stress than the average user of the telephone ever realizes.

Taking into consideration this feature which makes for good service, the company makes every effort to secure bright, intelligent young women for operators, and surrounds them with every comfort, including a rest room in care of a motherly matron, and with hot lunches prepared in the building.

Besides it gives the young women the assurance that their jobs are not likely soon to be ruthlessly cut off in favor of a machine with a dial which you push back and forth with your fingers, and from which one can derive no satisfaction in scolding.

MISS FITCH ENGAGED.

Mr. and Mrs. Theodore G. Fitch of No. 920 Carondelet street announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Lizabeth Fitch, to Charles P. Halfhill. The marriage, which will be a quiet home affair, will take place in the near future.

DEATH OF MRS. STANSBURY.

The death of Mrs. S. J. Stansbury at a late hour Friday night removes one of the pioneer residents of Los Angeles. Mrs. Stansbury, with her late husband, who died two years ago, and their family of children, came to Los Angeles to reside in 1884, and were among the staunch citizens of the city. Mrs. Stansbury had been in failing health for several months. The funeral service, conducted by her pastor, Dr. Robert McIntyre, will take place this afternoon at the family residence, No. 1052 Florida street, at 2 o'clock. Mrs. Stansbury was the mother of Charles Stansbury, the contractor; Miss May Stansbury, the principal of the Tenth-street school; Miss Minnie Stansbury, also a teacher in the public schools, and of George Stansbury.

THE HOTEL HOLMES.

Six-Story Concrete Building Near Westlake Park to Cost Over Quarter Million.

The beautiful illustration herewith represents the hotel the intention of building which was reported in The Times months ago, the day after the lot was bought. The plans have been somewhat slow in taking shape, but are now in a way to be realized at once.

The site of this hotel is to be the southeast corner of Sixth street and Westlake avenue, a beautiful sightly situation in the very heart of a section almost filled to repletion with handsome homes and beautiful hotels. The building will be six stories. The plans had been to make it five, but these have been changed at the last moment before beginning work, and the edifice will now be a full six-story structure. It will be of concrete and built in the most solid manner known to the architectural art. No newspaper illustration can begin to do credit to the beautiful lines and artistic appearance which this fine hotel will present. The plans have been prepared by Otto N. Neher, and reflect exceedingly great credit upon his artistic taste.

This building will be erected by F. H. Holmes, a capitalist, from Minneapolis, Minn., and the hotel will bear his name.

As noted at the time of the purchase of the lot, the ground is of abundant amplitude, being 171x250 feet. It is just one block east of the corner of Westlake Park, about 200 feet. The main dimensions of the hotel will be 160x190 feet. The hotel will face south, with two great wings running southward from the central portion of the building, giving ample sunlight and circulation of air to the whole building. The court between the wings is 65 feet wide by 140 feet deep, with a broad walk leading up from the street sidewalk to the main entrance of the hotel. On both sides of these there will be established beautiful parking with rare flowers and shrubbery.

This hotel will contain 240 rooms, and they will be divided into 150 suites. Some of these will have a kitchen, even with a single room. Every suite of rooms in the house will have its own bay window and they will all have sunlight. Of course in a hotel of this class, every suite of rooms has its own private bath-room.

At the end of the broad court across the central portion of the building there will be a veranda, and back of this a lobby 50x100 feet. The staircase and elevators will run from this lobby, and at one end of it will be a great fireplace bespeaking abundant comfort on such evenings as Los Angeles may be visited with a little nip of cold weather. On the other end is a platform for the orchestra to entertain the guests with music.

The illustration here, inadequate as it is to represent the beautiful lines of this building, yet shows that it is constructed in what is known as the French Renaissance style of architecture. It is a style almost universally used in the largest cities of the world today for the most fashionable and comfortable hotels.

This hotel may cost as much as $300,000. The plans and drawings are all finished, with their specifications, and the architect is ready to receive bids.

GIVES MUCH TO CHARITY.

Widow of "Sam" Lewis, Famous Money Lender, Leaves Millions to Needy Jews and Others.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

LONDON, Oct. 13.—By the death of Mrs. "Sam" Lewis-Hill, widow of "Sam" Lewis, the welll-known money-lender, about $15,000,000 will be distributed in charitable bequests. In accordance with the will of "Sam" Lewis, who died in 1901, his whole fortune was left to his widow for life, besides which she was given outright $5,000,000, much of which, presumably, will go to her second husband, Lieut. Hill of the Scots Guards.

King's Hospital fund comes in for a large sum. Besides a specific amount, $1,250,000, the hospital gets about $3,000,000 out of the residue of the estate. About $7,000,000 goes to establishing dwellings for the poor, the sum of $750,000 is devoted to the relief work of the Jewish poor and Jewish hospitals and colleges, and $875,000 goes to other hospitals, while a number of other charities get good legacies.

Lewis was the most famous man in England in his business. His transactions were enormous, and his clients were among the highest personages in the land. He was shrewd and hard, but absolutely honest. He used to say his motto was "I lend to the Lord and to the poor," and it is now claimed that his princely bequests seem to prove the truth of his words.

CLOSE CALL FROM DEATH.

Man Tossed Into Air by Train Grabs Engine Smokestack and Hangs Safely Till Rescued.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 13.—A dispatch to the Tribune from Rock Island, Ill., says presence of mind in clutching and holding to the smokestack of an engine yesterday saved Morris Herbrandt of Edington, Ill., from being ground to pieces under the wheels of the train at Milan, Ill., today. As it was he escaped with a bad shaking up and some cuts and bruises.

Herbrandt was driving a team hitched to a farm wagon. He did not see the train, and the horses were on the tracks before the driver noticed his danger.

The wagon was struck squarely and dumped to one side of the track. Herbrandt was thrown twenty feet in the air and turned over and over. He fell on top of the boiler and managed to embrace the smokestack and hold on till the train was brought to a standstill.

FORMING MINING EXCHANGE.

Merchants, Owners and Investors of Los Angeles Will Organize to Secure Nevada's Trade.

The articles published lately in The Times, calling the attention of local merchants to the great opportunities of trade with Nevada mining towns, have resulted in a movement to form a mining exchange or some similar organization to make Los Angeles the headquarters of mining men and investors.

Petitions are being circulated asking merchants and mining men to hold a meeting for the forming of an association to foster the mining industry and its commerce.

Many signatures are being received and indications point to the formulation of plans that will secure to this city almost all of the commerce of the Southern Nevada mines.

The management of the Hollenbeck Hotel has offered the use of the hotel parlors for the meetings during the organization of the exchange.

This Great Store, Made Possible by Its Remarkable Price Advantages, Is the Marvel of the Furniture World

No Extra Charge for Credit

Do not forget that little as our prices are, they are the prices at which we sell. We do not tack on an extra charge for credit. A liberal time allowance is yours and welcome.

Day by day we are getting settled. The task is not an easy one. This great crystal palace has more floor space than any other two Los Angeles furniture stores combined. Our magnificent show windows would alone constitute an ordinarily good-sized store. The displays on the ground floor are now assuming shape. We wish you to call and see the work we have done and are doing. You will be welcome even if you do not wish to buy. It will do you good to ride up in the elevator and cast your eyes over this vast expanse of furniture, covering six immense floors. You will see more house furnishings here than you ever saw before in one store at one time in this city. Every article has been carefully and consistently selected. No matter what your taste dictates or your purse suggests, you will find it here in the design to please you and at a price to save you money. We are living up to our old time-honored claim that our credit price is lower than others' cash price. A visit will convince you.

Beautiful Brass and Iron Beds

Handsome Line to Choose From Now

Without any exception our assortment of brass and iron beds comprises the greatest variety ever shown in this city. As a branch of the most powerful purchasing syndicate on the coast, we are enabled to step in and take the entire output of the factory when necessary. We save all middlemen's profits, handing our customers the difference in the way of lower prices.

An Elegant Brass Bed for $27.50

A piece of furniture destined to bring the utmost pleasure to its purchaser. A very handsome brass bed with massive 2-inch posts; choice of high polish or satin finish, and one of the kind other stores would price at $45, this week at this store $27.50, either cash or credit.

Extensive Display of New Roll Top Desks

We have stocked the new store with a line of roll-top desks second to no other in Los Angeles. The entire mezzanine floor is given up to desks, and we have them in every standard size and all of late design—not an old-style desk in the lot.

A Very Fine Roll-Top

Solid, finely-finished, beautiful golden oak desk, worth more money at any other store. Our price,

$14.50

Handsome Lines Fine Extenion Tables

New Stock Purchased For This New Store

If you need an extension table, or if you could use another one, it will certainly pay you to come in and look over our lines. The prices will surprise and please you. We have so many styles that it is difficult to select any particular ones for special mention. You will find that all are priced much lower than some stores might lead you to think possible. Out of the very many we choose one for this particular announcement.

Solid Oak Extension Table $4.75

This is of solid oak, it well built, in every way substantial, and of very graceful appearance. It is the kind ordinarily sold for $8. It is a bargain at our price. If you happen to need the chairs to go with it, we have them, at a price that will certainly delight you. No matter what your wish may be in a table, if you come here you will find your true ideal.

Parlor and Other Chairs At Little Prices

We devote a large portion of our vast space to chairs, and aim to carry the best and most extensive lines in the city. We anticipated many wants in the finer grades as well as in those of a medium class. Whatever you wish you may depend on finding it here and saving money.

Morris Chairs Very Low

It is easy to find room in a household for a Morris Chair. Here is a choice of weathered or golden oak in pantasote for $6.75; the usual $10 Morris chair.

MESA INDIAN CHIEF IS DEAD.

Last of His Family, Tribe Nearly Extinct.

His Story of Old Ceremonies Is Still Preserved.

Pagan Rites Which Preceded Coming of Padres.

BY L. V. PIERCE.

"Homone—Sone!" ("It is over.") Such were the last painful words of realization uttered by Cinon Duro, last chief of the Mesa Grande Indians. The old man, near a century old, died on the Indian Reservation at Mesa Grande, a few days ago, leaving this fast-dying tribe forever chiefless. Long ago old Cinon's sons died. There are but few of the old generation left, and the Indian, as he lay suffering, realized to the full the fate of the tribe, and its near extinction.

He has been not only the heart of the tribe, but the memory and the intellect as well. "Cantadoro," Singer of the People, he was called, and customs and traditions by others long since forgotten, were treasured and remembered and practiced and taught by him to the unheeding younger generation.

These symbolic old customs are of tremendous interest to the ethnologist. Out of the old Chief's vast storehouse a few are preserved by the whites. Cinon Duro, unlike most Indians, did, at rare intervals, tell his reminiscences to his white friends, the old residents of Mesa Grande, who have given freely to the old man and pitied his dying race.

HISTORIC CEREMONIES.

Especially, his narration of the tribal ceremonies on the entrance of the young braves and maidens into the tribe, are of historic interest; these rites were done away with, with the establishment of the mission at Santa Ysabel by Father Gregorio, and Cinon Duro was the only Indian who still remembered these half-pagan, mystical festivals that date back to those freer, happier days before the padres came.

The young braves, in those old tribal days, were initiated into the tribe and manhood at the age of 17, when the great white lilac Tolvacho (jimpson) flowers were in bloom, and the moon stood at the full.

The Tolvacho blossom has a special symbolic meaning to the Indian, and its flowers are sacred. The brown walls of the fiesta ramada were covered with the great lilac blossoms, and the earthern floor was decorated with strange symbols wrought in colored clays, red, yellow and white, in which were imbedded to help out the design, bits of bright-tinted stones. The grotesque figures so painstakingly executed represented the relations of the young braves to the world and symbolically outlined hisc duties.

A huge serpent figured largely in the decoration; its spotted body encircled the whole ramada, and where head and tail met were arranged moonstones in a compact design. The moonstone was the tribal stone, as the Tolvacho was the flower, the two to the Indian, seeming to resemble each other. The serpent in all the Mesa Grande Indian legends means terror and punishment, hints, in this case, of the fate of the young brave if he failed in his duties.

CHIEF CINON DURO, last head of the Mesa Grande Indian tribe, who has passed away at Mesa Grande.

For three days and three nights a great feast was held, in which the women took no part; at the height of the mad festivities the Tolvacho Cup, as it was called, was given to each of the young braves. This was a thick drink brewed from the great pale flowers. It produces a weird effect on the drinker, a strange muscular intoxication. The young men, to the clamor of uncouth instruments and solemn chanting of the tribe, wove themselves into a fantastic dance, leaping to wild heights in the red firelight, and howling as if to challenge their future fate. Not until the potency of the uncanny herb had been exhausted did the wild rhythm and wilder bodily contortions cease.

The young men at this point fell into a troubled sleep of utter exhaustion. But not yet is the Tolvacho spell quite spent. The old tribesmen gravely ranged themselves beside the fallen young men to watch and listen. Their restless moans, their broken murmurs are all noted. Presently, one mentions, in his inconsequential babble, a tree, or a lion, a bobcat or a rabbit perhaps; he has settled his spiritual fate; that animal, the Tolvacho charm has decided for him, has become his totem, his guardian spirit, a creature to be protected and sheltered all the young man's life in return for this mystical shelter and overlooking.

Thus one old Indian at Mesa Grande told me that the bear was "his little brother," meaning his totem, or protector. This is the last feature of the young men's tribal presentaion; the youths had become full-grown tribesmen, and were allowed to rest in peace where they had fallen.

ORDEAL FOR WOMEN.

The fate of the Indian girl was by no means the same. She came into an unenviable birthdright of labor and renunciation and unquestioning submission the day she was born, and early realized it. At fourteen or fifteen, perhaps, she became a woman and entered the "Pit of Fire" to typify her long lot of renunciation. This pit had been dug six or eight feet deep, and lined with straw and white sage and heated with hot stones.

Here the young women were placed for three endless days, eating nothing except a little atole (a meal made from white sage and wild oats,) and concentrating their minds, presumably, on their future duties, while the tribe, above ground, lugubriously chanted legends about the fate of the unsubmissive. Around the pit had been traced in colored clays the same vengeful serpent, to typify the awful fate of the unfaithful.

The girl's probation term, however, lasted longer than three days, though she did escape from the pit. Symbolically speaking, she never did escape. The following year was one long renunciation. She lived only on the unpalatable atole meal, and it was a matter of rivalry between the young maidens as to how little of even this one could eat and still continue in the land of the living. The more ascetic her accomplishment during that first year, the more maidenly, the more suitable wife she was considered, since, to the brave, even in a wife, "sand" was desirable. Hence the tremendous rivalry.

BUYING HIS BRIDE.

Some fine day a young man came to the ramada of her mother, bearing gifts; long chains of bright seeds or shells, or, perhaps, a cloak cunningly built of rabbit skins. The maiden felt it all. She never looked up from her slow making of uchme thread; it would have been shockingly unmaidenly.

The mother inspected the gifts critically; if she thought them a sufficient rich prize she decided to dispense with her daughter and accepted the gifts, and the young man came to the girl, crouching on the floor at her endless task, and took her hand.

"Will you go with me to the ramada of my mother?" was the accustomed form of proposal.

And the girl, seeing her mother still eyeing the gifts of exchange with satisfaction, perforce submissively answered as she had been schooled, "If you will."

There was never any choice with the girl; she passed from her own mother's espionage to that of his, often a severer; often against her will, I take it, the smoldering hearts of those Indian girls of a century ago were in no wise different from less primitive ones of today—when it came down to essentials, or a woman's notion of them.

Probably in the days of feasting and celebration that followed there were suppressed tragedies then—as poignant if more silent—than the present-day tragedies of femininity. Perhaps it is as well that Old Cinon's day is over. His lament is only the lament of the sentimental ethnologist: "Homone—sone!"

PRIEST PAID FOR MARRIAGE.

Woman in Will Contest Declares Father Mackin Stated He Had Given Chicago Man $50,000.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 13.—A dispatch from Rock Island, Ill., says that the late Father Thomas Mackin said he had given $50,000 to C. A. Plamondon of Chicago to marry his present wife, who is a niece of the priest. This was the statement made by Mrs. Mary Crummie, wife of a nephew of Father Mackin, on the stand in the Circuit Court here yesterday.

Mrs. Crummie was a witness in a contest which has been brought by a number of the disinherited heirs to break the priest's will, which disposed of an estate valued at $200,000. She is not a party to the case, but her children are.

Father Mackin made his money in business in early life, and while he was connected with the church his estate grew. At the time he decided the nearest surviving relative was Mrs. Catherine McArdle, a sister, who died since the present case has been on trial.

Charles A. Plamondon said at his residence last night that Mrs. Plamondon's right to the legacy in Father Mackin's will was unquestioned—that the property really belonged to Mrs. Plamondon's father and that the priest held it in trust for her.

MANY VIEW ANCIENT BOOKS.

Collection of J. P. Morgan's Illuminated Manuscripts Contains Many from Middle Ages.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—A large number of people viewed the J. P. Morgan collection of illuminated manuscripts which was exhibited at Columbia University yesterday for the first time.

The manuscripts represented some of the rarest specimens of art in the Middle Ages. There are sixty-three volumes in all, representing nearly every country in Europe, and all of them are from 200 to 1200 years old.

The oldest are samples of the Christian art of the eighth century. One of them, a life of Christ, contains thirty full-page miniatures in brilliant coloring, in which gold predominates. The specimens of English painting contain a bestiary of the year 1150, with 500 miniatures of birds and beasts.

On Two Carloads of Oranges

Over $22,000 Net Selling Proceeds in One Season from 65 Acres of Orange Trees

I sold this season two carloads of Valencia Oranges for a total net profit of $2,282.90, as shown by the fac simile checks, herewith reproduced. The fruit was from my Suunshine grove at Uplands, comprising eighty acres of choice Navels and Valencias, chiefly navels.

My net selling receipts from this grove for the season of 1906 were over $22,000, most of which was from 65 acres; some fifteen acres being budded on 15-year old lemon stock, and just coming into bearing.

I market my fruit direct; employ the best help that money can secure, and give my orchards the best care possible, in order to get the most satisfactory results. It pays to do so.

I have one of the finest orange groves in Southern California for location, productiveness, equipment and other advantages, including CHEAP WATER AND PLENTY OF IT, and profit-making certainties, and I DO NOT HESITATE TO SAY SO PUBLICLY IN PRINT.

It may seem surprising that I offer such a money-making, ideal home property for sale, but my other interests, which are extensive, demand my whole time, and I cannot give this grove the attention and personal supervision which it must have.

This is indeed an exceptional opportunity to acquire a gentleman's home in Southern California under ideal conditions—in the best climate in the world, amid sunshine and flowers and oranges, a home that will and does repay intelligent care with enormous profit.

This grove is so located as to combine in the happiest manner the advantages of both city and country life. It commands a superb view of a mountain range whose peaks are capped with snow even in mid-summer. It is only 1 1-4 miles from two nice incorporated towns—Uplands and Ontario, and only three miles from Claremont, the college town of Southern California; it is only six miles from Pomona, a splendid city of 7500 inhabitants.

From Los Angeles it is only one hour's ride on the steam cars with three railroads to choose from. Electric railway communication with Los Angeles will surely be established in the near future; the surveys are already made, and the round trip will be about 50c.

Sunshine ranch is midway between Los Angeles and Riverside, connected by the finest automobile driveway in Southern California—only a thirty-mile ride. Electric cars run almost to the door, with 5-cent fare to either Ontario or Uplands, which have the best of schools, all denominations of churches, and both of which are prohibition towns. Good neighbors, telephone service, electric lights and all city conveniences.

The grove has a comfortable residence, a fine, large, new barn, and is equipped with the best of stock and machinery.

I have also a fine 20-acre home grove within city limits of Pomona, nearly in full bearing, with buildings, which is for sale.

COULD ANYTHING MORE BE ASKED BY ANYONE WANTING AN IDEAL HOME IN THE LAND OF SUNSHINE AND FLOWERS?

The surplus shown by the New York clearinghouse banks is due in the main to the distributing among the banks of the country of $26,000,000 by the Treasury Department. This distribution is said to be now fully accomplished and it remains to be seen how much surplus the stock speculations in New York will leave of this at the end of another week.

The money going into new building in the city for the week is less than average, and only 25 per cent. of that for the first week in October. The month today shows some increase over last year, but falls about $200,000 below both the years previous to last. The building to date now amounts to a little over $1,000,000 for the month.

Things appear to be going all right "'way down in Alabama." The Age-Herald of Birmingham shows that in thirty-nine counties in that State the increase of tax values comes to more than $22,000,000, and the complete returns will show an increase for the year of $30,000,000. The total taxable property of the State in six years has risen from a valuation of $270,000,000 to $374,000,000. Before the war, the taxable value of Alabama property was a little less than $256,500,000. It has taken all this time to reconstruct the State from an industrial point of view.

Deposits of individuals in the chartered banks of Canada have reached a total of $553,312,000, an increase of $9,000,000 in a month.

The United States Steel Corporation, on estimates based upon the business done up to the present time, claims that the earnings of the corporation for the year will total nearly $156,000,000. These are net earnings, which run from $36,000,000 to $40,000,000 each quarter.

A letter from London written by The Times special correspondent now in that city and published on Sunday, September 30, showed that the net revenue of the corporation of the city of London comes to $11,000,000 a year. What is the city of London? Not the London represented by the London County Council. The Wall Street Journal, commenting upon the revenue of the city of London, points out that the area is only equal to that of the end of Manhattan Island from the Battery to the City Hall. Scarcely so much. The city of London extends from Aldergate on the east to Temple Bar on the west, and from Aldergate on the north to London Bridge on the Thames. The city of London represents about one square mile. The real London has an area of about 350 square miles. If Greater London spent money as London city does, the sum would be most sensationally collossal, even in this day when hundreds of millions seem so little. This city of London, the smaller area, has an indebtedness amounting to about $31,000,000. That amounts to $1100 per head of the population.

The results of the United States census of manufactures recently issued among the bulletins of statistics show wonderful expansion in the State of New York in five years, 1900 to 1905. The capital invested and the value of goods produced is shown to have increased one-third. The increase in capital employed is $508,000,000, one-fourth of all the increase in this respect in the United States. In the six New England States this bulletin shows an increase of capital invested in manufactures amounting to $264,000,000, and in the Southern States of $575,000,000.

The moment the money market relaxes materially, the Japanese government will be out in the financial world with a new bond issue, amounting to $1,100,000,000. The purpose of this new bond issue is to refund bonds to an equal amount issued at 6 per cent. interest during the war with Russia. This war loan is redeemable during the year 1907. The bonds would have been already on the market were it not that financiers in New York and London have advised the Japanese commissioner to await a better condition of the money market.

The Brazilian government has enabled the coffee growers of that republic to secure a loan of $20,000,000 which is used in buying up about 2,000,000 bags of coffee. The purpose is to control the market in the Brazilian coffee crop and maintain a stable price throughout the crop year. To us in this country this looks a little like a combination in restraint of trade. It is certainly paternal government and looks as if the thing had gone to seed.

WOMEN'S CLUBS.

"Scotland" the Theme.

Federation Plans.

The annual meeting of the Los Angeles District Federation of Women's Clubs, over which Mrs. Oliver P. Bryant presides, will be convened November 21 and 22 in the Ebell Club rooms. Mrs. Frank Hyatt of Pomona is recording secretary of the federation, Mrs. R. W. Pridham of South Pasadena is corresponding secretary, Mrs. W. H. Johnson of Los Angeles is treasurer, and Mrs. E. B. Root serves as auditor.

"Soul of the Child."

The Cornwell-street Child-study Circle will meet Wednesday afternoon at 3:15. Mrs. Nico Beck Meyer will speak on "The Soul of the Child." All interested are invited to be present.

Officers Chosen.

Mrs. Mary Banning is the newly-chosen regent of Eschscholtzia Chapter, D.A.R., which met Thursday at the home of Mrs. W. E. Reed, No. 1418 Malvern avenue. Other officers chosen at this meeting are: Mr. W. W. McLeod, vice-regent; Mrs. William H. Fuller, recording secretary; Mrs. Freeman R. Cady, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Nathan Cott, treasurer; Mrs. J. W. Johnson, registrar; Mrs. H. C. Dillon, historian. Board members were named as follows: Mmes. H. S. Wright, C. E. Thom, W. B. Hemper, and H. C. Gooding. The chapter will be the guests of Mrs. Nathan Cole, Jr., at the Ebell Club-house November 6.

FOR CHORAL HALL OPENING.

Mrs. Robert J. Burdette will soon issue invitations to the number of between two and three hundred for a musicale and tea with which she will formally open Choral Hall of the new Temple Auditorium. The affair will be given Wednesday afternoon, November 7. Mrs. Burdette will be assisted by a number of prominent hostesses of Los Angeles and Pasadena and the event will be one of the most fashionable ones of the early fall season.

LEMONS BREAK PRICE RECORDS.

California Product Sells at Over Ten Dollars a Box.

New York Trade Shows Big Boom for Our Fruit.

Grapes and Oranges Gaining on Foreign Offerings.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 9.—California lemons broke the price record the past week and sold for $10.25 a box. This represents the feeling of buyers toward really good fruit. The market is bare of everything excepting Californias and as a result the sales are made at very high rates. One whole car sold at a range of $7.50 and $10.25 a box and another sold at $5.62 and $9.50 a box, making a record for sustained lemon prices which had never been equaled here, while the outside range was the highest figure ever known in this market for domestic lemons. It was, moreover, 25 cents higher than the highest figure for foreign lemons this year. Thus one sale not only broke the California price record, but also broke the season price record for all lemons offered.

The continued warm weather (October up to last Sunday has been as warm as June,) has created a stronger demand for lemons than usually happens at this season. The effect of the heat has been to create a strong market and everything offered, if the quality was at all desirable, has sold at a high range of values. The demand has been larger than the supply in numerous instances and buyers have been obliged to go away unsatisfied.

The foreign lemon supply is light, only 20,000 boxes being afloat for this port. The quantity here is also small and buyers will have to depend upon California offerings for the bulk of their stock until new crop Sicily lemons arrive. Just when they are coming is not known.

ORANGE PRICES STEADY.

Not much interest is shown in oranges beyond satisfying the routine demand which always exists. Prices range around the usual amounts at this season. Fancy Valencia lates are worth from $5 and $6.25 a box from store and choice at $3.75 and $4. Sales are chiefly in small lots, rarely more than one or two boxes. Buyers take only what their trade demands. And at this season that isn't much. A few navels are coming from cold storage, but that supply is practically exhausted and what are offered in that way are expensive and do not sell readily.

Jamaica oranges are selling under a good demand. For repacked in barrels from store the price range is from $5.00 to $5.50, though the outside figure is rarely reached. Boxes repacked are worked out $2.75 for 200s, $2.90 for 276s, and $3.00 for 150s in a small way. The quantity arriving is not large, but the market is better than it was last year. Buyers appear more anxious to secure supplies, and business, as a whole, is more active. Whether this will encourage importers so they will send for larger quantities or not remains to be seen. Probably their action will be governed largely by the arrival of Floridas and other competitive influences which will begin to assert themselves shortly.

The Almeria grape market has been disappointing so far. To begin with, all the original reports concerning the excellent quality of the fruit have been exaggerated, or false. Nearly all that has thus far come forward has been more or less poor, and this has cast suspicion upon all the rest. The effect has been to force prices down on all offerings. Many have not paid the expense of getting them here. During the past week there was a better feeling and prices moved up a shade on best stock. But even at the best there has been no evident desire of buyers to obtain fruit at high values regardless of what is to come or what has gone before.

GRAPES MORE ACTIVE.

The competition of California grapes is having its effect on the foreign market. The excellent quality of the California product this year and the relatively favorable prices at which these grapes have sold have contributed to largely increase the distribution and make them new friends where previously they had none. The market for domestic grapes improves steadily, each year showing a larger demand and wider distribution than the year previous. The outlook this year is more promising than ever, and many predict for the California grape a future as brilliant as the navel orange. The quantity of Almeria grapes now afloat for this market aggregates 84,000 barrels.

The California orange business in the New York market has made great strides during the past few years. Many dealers in New York confine their operations to California fruit alone, never touching any other variety. The number of dealers who will handle California fruit exclusively will increase under influences which now obtain in this market. Never before was there such harmony among the interests which control and handle the fruit.

The business on the part of receivers is conducted upon a totally different basis from what it has been. There is no attempt to cut prices and thus produce an artificial demand. There is no effort to make the other fellow sell at a loss and thus drive him out of business. All that has passed away and the market is conducted upon broader and more business-like lines.

NO MORE BICKERING.

All through the past season every operator worked with but one object in view: To obtain the best possible prices for his respective shippers, and this effort increased the profits from the sale of oranges beyond anticipation. Bickering and mud throwing appear to have ceased.

One of the largest factors in the field, and one of the most powerful influences in creating this harmonious feeling has been the California Fruit Growers' Exchange. The holdings of this organization have at all times been very large, yet it has never been domineering and has never attempted to dictate terms or conditions. When the largest factor in the field adopts the more progressive methods it is sure that the others will have to do the same or cease to attract patronage. The fair and honorable methods of this organization have made for it a reputation among buyers which is worth much to the growers whose fruit is sold through its agent here.

SEVEN HAIR FACTS

ONE

Dandruff is a contagious disease caused by a microbe.

TWO

Dandruff is a forerunner of itching scalp, falling hair and baldness.

THREE

Chronic baldness is incurable.

FOUR

The cause of dandruff can not be washed out of the scalp with soap and water.

FIVE

The only way to cure dandruff and falling hair is to kill the germ that causes it.

SIX

Each day that dandruff is neglected, adds to the permanent injury of the scalp, for dandruff does not cease voluntarily while the hair lasts.

SEVEN

The only safe and satisfactory remedy that will kill the dandruff germ and keep it out of the scalp is Newbro's Herpicide.

Kill the dandruff germ with Newbro's Herpicide and the hair is bound to grow as nature intended. Almost marvelous results sometimes follow the continued use of Herpicide.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

Wilson at Home, and Wiggins Coming. Repair Work in Progress After Fire.

Charles L. Wilson, superintendent of exhibits of the Chamber of Commerce, arrived from Atlantic City yesterday. Mr. Wilson reports a prosperous season and a pleasant trip, and is glad to be again in the sunshine of Southern California. His furniture, which was all stored in the Chamber of Commerce, fortunately escaped the recent fire, although by but a narrow margin.

Mr. Wiggins is expected in from Sacramento today or tomorrow.

Repair work is progressing in the exhibit, which was but little damaged by the elements to which it was exposed the other night.

One of the largest pieces destroyed is a very fine relief map, which was featured at the St. Louis Exposition. This was apparently made of papier maché, and the water caused it to swell and warp beyond the point of repair. It is estimated to be worth $800.

GAME SEASON HERE; CANNONADE BEGINS.

On Field and Marsh the Guns Will Make Merry Music at Daybreak Tomorrow—Quail Plenty, and Duck Clubs All Anxiously Await Word.

HALF an hour before the sun slowly shoves his ponderous, rosy face over the eastern mountains tomorrow morning will begin a bombardment before which the historic cannonading of Alexandria pales into auditory insignificance.

Reverberating from the snow-clad Sierras to the sun-kissed sands of the dreamy Pacific, awakening echoes in twice ten thousand cañons from San Diego to the sheltering Siskiyous, booming forth from full many a "blind" its merriest of all music to the marsh hunter, that almost unbroken succession of gun cracks will usher in the most general engagement with ducks and quail that California to this date has ever seen. "Opening Day," 1906, twenty-four hours in advance of its coming, is predicted a record-breaker—in number of turnout; in number of shells emptied; and in general interest that makes it little less than a national holiday in any State.

Conditions of country and prospects as to game plenty none too flattering in any branch of field sport, seem to have made no lasting impression upon the great body of sportsmen, for they have prepared for the autumn's campaign with even more zest than usual, buying shells by the case, outfitting completely to the minutest detail until the sporting goods emporia are busier than an Indian agent selling firewater on the reservation.

Two weeks ago the quail outlook was excellent, and every prospect for fair sport close to town was gladdening the hearts of that big percentage of the opening day gunners which dons leggins and khaki rather than rubber boots. Today the conditions in two vast stretches of country, at least, are sadly changed for the worse. Within the week disastrous forest fires have swept through the pine-clad slopes of the once well-wooded Little Tejunga, while a bigger blaze of even more dire effect has scorched and seared its trail from Lang station in the Soledad to the mountains south of Newhall, through which the Fernando tunnel and Fremont Pass carry traffic.

MUCH GAME BURNED ALIVE.

Pitiful to think of, impossible to estimate more accurately than by approximation, the number of quail, doves, rabbits and other small game burned to death by these rapidly-running blazes, fanned into fury each day by brisk breezes, is so great that the hunter whose plans were to have carried him into the territory contiguous to that burned had better go somewhere else. Game Warden Morgan, who, with a number of volunteers, put in a hard week's work fighting the flames, reports an immense mortality among the quail and rabbits particularly, having had knowledge of the fact thrust upon him while at work combating brush fires. He saw many rabbits burned to death, and says the quail seemed to lose all their sense in the presence of this new foe, rising out of the cañons, clearing the blaze by flying almost perpendicularly, and then, without apparent reason, turning back to pitch almost in the place from which they arose. Two or three such attempts resulted in singed wings, almost dead birds. One of the most pathetic sights of Morgan's week of work was a little band of six of the poor little creatures, completely blind, dying, partly of starvation, partly from the scorching they had received, absolutely helpless and only saved from the coyotes for a more lingering death. They could hear, and proved the old adage that misery loves company. Partly by hobbling on their tiny, maimed feet, partly by fluttering feebly through the ashes, they had come together to die in company. It was a sight that would have touched the heart of a sterner, more taciturn man than Morgan.

The rabbits, after running out of the brush into safety, would lose their heads and double back into trouble again. Those which the fire spared were so easy to kill that the party relied upon them for meat while busy with the fire.

Large game proved well able to take care of itself. The usual brush fire does not trap the deer, although when fanned by a fierce wind the flames sometimes jump cañons and surround an occasional buck. Most of the damage was confined to the class of game that most interests the average Sunday shooter from Los Angeles, and these, in particular, have plenty of cause to regret last week's disastrous burnings over.

Considered as a whole, the quail outlook in Southern California this fall is good, and limit bags in great number will be made tomorrow. The liberal rainfall of last winter and the heavy crop of brush, weeds and other cover, with plenty of feed close at hand in barley stubble fields, assure the birds just the conditions they need. Nowhere has any scarcity been reported except where the carelessness of campers has done its work and started more or less extensive fires. One of these in the Santa Monica Mountains burned over hundreds of acres of once good quail territory, much frequented of local sportsmen.

The San Fernando Valley in all sections seems liberally stocked for the fall campaign, reports of big bands of quail coming in every day from some part of its vast expanse. The washes are certain to be invaded tomorrow by an army of the inexperienced, most of whom could not kill the limit in a week of fair wing shooting, but their deadly work is often put in while the birds are on the ground.

Probably the best shooting in the San Fernando Valley will be found in the northeastern foothills, and along the western slopes beyond Calabasas and Chatsworth. A good dog can be successfully worked in many of the weed patches and brush cañons that are most productive of quail in these sections, thereby adding fully 50 per cent. to the sport of the man behind the gun. Well-broken dogs often are of just as much service on California quail as in hunting the eastern Bob White, but the necessity of carrying water prevents many sportsmen from making as general a use of their setters and pointers as is the rule in the Middle States.

Those who care to take a first day's trip to as remote places as Perris, Elsinore, Temecula or up the other way to Santa Paula and its vicinity will be almost certain of limits if they can point the gun right. Considerable summer shooting has been noticed everywhere, but, on the whole, the birds were let alone more generally than usual.

DUCK CLUBS GET BUSY.

"Water," as usual, has been the slogan of the Southern California Duck clubs this year, and the greatest obstacle they have had to contend with is getting their ponds sufficiently full by opening day. It has proved a task beyond the power of many, and the club whose dikes are now bank full is justifiable for congratulating itself. Many new institutions are in the field, and these naturally cannot expect to do much in their first year, other than lay the foundation for good sport next season. It takes not only a great deal of money, but much time also to establish a successful duck club; the best were not made in a year, or in two.

More open shooting has been taken up this season, Elizabeth Lake in the northern part of the county being a case in point. A duck club has leased that fine body of water. Thousands of big ducks are already there, and but for its inaccessibility, the lake would be a very popular hunters' resort. Likewise the Lancaster sportsmen have banded together and leased the duck shooting on all the big artesian reservoirs of Antelope Valley. Nearer town there has been practically no open shooting for five years, consequently such of the new clubs as have engaged in the duck business have endeavored to create resting places and feeding grounds for the wild fowl.

A surprising dearth of spoonbills and teal continues on all the ponds, though more birds of these varieties have been coming in every night. It is presumed the great body of fresh water in the San Joaquin Valley is holding them back, in which case the vanguard may be expected in force with the first severe storm that sweeps down the interior.

The Ballona with its half-dozen duck clubs shows considerable water already, the old Recreation Club having almost as much as its ponds will carry and being otherwise in very fair condition to open the cannonade tomorrow. The "goose pond" is nearly full, and thousands of sprigs and widgeon have been seen there within the week, resting out on the levees like patches of snow. This year the Recreationites will give the annual interclub dinner to the Del Rey Club, which is also in excellent shape for the ducks. The Del Rey people have plenty of water in their ponds, and the place has a homelike look that appeals strongly to the webfeet, if past performances are to be reckoned at face value.

The El Patron and Centinela clubs expect to have several good blinds tomorrow, and have hopes of killing the usual limits. The Santa Monica Club which relies on overflow from the Centinela is about the only one that is in indifferent shape. It anxiously awaits water. Around the ponds of the rest, the sprigs and widgeon are sailing merrily, and more than one limit will be brought in on the Del Rey cars tomorrow night.

THESE NEED NOT WORRY.

Independent of the water question, the Green Wing Club below Compton has only to uncap the immense gusher at the Mitchell ranch house and fill its ponds in three days. This sixteen-inch hole is one of the biggest artesian wells in California; its flow is a river, and several men are needed to cap it down. They always get wet to the skin, so great is the pressure. The Green Wing did not let its water in until about two weeks ago, and within a week had to shut it off again, as the entire slough was bank full. Until last week the ducks were not coming as they ought to, but quite a number have appeared since, and some big bags are in prospect.

The Cerritos Club is another that is independent of water, Bouton Lake never going dry. With a long lease this club has done considerable work in improving its grounds, and should enjoy some fine shooting this winter. Last year the members agreed upon a thirty-five bird bag limit, and probably will live up to it henceforth, though in a good season the best shots can generally bag the legal fifty on the Cerritos ponds before 11 o'clock in the morning.

The Pasadena Club, south of the Cerritos, is in fair order for opening day. It has developed more water, and made some new ponds toward the east which ought to prove good investments. The Pasadena brethren kill some high-class birds, quite a sprinkling of mallards and canvasbacks falling to their lot last fall. They have a thirty-bird limit.

In the Alamitos country the Alamitos Club, which Cy. Myrick and Frank Burch maintain for their own use, and its neighbor, the Alamitos Annex, have plenty of water and a fine lot of birds. Enforcing the "one shoot a week" rule, that on Sundays, the Alamitos members all got the limit every day last season or had a chance to, which amounts to the same thing. Nothing can beat fresh water, six days' rest and plenty of feed in making a successful duck club, and the small membership of the Alamitos and its neighbor enabled the rule to be enforced. Both are practically one club so far as shooting goes; their ponds run together, and they act in concert very comfortably. Myrick tried not long since to buy the property, but it was held at a prohibitive figure.

At the head of Alamitos Bay are several leasing clubs of which the Gadwell is probably the least bad. This club has had some limit days, and might be made into a very good proposition were it feasible to establish any improvements of permanent nature upon such leases as are to be had in that section. The Sheriff's Club and one or two others are year to year organizations. This season the big Hellman ranch has been secured by a dozen local shooters under the name of the Bay City Gun Club, the lease being signed about two weeks ago. On short notice as this the members have set in to make and fill ponds. There are fourteen members in all.

SPORT IN CHICO COUNTRY.

This year, as ever, the home of the ducks, the great Chico country and the big and little Bolsa of Orange county promise to bag plenty of limits tomorrow morning, although some of the clubs are shy of water to a serious degree and will have but one or two

WHITE SOX WIN THIRD OUT OF FIVE PLAYED.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 13.—Out of a bedlam of errors, long hits, vanquished pitchers, and the vociferations of half-frenzied spectators, the Chicago American League team emerged victorious over the Nationals today, 8 to 6.

The Americans won in spite of five ghastly errors which were accountable for nearly all the runs made by the Nationals. The Nationals lost because they could not hit Walsh's spit ball. The Americans fielded like amateurs, and the Nationals, fielding perfectly, batted very much in the negative. Time after time when a hit meant runs the batters with the impressive averages failed to live up to their reputations.

The day was warm—the best baseball weather of the series. Twenty-five thousand persons worked themselves into the National League grounds, and at 1:40 o'clock, fifty minutes before the time set for play to begin, the selling of tickets was concluded. The noise-makers were out in force, and the sky was full of kites, recommending that votes be cast in every direction at the coming local election.

The Americans began business with vigor. Hahn, the first man up, drove a single over second. Jones sacrificed and Hahn scored on Isbell's double to right. Davis hit weakly, but was safe when Isbell was tagged out between second and third. Rohe promptly followed with a double to left. Reulbach was apparently nervous and allowed Dohohue to walk, filling the bases. Dougherty, however, went out by the narrowest possible margin, and two runs were kept from counting.

SOX MAKE ERRORS.

The Nationals in their half piled up three runs without much credit to themselves. Schulte hit safely, but Hoffman was held at second. Chance was hit by the ball, and the bases were filled. Steinfeldt forced Chance at second and Hoffman scored, but Isbell, attempting to make a double play, threw the ball into the crowd and Schulte also scored, Steinfeldt reaching second. Tinker knocked an easy one to Walsh, who threw low, and Steinfeldt scored. Tinker went out stealing.

The Americans evened up matters in the third. Isbell again hit for two bases, this time to left field, and Davis followed with another, scoring Isbell. At this point Capt. Chance substituted Pfeister in the pitcher's box. He began by striking out Rohe. Donohue was given a pass. Dougherty forced Donohue and Davis reached third and scored on a neat double steal. It was a clever piece of work. Sullivan ended the inning by striking out, and it was anybody's game.

In the fourth the Americans clinched the game with four runs, and incidentally sent Pfeister to join Reulbach on the bench. Pfeister allowed Walsh to walk, and Hahn forced him. Jones hit safely over third. Isbell and Jones scored a moment later when Davis hit to left for two bases. At this point Pfeister went out and Overall went in. He inaugurated his reign by passing Rohe, following which Donohue doubled to left, and Davis scored. The American League partisans were fairly wild with delight. The so-called "hitless wonders" had driven two pitchers to the bench, and seemed about to treat the third one likewise. The scoring, however, for this inning ended when Sculte captured Dougherty's fly off his shoe tops, and caught Rohe at the plate when the latter tried to score.

In their half the National tallied one run on the misplays of the Americans. Tinker was safe when Rohe threw into the crowd, and reached second on the error. Evers walked, and Kling struck out. Tinker stole third and scored on a wild pitch.

ISBELL'S FOURTH DOUBLE.

In the sixth Isbell scored on his fourth double and Rohe's single. In their half, the Nationals made two runs. After Evers and Kling had faded away, Overall and Hoffman were safe on hits. Sheckard reached first on Rohe's fumble. Schulte doubled to left center and Overall and Hoffman scored. Had it not been for the ground rules Sculte's hit might have been a home run. With men on second and third Chance hit an easy one to Isbell, and was out at first. Thereafter neither side was able to score, although the Nationals looked dangerous in the seventh. Steinfeldt doubled to left along the foul line. It was apparent that Walsh was weakening, and Capt. Jones very promptly took him out. White finished the game. He had good control, and the inning closed with Steinfeldt on third.

The Americans have now won three out of five games. Tomorrow's game will be played on the American League grounds, and should they win this game they will gain the world's championship. Score:

STORY OF SLAUGHTER.

First inning:

Americans: Hahn landed a single down past second. Jones sacrificed, Reulbach to Chance. Isbell doubled into the right field crowd, sending Hahn over the plate. Davis grounded to Reulbach and Isbell was run down between third and second, Reulbach to Steinfeldt to Tinker. Rohe doubled past third, sending Davis to third. Davis stole home during an argument, but Johnstone would not allow it. Donohue walked, filling the bases. Dougherty out, Evers to Chance. One run.

Nationals: Hoffman smashed out a single over Isbell's head. Sheckard sacrificed, bunting down to Donohue. Schulte singled to third; Rohe stopped the ball, but could not recover in time to throw the runner out. Chance was hit by a pitched ball, and took first, filling the bases. Steinfeldt forced Chance at second, Davis to Isbell, and Hoffman scored. Isbell threw wild to first to complete a double play, and Schulte scored, Steinfeldt going to second. Tinker bunted and was safe at first on Walsh's wild throw, Steinfeldt scoring. Tinker was out stealing, Walsh to Donohue to Davis. Three runs.

Second inning:

Americans: Sullivan fanned, Walsh got a base on balls. Hahn raised an easy fly to Chance. Jones was out on a grounder, Evers to Chance. No runs.

Nationals: Evers went out, Walsh to Donohue. Kling waited for a base on balls. Reulbach sacrificed, Sullivan to Donohue. Hoffman struck out and was thrown out, Sullivan to Donohue, as Sullivan dropped the ball. No runs.

Third inning:

Americans: Isbell doubled to left field. Davis doubled into the right field crowd, scoring Isbell. Pfeister was substituted for Reulbach. Rohe struck out. Donohue was hit by a pitched ball. Dougherty forced Donohue, Evers to Tinker, and Tinker missed a double play by throwing high to first. Davis and Dougherty accomplished a double steal, Davis secoring. Sullivan fanned. Two runs.

Nationals: Sheckard fanned. Schulte went to second on Davis's heave into the crowd on an easy bounder. Chance grounded out, Davis to Donohue, Schulte going to third. Steinfeldt out, Davis to Donohue. No runs.

Fourth inning:

Americans—Walsh walked. Hahn bunted, forcing Walsh at second, Steinfeldt to Tinker. Jones singled to left, Hahn going to second. Isbell doubled for the third time, scoring Hahn, and sending Jones to third. Davis doubled to left, scoring Jones and Isbell. Overall then replaced Pfeister. Rohe walked. Donohue doubled into left field, scoring Davis, Rohe going to third. Dougherty lined to Schulte and Rohe tried to score from third but was doubled up. Schulte to Evers to Kling. Four runs.

Nationals—Tinker went to second on a wild throw by Rohe into the crowd back of first. Evers waited for four wide ones. Kling fanned. Tinker and Evers worked a double steal. Overall struck out. Tinker scored on a wild pitch, Evers being held at third. Hoffman walked. Sheckard fanned. One run.

Fifth inning:

Americans—Sullivan out, Tinker to Chance. Walsh fanned. Hahn flied to Schulte. No runs.

Nationals—Schulte popped a foul to Sullivan. Chance doubled to right, Isbell making a great try for it. Steinfeldt flied out to Jones. Tinker out, Davis to Donohue. No runs.

Sixth inning:

Americans—Jones struck out. Isbell doubled past first base, the ball going to the crowd, making the fourth two-bagger for him. Davis out, Evers to Chance, Isbell going to third. Rohe singled to right, scoring Isbell. Rohe went to second on a wild pitch. Donohue out, Overall to Chance. One run.

Nationals—Evers out, Davis to Donohue. Kling went out the same way. Overall walked; so did Hoffman. Sheckard singled to Rohe who threw to second, but too late to get Hoffman. Schulte doubled over Jones's head, sending in Overall and Hoffman. Chance out, Isbell to Donohue. Two runs.

Seventh inning:

Americans—Dougherty flied to Hoffman. Sullivan flied to Evers. Walsh fanned. No runs.

Nationals—Steinfeldt doubled to left field, and Walsh was taken out and White took his place. Tinker fouled to Donohue. Evers out, Davis to Donohue. Steinfeldt want to third. Kling out, Rohe to Donohue. No runs.

Eighth inning:

Americans—Hahn flied to Hoffman. Jones popped a fly to Steinfeldt. Isbell fanned. No runs.

Nationals—Overall went out on a fast grounder, Isbell to Donohue. Hoffman fanned. Sheckard was safe on Isbell's fumble. Schulte singled to Davis, and Sheckard was out trying to make third on Donohue's return throw to third. No runs.

Ninth inning:

Americans—Davis flied to Sheckard. Rohe beat out a bunt to left. Donohue out, Tinker to Chance, Rohe going to second. Dougherty struck out. No runs.

Nationals—Chance flied to Hahn. Steinfeldt out, Rohe to Donohue. Tinker walked. Moran batted for Evers. Moran forced Tinker, Davis to Isbell.

HAD TO BAR CROWD.

OFFERED $20 FOR SEATS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] "Close the gates, close the gates." It was President Charles W. Murphy of the Chicago National League Club, convincing his helpers that they must stem the tide of humanity pouring out to see the fifth game between the famous Cubs and White Stockings in the bitter fight for the world's baseball championship.

At 1:40 o'clock the gates were closed and without stood and crowded a jammed mob of fans who offered $5, $10 and $20 for admission and a foothold from which to see the play. Inside, up to the opening of the game, the police were having peculiar troubles of their own. Every conceivable bit of space within the park was occupied by the 23,275 spectators. The fence in front of the left-field bleachers was broken down by the mob and fans rushed out on the field until the police were compelled to resort to the use of clubs to hold the happy mob in check.

Just as the White Stockings went on the field to practice two live cub bears were led from the clubhouse across the diamond to the bench of the Cubs. The West Side rooters went wild with delight on seeing the mascots they believed meant the first victory on their home grounds for the National Leaguers. The first chance the bears got when close together they began to fight, greatly to the delight of the immense throng, which cheered wildly.

Four "real" live bear cubs were present at the big soundfest. Two of them were brought by Edward G. Heeman of the Board of Trade, and the other two by Cy de Vry, head animal feeder and subduer at Lincoln Park. Heeman's cubs were presented to the Cubs by their owner, Manager Chance accepting them for the team. Cy took his back home.

The cubs that came from Lincoln Park appeared first arriving before noon. Their appearance caused more vocal "rough-house" than the hen in white socks the day before. When Cy and an assistant led them by their chains to the home plate and then ran them around the diamond large dents appeared in the cowbells of the West Siders.

Miss Curtis Wins.

WEST NEWTON (Mass.) Oct. 13.—Miss Harriet S. Curtis of Boston, playing from the Essex Country Club, today won the women's national golf championship by defeating Miss Mary B. Adams, also of Boston, but playing from the Wollaston Golf Club, 2 up and 1 to play, on the links of the Braeburn Country Club.

THREE-CUSHION TOURNEY.

Local Experts Will Come Together Next Week to Again Decide Billiard Honors.

Billiard enthusiasts are looking forward with much pleasure to the big three-cushion tournament that will be put on next week at Berry's rooms on South Spring street, in which the best seven players at this game in the southern part of the State will compete.

The contest will begin on Monday night, October 22, and there will be afternoon and evening games until each player plays one game with every other man in the tournament. The entrance fee will be $10, and Henry Berry will add $50 to this sum, making $120. This will be divided $40, $30, $20 and $10. The players will be Seymour, McGuire, Kennedy, Lacey, Clark, Guy Lyon and Keniston, although the latter may withdraw on account of the trouble he has been having with his eyes the past six months.

FIRE THREATENS THEATER.

CHICAGO, Oct. 13.—Failures of fire plugs to work satisfactorily came near causing the destruction of the Haymarket Theater here last night while that playhouse was filled to its fullest capacity. The fire was quickly put out, however, and the play was continued.

ALL-AMERICAN TEAM.

More features than good batting and fielding averages must be taken into consideration in selecting an All-American baseball team which would surpass any other organization of the kind in the country. Base running, ability to sacrifice and general "heady" work must be taken into consideration. For some of the positions there are stars, who can be picked without difficulty as they have no peers.

Wagner at short and Lajoie at second are in a class by themselves in batting, fielding and base running. There is no use comparing any other players in those positions with them. At first base, Chance and Chase run a close race for the position. In averages Chase may be slightly the better. But Chase has had scarcely more than a year's experience in the big leagues and must give place to the Chicago captain-manager.

At third base, Devlin of the Giants is the best man. Harry Steinfeldt hit better for the season, but in general all-around work Devlin surpassed him. Stone has no rivals for left field. His hitting alone would force him into any team, but he can also steal bases and field fairly well. Keeler, although a veteran, should be assigned a place because of his bunting. He batted a trifle over .300 for the season, but is a good hitter in the pinches and has few superiors in fielding.

OUTFIELDERS SCARCE.

It is hard to pick a center fielder. There are few men of class for the position. Fielder Jones is the best fielder, but his hitting is lamentably weak. Flick is a good man in all departments, but for a few weeks this summer he suffered a slump, though he landed .314 on the season. Had Donlin not been hurt he would have had the position. Lumley is the legitimate choice on account of his hitting and base running, though he is not an especially good fielder.

In the catching department, Kling is the best all-around man, though Sullivan would surpass him if he could bat better. Bresnahan is one of the best in the league, but his tendency to getting put out of the game works against him. Judging from this season's work, the five best all-around pitchers are: Brown, Leever, Lundgren, White and Altrock. The twirlers are not all chosen for their averages. There are three right-handers and two southpaws in the list. Pfeister might dispute with White and Altrock for a position, but he fell down in a few games toward the last.

The All-American team, with Chance captaining the bunch, would bat as follows:

Name.	Batting.	Fielding.
Stone, lf	.362	.967
Keeler, rf	.302	.988

GOLF PLAY.

The Country Club golf course is in bad shape at the present time on account of the ground being so dry, and for this reason but few players were out yesterday for the regular Saturday golf ball sweepstakes. As showing the condition of the course, it might be stated that W. Fredrickson, the scratch man, made such a bad score that he did not turn in his card, and no really good scores were made.

F. N. Coffin, with a handicap of sixteen, won first prize. The results were as follows:

F. N. Coffin	90	16	74
M. P. Gilbert	103	24	79
D. K. Dickinson	104	24	80
J. M. Guinn	100	16	84

R. R. McKinney	98	6	92

J. O. Cobb, W. Fredrickson, H. Jevne, J. J. Akin, J. W. Long, F. W. Maule and J. B. Lumgair did not turn in scores.

The weight and bulk of a marine gasoline engine is an important consideration, especially for small pleasure craft.
The "Regal" Automobile engine weighs less, is smaller in bulk and has less working parts than any on the market.
For example: A 1½ H. P. 4 cycle "Regal" Marine is large for a 16-foot boat. It runs at 600 to 800 revolutions per minute, has a 12 inch propellor, and the total weight including engine, bronze shaft, bronze propellor and rant is only 125 pounds. The price of this outfit is $125. We stock these engines up to 30 H. P. and be glad to tell you more about them.

TYPE OF CADILLAC.

of Present Four-Cylin- Car Offered at Unusual Price.

weeks Manager Lee of the is going to spring a car on the public. This is Cadillac that will cost $1800 laid down here. The car is designed to fill a niche hitherto almost unoccupied, for in all the cars built in America there are not more than two or three of the four-cylinder type of touring cars that are sold within several hundred dollars of this price. Of the cars sold in Los Angeles, the Franklin and the Mitchell are the only ones that meet this demand.

The new Cadillac will be rated at twenty horse-power, having 4x4 cylinders of the regular copper-jacketed construction. With the exception of the transmission, the car will be a reduced copy of the present Cadillac four-cylinder. The new car has a two-speed planetary transmission, in place of three-speed.

Manager Lee evidently believes in the new car, for he has ordered fifty of them to be delivered before June. The demonstrator will arrive in a couple of weeks. It is coming by express to gain time, which means that some 500 simoleons will fly from Lee's pocket into the coffers of the express company, but he doesn't care.

VARIED TESTS IN THIS RACE.

ROLLS-ROYCE WINS ENGLISH TOURIST TROPHY.

Touring Car Contest That Includes Speeding, Hill-climbing and Economy Test, Run Over Rough Course Winner Does Forty Miles an Hour on Gallon to Twenty-five Miles.

The greatest of the English motoring events is the Tourist Trophy race which is a combination of speed test, economy test and hill-climb. The object of the event is to encourage the production of an all-round touring car, and to that end all the rules have been framed.

The course selected is one in the Isle of Man, with an enormous amount of up-and-down work, bad turns and hard going. This course must be negotiated by the cars on an allowance of gasoline of one gallon to twenty-five miles—a hard task at any pace. The trophy goes to the car which does it in the fastest time. The nicest judgment as to pace, so as to get all the speed possible and yet have enough gasoline to finish with, are required to win, besides an economical engine, a smooth-running car and certain control.

The course this year is four times over a circuit of forty and three-eighth miles. There is not in this whole distance more than a few feet of level ground. Last year the official measurements on a slightly different course gave near four miles of level ground; this year they give none. Officially there are seventeen and one-quarter miles up-grade, with average gradient of one in thirty-seven, and twenty-three and one-eighth miles downgrade, with average gradient of one in forty-nine.

TOURING CARS ONLY.

The cars that must cover this course on one gallon of gasoline to twenty-five miles, are strictly and entirely stock touring cars. To guard this important point a complete set of rules is drawn up.

The chassis of the car must weigh not less than 1275 pounds, including storage batteries, tires on the wheels, bonnet and tanks (empty.) On this chassis must be carried a load of 1125 pounds or more. This load must be made up of body, mudguards, lamps and their brackets, floor boards, and a driver and one passenger. In case these do not weigh the full amount, ballast may be carried, but not more than 300 pounds of it. Fuel, oil, water, spare tires, and spare parts must be carried in addition to this weight, and cannot be counted as part of it. It will be seen that the load is pretty heavy.

In addition, the chassis must have a tread of not less than forty-eight inches, and a wheelbase of not less than ninety-six inches. There must be two independent brakes, a reverse gear and a gasoline tank in the ordinary position. Efficient mufflers must also be carried. Not more than four speeds forward and one reverse shall be installed, except in the case of friction drive.

The gears must also be of regular ratio, and to insure this every car must be capable of being driven at twelve miles an hour on the high, and of ascending a grade of one in six on the low gear without a flying start.

The body is also specially cared for, with measurements to insure that it will be of the ordinary touring type, seating five all told.

WINNER DESIGNED HIS CAR.

The race was run a short time ago, and out of the forty-nine entrants, only twenty-nine were able to face the tape. The race was won by Hon. C. S. Rolls, who drove the car which he designs and manufactures, the Rolls-Royce. He covered the course of 161½ miles on the allowance of gasoline in four hours and six minutes.

The car which won is a four-cylinder machine, rated at twenty horse-power but showing twenty-two at 1000 revolutions per minute. The cylinders are 101 millimeters bore by 127 stroke, roughly, four by five inches, showing that the rating is very moderate. The ignition is by high tension magneto and storage batteries with jump spark. The transmission system consists of a leather cone clutch, a four-speed selective type gear box and shaft drive. As is the accepted practice abroad in the case of four speeds, the direct is on the third. This car sells for about $3600 complete.

A car of unusual design of which much was expected was the Arrol-Johnston, which has striking new lines, with the idea of creating as little windage as possible. This is not such a departure to English eyes as it is to ours, for the car has been distinguished in years past for its low-built and racy look. The rear part of the frame is shaped continuously round, like a torpedo boat, and the body under part is built in the same shape, while the upper part is of the usual form. The bonnet is shaped to cut the wind, and the dashboard is of the cone design for the same purpose.

DINGLEY BACK FROM RACE.

Deer Interest Him More Than Autos. Says Pope Disqualification Was Fair Enough.

Bert Dingley, who acted as mechanic to Herbert Lytle in the Vanderbilt Cup elimination trials on the big Pope-Toledo racer, has returned to the White garage, where he will explain the beauties of the White and Pope-Hartford. Just at present he is out with Billy Reuss in a chase that they fondly hope will result in oodles of venison.

Dingley hasn't very much to say about the race and the disqualification of the Pope. As he was catching skillets and things that Reuss was throwing at him from the top of a locker, he seemed much more interested in deer than in any chug-wagon that ever chugged.

"It was just about as the papers had it," said Dingley, "and the disqualification was fair enough. The car was towed, and that was all there was to it."

More and more the opinion grows among local followers of the game that with Dingley at the wheel, a different result might have come to the big car. Not only would he have probably refused the tow, as he always keeps his head and knows the rules of the track, but even eastern trade papers suggest that the condition of the Pope, which seemed to necessitate towing, was the result of careless driving.

At any rate, there is hardly a man in the game but would have liked to see Dingley at the wheel.

GIANT TWO-CYCLE ENGINE.

German Firm Makes Single-Cylinder Motor of Unique Design, Which Develops 1500 Horse-power.

Even those who are interested in the two-cycle engine will probably hear with astonishment of one recently built in Germany, which has many unique features. This is a stationary engine, built for running a furnace blast in a big factory, and was turned out by the Borsig works of Berlin.

It is a single-cylinder engine of enormous size, and besides being two-cycle, is a two-piston engine, both couple to one crank-shaft. The explosion takes place between the two piston-heads, forcing them in opposite directions—in fact, the engine is a horizontal enlargement on the two-cycle plan of a Gobron-Brillie automobile cylinder.

After the explosion the pistons move outward, one pushing the crank and the other pulling on it. The piston nearer the crank uncovers a series of ports all around the cylinder, which allows the burned gas to escape. Then the other piston uncovers a similar series, through which pure air rushes into the cylinder, cleaning it. The exhaust ports are then closed, next the air ports, and then gas comes in through a third set of ports, uncovered by the piston away from the crank. These ports are then closed by the return stroke, which compresses the mixture. Both air and gas are furnished at the ports under slight compression, through a set of pumps operated from the crank-shaft.

This is departure enough, but the size of the one recently constructed makes it astonishing. The bore is 43½ inches, and each piston travels over 25 inches, making a combined stroke of 51 inches. The crank throw is 25½ inches.

The engine is very slow, running best at 125 revolutions per minute, when it develops 1500 horse power. For a single-cylinder engine this is certainly something enormous.

Engines of this same two-cycle two-piston type have been built in multi-cylinder forms, having 500 to 3000 horse power, and they are said to have a high thermal efficiency. The one recently constructed of one cylinder is the largest ever made, it is claimed.

Thomas Flyer
Leads all the American Cars
In Vanderbilt Race

The THOMAS FLYER took the lead among American Cars in the Vanderbilt Cup Race held a week ago yesterday. The showing of the FLYER was truly remarkable. In two laps of 29.7 miles the French driver, Le Blon, with his THOMAS FLYER, practically tied with Wagner in the DARRACQ, covering the course at the rate of a mile a minute. In the fifth lap, the THOMAS beat the DARRACQ. It made a consistent run for the nine laps of 267.38 miles. It entered on the tenth and last lap, and was covering the course at the rate of a mile a minute when the crowd broke into the coure and the bewhiskered Le Blon was compelled to draw in his machine or add to the list of the already killed. The average running time of the THOMAS from start to finish, was a mile in one minute and twelve seconds.

This performance testifies to the high character of the design and construction of the THOMAS FLYER, and Mr. E. R. Thomas, the designer and builder, is receiving general congratulations for his fine showing.

O'BRIEN HAS HANDS FULL.

Hard Time Ahead to Defeat Cooley and Tremble.

Public Opinion Returns Jack as Sure Winner.

Always Chance for Dark Horse to Cop the Coin.

Refined in the crucible of public opinion, Jack O'Brien so far seems to outclass Fred Cooley and Jim Tremble that when the heat of battle dies down, Tuesday night, he will stand out as a fighting jewel of the first water, with his opponents melted away.

Surprises may be in store for the fight fans, however, for many a jewel with a golden setting may have a flaw, and but a tap in the right place will smash it to smithereens. Fred Cooley or Jim Tremble may find such a possible flaw in Jack O'Brien's make-up, and the latter may rest assured that no prospector after gold ever hunted more earnestly for hidden riches than will his opponents seek for weak spots in his make-up.

So far no one, with the possible exception of Tommy Ryan, has ever been able to get to the right spot on O'Brien's anatomy when the clever Philadelphian is "right." Young Peter Jackson, Hugo Kelley, and one or two others have taken him on off days and manufactured press-agent dope out of his disadvantage. Fred Cooley claims such a victory as a result of the fiasco at Toledo, but down in his heart of hearts he knows that the Toledo affair was not according to the rules. Perhaps that is the reason why he wants to clear up the muddle.

COOLEY'S CONFIDENCE.

Cooley must be credited with a world of self-confidence. He really believes he can find the flaw in O'Brien's make-up. "I have studied his style and every movement," he says, "and I believe I can beat him." There may be something in this course of education Cooley has undergone, for a sparring partner sees more of the weaknesses of a fighter than another does in actual battle. A fighter is careless with his sparring partner, while in a fight he covers up all weak points.

As for Tremble—Jim is a riddle in any man's game. There are persons in Los Angeles who believe that he will be harder to beat than Cooley. Tremble himself offers no opinion, but it is a notorious fact among his friends that he always feels confident of winning every battle he goes into.

"You can bet your life that I will go in with the determination to knock O'Brien out," said Jim to Manager McCarey when the match was made, and his friends say that when Tremble makes a statement he means what he says. Tremble's record in fights with Billy Woods and Young Peter Jackson should give cause for apprehension on O'Brien's part. If O'Brien is punished much in his first bout with Cooley, he must be exceedingly careful of Tremble, for the contractor has the punch and the stamina if he can cover up that jaw.

HOW O'BRIEN DOES IT.

O'Brien's record is too well known to require recounting. He has met all the best ones with the exception of Jeffries, Corbett, and one or two others of the old timers, and Burns. His cleverness has pulled him through every battle. He has never been required to take much punishment. His style of milling is to peck away until he wears his opponent down, meanwhile dancing out of danger himself. Then when the right time comes he rushes in and puts on the finishing touches.

Tremble has had two draws with Billy Woods, and lost one decision to him. He fought Young Peter Jackson twenty rounds and hammered the negro to pieces, but in the last six seconds Jackson put over a swing to that weak jaw and laid Jim away. In the dispute which followed, Jackson was declared the winner by the officials.

Cooley has somewhat of an in-and-out record. Excluding his so-called fights with O'Brien, which really were quarrels, following are his main bouts:

OLD PALS BACK EAST.

Tommy Burns and George Memsic Engaged in Business in Detroit Years Ago.

Tommy Burns and George Memsic, whom Tommy desires should go under the name of Jimmy Burns, are old pals and passed much time together back East in Tommy's wet goods emporium in Detroit, in years gone by. Burns frequently gave boxing shows at his place and many prominent youngsters first learned to put up their mits under his tuition. Tommy himself occasionally entered his own ring and it was there where he got his real start. "Kid" Locke, who recently boxed Caesar Attell, fought two battles there. Burns had a good business in Detroit but became so handy with the gloves that he gave it up in order to give his full attention to fighting.

Memsic and Burns are as brothers. They trained together at Arcadia and when Tommy prepares for a big battle, Memsic acts as his sparring partner. Burns thinks a good deal of Memsic or he would not have desired him to bear the same name. He believes George can hold his own with any man of his weight. Back in the old days in Detroit the fighters were known as Noah Brusso and George Memsic; here they are Tommy and Jimmy Burns, if you please. Both boys have improved in other ways than in names, and have acquired considerable polish in this effete city of the West. Tommy has married and settled down. He expects to take good care of himself and lead a happy home life.

GOWAN'S FINE RECORD.

Harvard School Tennis Player Does Good Work on Stanford Courts in Freshman Year.

Arthur J. Gowan, who won the tennis championship of Stanford University last week, is a product of the Southern California tennis courts. In his last year at Harvard School he won the Los Angeles county championship for his school, and on many occasions he figured prominently in tournaments at Ocean Park and on the Central Courts at South Pasadena. He has often made excellent showings against some of the best players in this part of the State, and has, for the last few years, ranked as one of the most promising of the younger players.

While not the equal, as a tennis player, of Sam Hardy, Harry Weihe or George Hodge, the old stars of the Stanford courts, Gowan's record has never been equaled at the university. In his freshman year he won first place on the 'varsity team that would have met the University of California team in the annual intercollegiate match, April 21, last, had not the earthquake intervened. He also won his place on the doubles team.

Gowan is now in his sophomore year, and first had to win his right to represent the sophomore class in the interclass tournament before he was able to compete for the university championship. He then met his old team mate, Cecil Henry, formerly of Harvard, who had likewise won out in the freshman class tryout. The match went the full five sets, but Gowan finally managed to win out. This match practically settled the championship, as either player outclassed the junior representative, and Gowan had little difficulty in disposing of him in four sets.

Although the State University has a large number of high-class players to call upon in the intercollegiate matches of the next three years, it is thought that Gowan will succeed in scoring a point before he graduates. If he does he will be the first Stanford tennis player to win the 'varsity "S" in five years.

School is Booming.

Capt. Ryus's Tuesday and Friday night schools for instruction in the workings of the White are proving very popular. At the last lecture there were eighty-two people there besides the employés of the White garage, and Ryus is afraid he will become bankrupt buying seats to accommodate those who come to hear his talks. The working parts of the steamer are shown, so that everybody can understand what is being gone over.

The Dolson-Motor Car Company reports the following sales: Four-cylinder cars to Hal Davenport of Glendale, F. S. Craig of Long Beach, and Alexander Dyean of San Francisco; two-cylinder car to E. D. Rand of Long Beach.

Seattle Backing Up.

The newspaper writers in Seattle are backing up on the scheme of putting Seattle and Portland in the Northwest bush league since the statistics have been published, showing the business done by Tacoma and Spokane the past season. As a short and pungent illustration of the business of the two leagues, it is stated that Seattle's share of the gate at San Francisco during the opening week of the Coast League season, was $2200, and yet the visiting team at Spokane drew but $2137.60 for the entire season. When San Francisco played its last week's games at Seattle, Parke Wilson took back with him more money than Butte got out of Tacoma for fourteen games. And yet they talk about Portland jumping to the bushes.

NOT ENOUGH MACHINES.

Distributor for Stoddard-Dayton Has to Refuse a Plea from Honolulu for Twenty Cars.

Norman W. Church, Pacific Coast distributor for the Stoddard-Dayton automobiles has just returned from a northern trip over the territory he controls. He secured from the factory an allotment of 275 cars, and now has sold the whole lot, the lion's share of which comes to Los Angeles and San Francisco.

What breaks Mr. Church's heart is that he has just received a cable from Honolulu asking for twenty machines, and he has to turn the request down, after raising a howl out of the factory when he tried to get them. The factory is going to turn out only 1500 machines this year, and they think Mr. Church has had his share.

They are beginning to realize in the East what a field for the auto this is, according to Mr. Church. California takes more Stoddard-Daytons than Wisconsin and Indiana combined, although back there they can't see where we put them.

GREAT WEEK FOR SPORTS.

Famous Billiard Players to Meet in Tourney.

Young Corbett and McGovern in Six-Round Go.

Intercollegiate Golfers to Decide Honors.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] There's a strenuous week about to begin for lovers of sport. The latter will have their eyes focused on three big events which are sure to make history.

In the first, next Wednesday night, Willie Hoppe, the champion 18.1 billiard player of the world, will be pitted against Jake Schaeffer in Madison Square Garden concert hall. Thursday night George Slosson, champion of the 18.2 players of the world will be seen in action. His opponent will be George Sutton, who last year made such remarkable runs in the big tournament which resulted in the championship going to Slosson.

But for adherents of the more strenuous line of sports, the National Athletic Club of Philadelphia will put on Terry McGovern and "Young" Corbett, long rivals, who will meet in a six-round bout. Hundreds of New Yorkers are going to make the trip there and see those great fighters box.

With the intercollegiate golf championship to be decided next week at Garden City, the changes which were completed there recently will be given a valuable competitive test. A hard course, to the erratically inclined, to score over prior to the travisian innovations, it would seem that the latter have made it still more difficult. At all events, next week, with men of such divergent methods as Mason Phelps, Jr., Robert Abbott, Howard Gee and others, striving for honors it will be seen if there is an improvement over the old.

Record of Dan Patch.

The record and pedigree of Dan Patch, in his principal events, is as follows:

Brown horse,, by Joe Patchen, 2:01¼; dam, Zelica, by Wilkesberry, 2:30; foaled in 1896 at Oxford, Ind.; bred by D. A. Messner, Jr.; appeared first on the turf in 1900; won all his races—four—and made a record of 2:16; won all his races in 1901—twelve—$18,800 in stakes, and lowered his record to 2:04¼. March, 1902, purchased by M. E. Sturgis, New York City, for $20,000; August 2, 1902, paced in 2:00¾ at Columbus, Ohio; August 28, 1902, paced in 2:00¼ at Readville, Mass.; August 29, 1902, paced in 1:59¼ at Providence R. I.; September 23, 1902, paced in 1:59¼ at Readville, Mass.; December 8, 1902, purchased by M. W. Savage, Minneapolis, Minn., for $60,000.

Memphis, Tenn., October 29, 1903, paced a mile in 1:56¼; Memphis October 26, paced in 1:56; Lexington, Ky., October 7, 1905, paced a mile in 1:55¼. Hamline, Minn. September 8, 1906, paced a mile in 1:55. The first quarter of his mile at Hamline was paced in 0:28½, the half in 0:57, the three-quarters in 1:26¼. His quarters were paced in this trial as follows: First quarter, 0:28½; second quarter, 0:28½; third quarter, 0:29¼; fourth quarter, 0:28¾.

Three of the world's records held by Dan Patch were made over the half-mile track at Allentown, Pa., the half-mile 0:59¼; one mile, 2:01, and one mile to wagon, 2:05.

Balls and Strikes.

In answer to several inquiries it is stated that when the National League started years ago, three strikes and nine balls could be handed a batsman. Three strikes were continued until 1887 and then the number was raised to four. This proved so unpopular that the number was cut to three the next year. The nine ball business lasted from 1876 to 1882, and then there was a cut to seven. In 1883 the balls were reduced to six; in 1887 to five, and in 1888 to four and that number still remains. It is not likely there will be any more changes, for batsmen and pitchers just about hold each other level under the present arrangement.

Mahaffey Seems All Right.

The Seattle umpire, Mahaffey, seems to be all right, and a guess is that he will make good down here, where umpires seem afraid to come for some reason. As a matter of fact, we never hurt any here that didn't deserve something and the same umpires that got it here also received large packages up north.

CARRIED BASEBALL TO MANY LANDS.

Sincerely Yours
R G Knowles

Popular actor, who is the father of many baseball teams in England.

R. G. KNOWLES, clever actor and genial gentleman, who appeared at the Orpheum last week, is one of the greatest baseball enthusiasts in the United States. He is credited generally with being the father of the great American game in England and has introduced it in other countries, wherever his histrionic way has led him. Americans ascribe to him the credit for most of the baseball missionary work done in foreign countries. His friends say that, travel into whatever country you may, you will find that Knowles has preceded you and has left balls, bats, split fingers, and rain checks behind him. Tutored by such past masters of the game as John M. Ward, Mike Kelley and Tom Keefe, Mr. Knowles learned all the fine points of the game years ago and never has lost interest in the sport since. No one is better fitted than he to spread the gospel of hits, outs, errors, and bum umpires than he.

The recent invasion of England by the Rhoades Scholarship students, sent to Oxford and Cambridge, has caused baseball to become a decidedly popular sport there, along the lines of development suggested by Mr. Knowles, as far back as 1893, when he was made president of the London Baseball Association. The first game in England to which any interest was attached was played near London by the Thespians and the Stocton-on-the-Tees. Mr. Knowles pitched for the Thespians and they won the game by the score of 27 to 19. It was not long after this that A. G. Spaulding took a hand, and the game in England has been growing in favor ever since. At present London, Sheffield, Derby and Manchester each support highly-successful baseball leagues, and like organizations are being perfected in other cities.

"It was a hard struggle to get things started in England," said Mr. Knowles in his dressing-room at the Orpheum last night. "We had the English prejudice against everything American to overcome and interest was slow in being aroused. It was the British desire for something new and out of the ordinary that led them to see the game. Then they came to scoff, but they remained to applaud. I will say this much for English sportsmen, that when they do take up a sport they go in for all they are worth. They know nothing but cricket as a national game, but to many it has given place to baseball.

"Still enthusiastic over the game, did you say? Yes, I always was and always will be. While I have not so much time to devote to it as once I had I never miss a game when one is to be found. I would rather play baseball for glory than to be funny on the stage for a price. But glory does not buy meal tickets."

Several years ago in Australia Mr. Knowles organized a baseball league in Sydney and another in Melbourne. In a recent letter from a friend in Sydney Mr. Knowles was informed that there are no less than forty-eight clubs playing regular schedules of games in Australia. New Zealand now has a league of eight clubs, and from all reports they are putting up an excellent quality of ball.

POMONA READY FOR BIG GAME.

Plays Berkeley at Rugby Next Saturday.

Forwards Slow and Heavy, but May Improve.

Back Field Is Fast and Light, but Has Kickers.

CLAREMONT, Oct. 12.—All interest centers in the Rugby football game between Pomona College and the University of California at Fiesta Park in Los Angeles next Saturday. The contest will give Southern California rooters the first real experience with the game, and the verdict of the spectators largely will decide the fate of the English style in this section of the State. Pomona has her men in pretty good shape for the contest, and her supporters hope that she will be able to hold the team from the big State University down to a very close score.

Pomona is fortunate in having a quantity of excellent material for the English game, most of it already hardened and trained by years of intercollegiate football. During the season few injuries have been sustained the customary in the preparatory work for the American game, but one or two of these have proved costly. The greatest loss will probably be that of Freshman Birdsall, who was putting up a fast game at three-quarters. He was laid out during the freshman-sophomore game with a wrenched knee. Freshman Mahoney, at three-quarters, was laid out for a while with a bad arm, but has got back into the game. Walden, another three-quarters man, who captained the freshman team in the class game, has been out of the running for most of the past week with a bruised hip. Injuries to other players are slight.

Chisholm, the captain of the Rugby team, as well as the intercollegiate, is one of the strongest players on the field, and has learned the fine points of Rugby. Although still in the preparatory department of the college, he handles his men with coolness and decision. His judgment is good, his playing always reliable and strong, and he is well liked as a leader. He has been playing at three-quarters, but before the Saturday contest may be shifted to full. This shift is made possible by the abundance of available men for the wing positions. Chisholm played three years on the Pomona squad, and two years on the varsity. He weighs 160.

Pomona will have a heavy scrum. At present the men are still a little green and lose through slowness and inexperience the advantage they have in weight, but another week's practice should help them a great deal. The eight men ought to average about 170 pounds. The two Fuller brothers, the two Ranneys, Metcalf, Halladay, Taylor and Eames appear to be the logical candidates for scrum positions. The older Fuller, left end, is a senior in the college, and is new to the game, but has developed an aptitude for the English game that makes him a valuable man. He handles his 175 pounds to advantage, and is quick in the open field. His brother is a freshman, and put up a good game in the class contest, a week ago. He weighs more than 190, and but for his slowness would be one of the strongest players in the scrum. Formerly he played guard on the Redlands High School team.

Metcalf, one of the most brilliant players on the field, is about the fastest man in the scrum. He has been playing three-quarters, going into the line to bring his weight where it will be more valuable. He tips the scales at over 170, and is active and aggressive. Besides being a brilliant runner, he is one of the best punters and a good kicker on the field. His goal from the forty-five-yard line, from placement, last season, alone kept Pomona from losing to Occidental in the championship series. He has played for three years on the varsity, as center and tackle. His fault lies in his unsteadiness, which he has never overcome. While a brilliant and hard player, he is erratic.

Halladay, a junior, has played for three years on the 'varsity as end and guard. His weight is 170, and he is a good tackler and a strong defensive player. He is practically sure of his position, being one of the best men in the scrum. Taylor, weighing [illegible], is another good man, and has picked up the Rugby style of play very readily. He is one of the best-natured men on the squad. Last year he played sub end on the 'varsity.

The two Ranney brothers will have difficulty in making their positions [illegible] should play strong, hard games. [illegible] is a likely candidate for the forward position. Like the two Ranneys, his weight is a little against him in his position, being but little over 160. Himrod, a likely candidate for half, may be shifted to forward.

With Vaile, Himrod, Canterbury and Lockwood working for halves, the difficult positions should be well filled. Vaile and Canterbury appear to be the best. Both of these men have taken quickly to the English game. All four men are light, weigh-

POMONA READY FOR BIG GAME.

Pomona will have a heavy scrum. At present the men are still a little slow and lose through slowness and clumsiness the advantage they have in weight, but another week's practice should help them a great deal. The eight men ought to average about 170 pounds. The two Fuller brothers, the two Ranneys, Metcalf, Halladay, Lee and Eames appear to be the likely candidates for scrum positions. The elder Fuller, left end, is a senior in the college, and is new to the game, but has developed an aptitude for the English game that makes him a valuable man. He handles his 175 pounds to advantage, and is quick in the open field. His brother is a freshman and put up a good game in the class contest, a week ago. He weighs more than 180, and but for his slowness would be one of the strongest men in the scrum. Formerly he played guard on the Redlands High School team.

Metcalf, one of the most brilliant men on the field, is about the lightest man in the scrum. He has been playing three-quarters, going into the line to bring his weight where it will be more valuable. He tips the scales at over 170, and is active and aggressive. Besides being a brilliant runner, he is one of the best tacklers and a good kicker on the team. His goal from the forty-five-yard line, from placement, last season, kept Pomona from losing to Occidental in the championship series. Halladay has played for three years on the 'varsity, as center and tackle. His weakness lies in his unsteadiness, which he has never overcome. While a brilliant and hard player, he is erratic. Lee, a junior, has played for two years on the 'varsity as end and tackle. His weight is 170, and he is a good tackler and a strong defensive player. He is practically sure of his position, being one of the best men in the scrum. Taylor, weighing [illegible], is another good man, and has taken up the Rugby style of play readily. He is one of the best-built men on the squad. Last year he played sub end on the 'varsity. The two Ranney brothers will have no difficulty in making their positions and should play strong, hard games. Eames is a likely candidate for the forward position. Like the two Ranneys, his weight is a little against him in his position, being but little over 150. Himrod, a likely candidate for back, may be shifted to forward.

Valle, Himrod, Canterbury and Lockwood are working for halves. The difficult positions should be well filled. Valle and Canterbury appear to be the best. Both of these men are taking quickly to the English game. All four men are light, weighing between 130 and 140. Valle has been sub quarter on the Pomona squad for the last three years. Lockwood was sub end last year; Canterbury and Himrod have had no football experience. Himrod is the holder of the college record for the mile, running that distance during the last season on the track team. He is a junior.

For the three-quarters positions there are a number of good men out. If Chisholm plays the position, instead of going back to full, he will be the best man on the passing line. Culver plays a hard, clean game, but is a trifle slow. He has played two years as sub 'varsity half. Freshman Walden, unless kept out of the game by his injured hip, should make his position and be one of the fastest and steadiest passers in the line. Valle may be dropped back from half. Baird and Mahoney may force their way into the line-up. Mahoney, in particular, has been putting up a fast game and improving rapidly.

At fullback, Freshman Collins should put up a good defense, unless Capt. Chisholm drops back from three-quarters. He weighs but little over 150, but is a good tackler and a fair kicker. Otis, another light man, may get into the game at full or three-quarters through his kicking. Next to Metcalf, he is about the surest drop-kicker on the squad, and is also a fair punter.

As the season has developed, the squad has taken hold of the Rugby game with marked success. There is still a good deal of clumsy foot work among the forwards, and the passing is not yet sufficiently accurate to prevent fumbling. Unless the passing and the team work dependent upon it improves greatly during the coming week, it will be the greatest fault that Pomona will carry with her into the big game. The slowness of both forwards and backs will probably be largely eliminated during the week.

It is hard to foretell anything definite concerning the game with U.C. at Fiesta Park, owing to the lack of knowledge of what the Berkeley squad has been doing. The greatest handicap in favor of the northern team will be their long practice, as the squad got down to work before the end of August, while Pomona, owing to its late opening, was nearly a month behind. If Pomona can advance the ball near enough to the U. C. goal, there will be ample opportunity to try for field goal, which the good Pomona kickers ought to turn to account.

After the Saturday contest the team will go north to play Stanford on the Stanford field the following week. Then, after the return to Pomona, the squad will do its lightning-change act and work hard to get into shape for the intercollegiate championship series of Southern California.

RUGBY IN HIGH SCHOOLS.

Orange Belt Institutions Form League to Play Season's Games This Fall.

Redlands, Riverside, San Bernardino, and Pomona high schools have adopted Rugby as the game of football they will play this season, and within the coming week a Rugby league will be formed among the schools in the orange belt. Several of the schools have been seeking games with the Polytechnic High School Rugby team of this city, and Pomona High's team made a strong showing against the Pomona College team, this week, losing out by the close score of 3-0.

Redlands High School has secured the services of Dr. Huddlestone, of Pasadena, for coach, and will have the start of the other schools of the league when the games are played. Dr. Huddlestone is one of the strongest advocates of Rugby football in Southern California, and was the man who put the game before the meeting of high schools when they met in conference last month. He is an experienced player and has great confidence in the ultimate adoption and success of the game in America.

PREPARATORY TEAM.

Occidental College the First Institution to Put One in the Field—All Heavy Boys.

Occidental is the first southern college to put a preparatory football team in the field. Coach Goheen has picked out about fifteen likely looking "preps" and is forming a team that will be able to make a good showing against any of the smaller high schools. Games are being sought with several out-of-town schools, and two or three games probably will be played in the near future.

The boys whom Coach Goheen has selected will develop into a fine team. It will be slightly above the average weight of a preparatory team. A back field that shows great promise has been picked out. "Young Prexie" Baer has been playing quarter and has natural ability in that position. He has played on a second team in the East. Carver and Burke, at halves, are fast and strong. Carver has been playing a very hard game against the 'varsity and could have been a substitute back if he had cared to try for the place. Burke is a six-footer, weighing 165 pounds, and was on last year's second team. Deckman, Holderman and Edwards, 'varsity substitutes, are "prep" men, and will play with the team, if the games do not conflict with intercollegiate games.

A line averaging 145 pounds has been secured, and Goheen is training the team in several plays similar to those used by the 'varsity. McKinney and Bradbeer are heavy and have had some experience. Baker, at full back, is a hard player. He was on the scrub team last year.

A schedule will be arranged, if the out-of-town schools will consent to play. Meanwhile the team is practicing every day.

Sprinters Are Matched.

PHILADELPHIA (Pa.) Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The former University of Pennsylvania sprinter, J. W. B. Tewksbury, who defeated E. J. Flynn on Wednesday in a 100-yard dash at Scranton for a $1000 purse, has been matched to race Flynn again. Tewksbury won by two feet in 10 sec. flat and his opponent claims he can do 9 4-5 sec. on a fast track. The course on Wednesday was heavy and Flynn claims that he had no chance. The rival sprinters will race at Minook Park, Scranton, on November 3, for another purse of $1000.

DEER LIMIT FOR WRIGHT.

Another Convert to Hunting During September.

Frazier Mountain Yields Up Fine Pair f Bucks.

Kern River Party Back With Fish—Montana Trip.

One of the most satisfactory hunting trips that has come to notice this season was concluded yesterday by Will Wright and his wife, who returned from a three weeks' outing spent in the vicinity of Gorman's Station in the Tejon Pass. A fine brace of heads, the largest bearing ten points, attests to Wright's skill with the rifle, and bears evidence of the sport he found.

Leaving town September 15, taking train to Lancaster, Wright and his wife staged across to Gorman, fifty miles, covered in three relays during two hot, dusty days, which form the only disagreeable part of the trip. Wright found himself well repaid for the journey across the desert, for the altitude of 4000 feet carries with it a delightfully bracing breeze, the accommodations at the station, which is kept by O. M. Ralphs, being comfortable indeed. Ralphs is a keen sportsman.

Devoting his attention to mountain quail for a few days, Wright killed about 100, a dozen being the best bunch brought out on any one trip. He carried his wife's sixteen bore and found it did the business very nicely indeed.

Turning to deer, Wright found his first—and second bucks on Frazier Mountain at about 7000 feet altitude, and came on the first, a huge fellow with a head like a manzanita bush, lying at the foot of a piñon tree 250 yards up the hillside. He saw Wright first, and stood but a second to gaze, then turned and bolted before Wright could get in a bullet standing. Two shots rang out, the first a clean miss; the second time that 35-caliber soft-nose bullet caught him in the neck and mortally wounded him, but not knowing how hard he had hit his deer, Wright drove another nail into the old fellow's coffin, and plugged him on the starboard quarter, breaking his back and dropping him in a heap. Running up, Wright whipped out his knife, cut the buck's throat and gralloched him in quick time, for night was coming and camp was a long way off. Yet before the job was done and the carcass ready to bury in a bough heap, full fifty buzzards were perched around, fighting for first chance at the offal.

VERY HEAVY BUCK.

So heavy was this deer that Wright in his fatigued condition was utterly unable to pack him out, so he dragged the carcass 250 yards, covered it deeply with piñon boughs, and decided to return next day for the meat, taking away the head with him.

Returning the next morning with Mrs. Wright and two horses, an accident occurred that might easily have had serious results, but happily did not. One of the horses kicked Mrs. Wright in the stomach and knocked her fifteen feet, but she only laughed about it as the fortunes of war. Then ensued a battle with the yellow jackets and deer flies, which had scented the carcass. One slash at the hide and two passes at his own face to fight insects kept Wright busy all day with cutting up, sacking and packing out the meat, which was speedily made into jerky. Then another buck was sought, and found within a mile of where the other had fallen.

In a small cañon, after looking under every tree and in every bush without result, Wright pased a minute before giving up the place, and just as about to turn for the climb out, saw a big "forked-horn" rise from behind a scrubby pine not forty yards away, stretch himself and stand a second, staring. Facing squarely on, looking like a tall elephant, Wright thought he couldn't miss. Herein comes the difference between the hero of this narrative and some other deer hunters I have known—Wright missed and told of it. The shot raised dirt beside the buck, and like a flash he kicked the earth, turned and charged through the brush, two ineffectual bullets speeding after him as he crossed a little open patch, for the hunter was panting hard and too tired to make accurate shooting certain. Then, as the buck crashed through the brush like a bull in a china shop, Wright squirted two more bullets after him, and one found its billet, hitting him in the groin, tearing forward, reducing the animal's entrails to pulp, passing between his shoulders and lodging in his neck. He pitched forward, but recovered and all the hunter knew was that he had not missed.

Wright then made a mistake common to most hunters—that of pressing a wounded buck too closely, rather than giving him time to lie down and stiffen. Will pressed on, the buck struggled to his feet and tried to bolt again, but this time the 35-caliber bullet blasted a chunk out of his neck, and he pitched forward like a falling tree. Although his throat was cut, he did not bleed, the entire cavity of his chest and abdomen being filled full from that murderous shot in the loins.

Cleaning, cutting and sacking his second prize, to the yelping accompaniment of 7000 howling devils of coyotes, Wright had him in the saddle just at sundown, and then began a long, twelve-mile "hike" down into Gorman's which he reached at 9 o'clock, tired as a man well can be, and so hungry that he ate up everything in the ranch house. That pair was all the deer the law allows, and small game filled up the rest of the trip very comfortably. Mr. Wright brought down a big bag of fine jerky and several sacks of piñon nuts. He waited until conditions were favorable, and is one of the few who have no complaint to offer on the deer season of 1906. Cool weather and plenty of game are the portion of the September hunter as a rule.

BACK FROM THE KERN.

The Wiley-Drake-Keniston-Graham party returned from Kern River a few days ago, having passed their annual outing most pleasantly in the midst of countless myriads of large trout and no end of small game, a bear and a spike buck being the only big-rifle meat killed on the month's trip.

Frank Keniston, William Graham, Frank Drake, Joe Wiley, Horace Bingham, Dr. Curran and H. A. McKenna made up the party this summer, and camp was set up at Brush Creek, where it debouches into the Kern River. With a pool to bathe in at the tent door, plenty of cold spring water right at the fireside, and everything right at hand, the camp was voted even better than that on Cold Springs two years ago.

Catching trout meant more work than on some trips enjoyed by this same party in the Kern River country owing to the great quantity of feed on the river. This made fly casting very tedious indeed, for a "Professor" or hackle had to be shied right in front of a trout's nose before in his full-fed condition he would deign to make a rush at it. Graham used grasshoppers with more success, but Keniston got the biggest fish of the trip, an eighteen-incher of one and three-quarter pounds weight. So many big ones were captured that Keniston fixed up a drying box and treated several hundred by the codfish method, bringing them out with him.

The water was high throughout, although it was getting lower every day the party remained, and fishing was improving in direct proportion. Twenty-five trout was the best basket Keniston reported. Bingham made a big catch the last day, and favored by unusually cool weather, brought them out with him quite fresh.

Graham shot all the mountain quail the camp could use and was hunting nearly all the time. Twenty-five quail were devoured by these hungry hunters at one mess, aided by a pair of trail cutters who pitched camp near by. Graham killed the only deer, and McKenna connected with a small bear in a treetop. He was first propertly photographed by Graham, then shot more fatally with the big rifle.

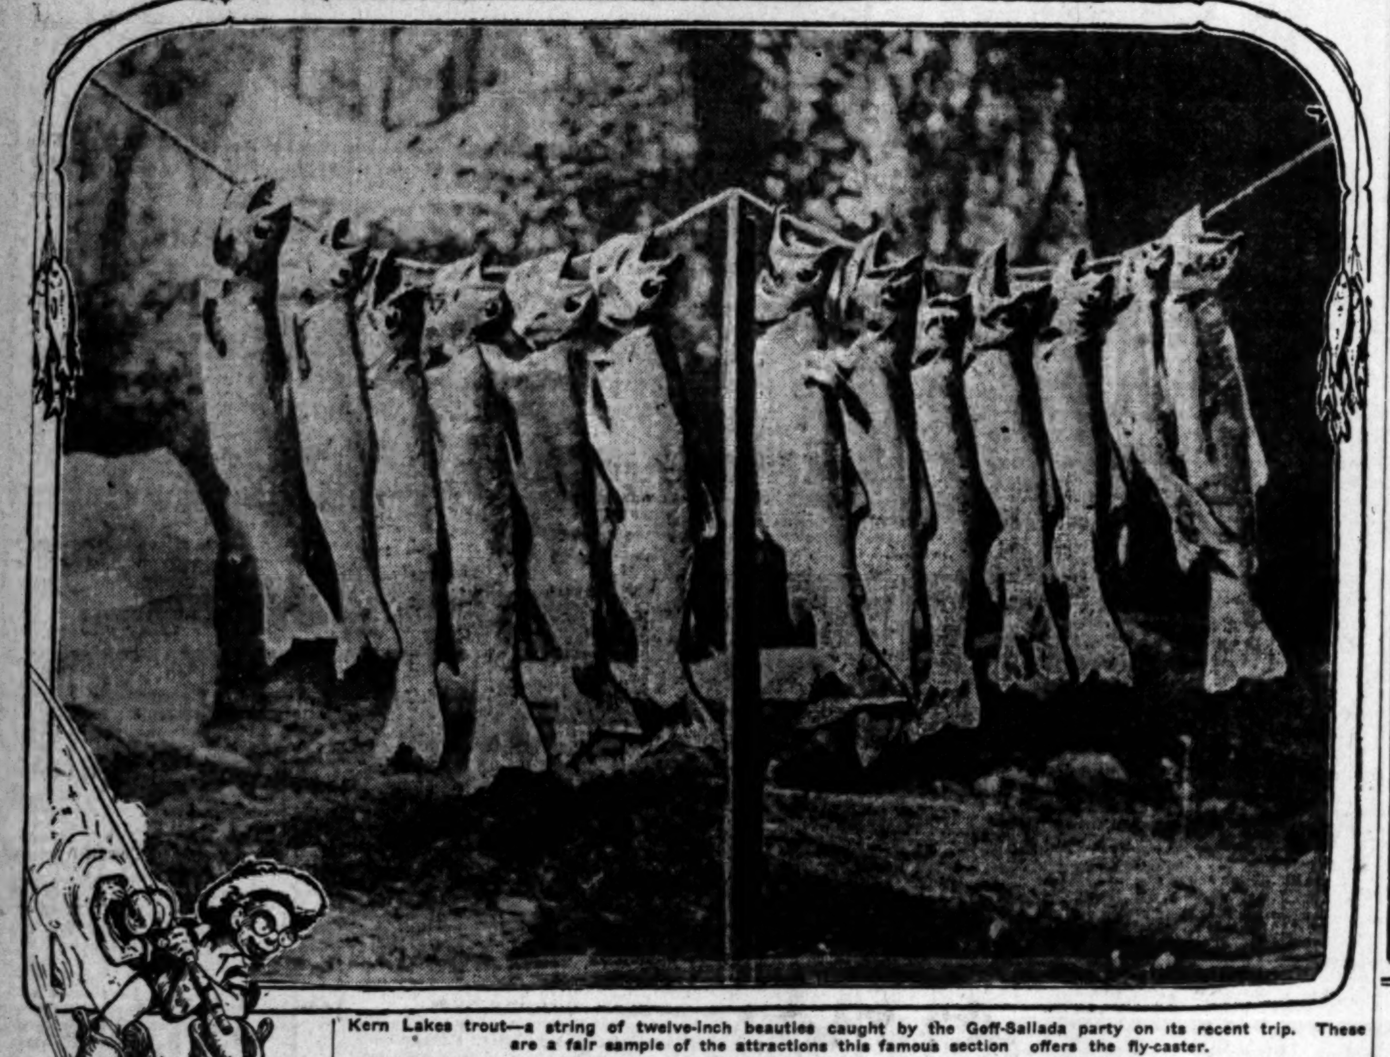
Three weeks' time was passed in camp. Going in the party took the wrong trail and wasted a day; coming out they found the new trail shorter. All are firm in their devotion to the Kern River country as a sportsman's paradise.

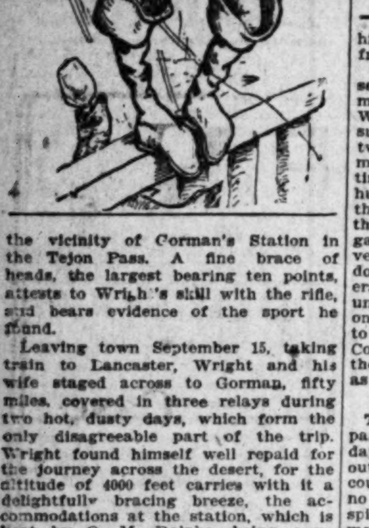
BACK FROM MONTANA.

W. F. Chandler and T. E. Crawford have returned from one of the longest hunting trips of the present season, having passed nearly a month in Northern Montana, where the ducks, prairie chickens, and bigger game vie with fourteen-inch trout in holding sportsmen's attention.

Owing to Crawford's illness the party did not go as far as the celebrated Ovando country, and had no big-game hunting, but what they did to the ducks and prairie chickens was a plenty. On opening day, September 1, going northeast from Helena to the Prickly Pear swamps, which are now owned by a gun club—they have the fever in Montana, too—Chandler and Crawford killed upwards of ninety ducks, mostly mallards. Late and heavy rains played havoc with the prairie-chicken crop by drowning young ones and driving hens off their nests, chilling the eggs, many broods of only one or two chickens being flushed. For this reason not many prairie fowl were killed.

Much of the time was passed driving about through the picturesque Northeastern Montana country. Next year the same gentlemen will make up a party and pass a month in the big-game section, where very few sportsmen ever penetrate.





Kern Lakes trout—a string of twelve-inch beauties caught by the Goff-Sallada party on its recent trip. These are a fair sample of the attractions this famous section offers the fly-caster.

Redlands Game.

REDLANDS. Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The first Rugby football game of the season was played on the High School campus this afternoon between Redlands and San Bernardino high schools. The score was 11 to 0 in favor of Redlands, which made three touchdowns and one goal. Tom Sanborn of Redlands was the star player. An immense crowd turned out and special cars ran fro mSan Bernardino.

BAY FISHING GROWING GOOD.

CROAKERS, HALIBUT AND EVEN BIGGER GAME BITING.

San Pedro Harbor Living Up to Its Reputation as a Winter Fishing Resort—Trolling Outside at a Standstill, and Nothing Much Doing With Surf Fish.

San Pedro harbor, Mecca of the fall fishermen, is again coming to its own. Last Sunday all kinds of fish were in evidence on both sides of the channel, and something like a hundred large croakers fell to the fortunate rodsters who happened to be "Johnny on the Spot" at the proper time.

Even the yellowtail put in an appearance. The sardine cannery has been working fish quite a little of late, and this has resulted in a considerable supply of sardine heads, offal and other delicacies which appeal strongly to John Halibut, Esq. The halibut parliament under the cannery has been debating the dead bait versus live bait question all week, although only a few anglers have been fishing for slabsided game.

In its palmy days the cannery was a great place for all kinds of sports, and its devotees maintain it should be better than ever, now that the dredger has cut out the bottom of the bay to a mean depth of twenty-six feet at low tide. Croakers, halibut, kingfish, yellowtail, sea trout, pompano, all are drawn by the quantities of refuse thrown out of the cannery while in operation, and the small fisherman can land smelts to his heart's content—fine luscious silversides whose length is the width of a good-sized frying pan, and whose delicate flavor needs no enlarging upon to any who have ever tasted them properly prepared.

The croakers seem to have scattered about the bay rather more than is their habit. Last year all the sport at this time was to be had under the very nose of the big dredger. This fall the spotfins are likely to be encountered anywhere in the harbor. Catches were made at the Kerckhoff-Cuzner wharf last Sunday, and at other points along the San Pedro side, while the cannery wharf, and other vantage points at the East San Pedro proved productive of sport also. Barges in particular are favored of the fishers owing to the convenience of landing fish when hooked.

Just a year ago this week, Harry Slotterbeck and wife caught nineteen croakers; E. L. Hedderly took eighteen of an average weight of over seven pounds, and Robert Campbell connected with ten of the same kind. W. McPhee, Johnny Wray, Alf. Mackenzie and other local rodsters also declared in on the picnic, making it all told the greatest week of croaker fishing ever recorded on the South Coast. Local anglers are wondering if such another treat is to be accorded them again this fall. Last year's sport came with the colder weather, and was best in the frosty mornings. These conditions have not set in as yet this month, although they are overdue. When they come will be the time to look for good sport inside.

Pompano of small size have made their appearance, and kingfish are already at their bait-gobbling tricks. Sport through the week was not of much account for some reason, although last Sunday was good enough for any one.

The dredger is working on the San Pedro side at present opposite the San Pedro Lumber Company's wharf, and as soon as she begins to tear up the clam beds again may be looked to for some real sport. Just as close as one's leader can stay to the big cutter, and down stream from it is the place to aim at in casting. The cutter breaks up shellfish of all sorts and stirs up the feed to such an extent that the croakers grab everything in sight without their usual hesitation. Ordinarily the spotfin approaches bait very gingerly and examines it almost microscopically before he ventures on a bite. A series of methodical nibbles, tugs and small jerks preced the final grab that announces an intention to do business, and works the fisherman into a state of nervous exaltation that must be experienced to be realized.

Trolling outside has gone to pot decidedly. Capt. Alf. Mackenzie whose practical ventures into the albacore, yellowtail and bonita were bi-weekly occurrences all summer, knocked off operations completely three weeks ago after a most disastrous trip in which the party of half a dozen laid outside part of a night, then landed, and walked home, leaving only a sort of anchor watch on the launch. Howard Martin was one of the party, and the "hike" homeward occupied all of four long hours—a dreary trudge over the Palos Verdes back to San Pedro. The boys say Mac tried to feed the carburetor on alcohol after gasoline failed to do its work, but the thing wouldn't explode, probably because the alcohol was not denaturized. It was a shame to waste Martin's good whisky that way, but the crowd had to start something or else the engine never would have run. Over night the batteries picked up a little and finally the good ship Privateer limped into port. She hasn't been out since, either. But then there are no fish. Mackenzie says that is the only reason why the craft is out of condition. Others think he found the walking bad off Portuguese Bend.

Those who will troll can find some lively fish meat upon which to exercise their muscle by steaming off the breakwater about ten miles straight out to sea. There the albacore flourishes like the bay tree of holy writ. He blossoms perennially, and never yet has been known to refuse battle with anything from a Wilson spoon to a piece of cotton handkerchief.

Of good fish outside, such as yellowtail and barracuda there is a dearth, but bass are plenty, and bonita may be picked up at any time. Nor has the water been unduly rough as yet. Later on, winter being the stormy season, comparatively few will care to go out.

From the surf fish and yellowfins little has been heard except in the bays.

Occasional good days may be expected, but it becomes harder every week to figure upon making a catch of surf fish. Their season, par excellence, is passed. Stragglers will feed all winter and messes may be picked up in January, but the game is nothing to reckon upon. The present is the harvest time for bay and small fish.

WANT FISH LAWS.

PROTECTION IS NEEDED.

Having decided to send five delegates North to the meeting of the California Game and Fish Protective Association in Monterey, November 9 and 10, the Southern California Rod and Reel Club is soon to hold a meeting to talk over needed protection and the best manner in which to take care of the sea fish by State legislation.

It is proposed to draft a clause or clauses relating to sea fish, and present them to the State Game and Fish Protective Association with a view to getting them incorporated in the game and fish bill which that body will present to the Legislature. In order to come at this matter and secure a general expression of sentiment, a big open meeting will be necessary. Its date and place will be announced in a few days.

The matter of shore seining and other items of importance to every fisherman will be discussed. Heretofore ocean fish have had no protection at all in Southern California. What few county laws were secured could not be enforced with the inadequate policing provisions made for the purpose.

Th growing scarcity of sea fish of certain varieties is setting all sportsmen to thinking seriously if there be not even an end to the fish in the ocean. The popular idea that they could not be exterminated because of the vastness of their habitat is giving way to knowledge that in their haunts they are as restricted as the fresh water varieties. The surf fishes frequent only the shallow waters, and of the varieties common on this coast but few venture very far out to sea. The bottom fish cannot live at the surface, and vice versa.

won the toss and chose the west goal. Burek sent the ball low and hard to Occidental's 10-yard line, where Wieman picked it up and ran in 15 yards before he was downed. Thacher made 20 yards on an end run, then Wieman punted, and the ball began to see-saw in a series of forward passes, penalties, and quarterback kicks, with occasional close-in formation bucks that netted U.S.C. good gains whenever she got the ball on first down. A long kick by Wieman recovered by Occidental near the university men's goal, made things look blue for the red and yellow for a while, but Occidental failed to put the ball over the line, and her only chance to score was lost.

On third down Occidental tried a new and unusual play, allowing her center to kick the ball forward instead of passing it back. It crossed the line and rolled up against the wire backstop, and in the neighborhood of a bench, from which Capt. Best managed to extricate it, and save the day by scoring a touchdown. The free kick that this gave U.S.C. was soon returned over the line, but the second try sent the ball over the heads of the Occidental backs and well into their territory. Two heavy penalties and a fumble gave the ball to Holmes's men within 20 yards of their opponent's goal, and Burek covered that distance in three fierce bucks. Best failed to kick out in two tries, so that no goal was scored.

After the first touchdown Occidental seemed to lose courage and U.S.C. gained as they pleased with their close formation and occasionally by punting short or by double quarter-back passes. One more touchdown was made during the half, Best failing to make an easy goal, and the score at the end of the half stood 10-0.

Two touchdowns and two goals were scored by the winners in the second half against an already beaten and disorganized team that was able to pull itself together only for short intervals.

HOLMES SURPRISED.

After the game, Coach Holmes said: "The result of today's game was a surprise both to myself and the men of the U.S.C. team. We were surprised to find that Occidental did not possess a single play or series of plays that were worthy to be used in a game with an ordinary college team. We were further surprised to find that Occidental was apparently without a leader to look to on the field. The result of the game clearly demonstrated that the much talked-of forward pass cannot possibly be used with success against any team that knows how to play football. As the teams played I should say that 32 to 0 would represent the difference between them better than 22. If they had been playing under the five-yard down rule I believe that U.S.C. could easily have scored 60 points."

Occidental was censured by the spectators for the treatment she accorded the men who were taken out of the game. The four men who were relieved owing to more or less serious injuries were sent to the sidelines in an exhausted condition and left to shift for themselves without any one so much as throwing a blanket over them. Two of these men were in a semi-conscious condition when taken out.

STATE TEAM THE WINNER.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Oct. 13.—The first collegiate game of Rugby football on the Pacific Coast was played between the freshmen of the University of California and Stanford, today. The game resulted in a three to nothing victory for the University of California, over the first-year men of Stanford.

In the first half the Stanford fifteen had much the better of the contest but in the second period the tables were turned and the ball was continually in Cardinal territory. Stanford excelled in passing the ball but the California men showed a greater knowledge of the rules of the game.

Stanford was penalized frequently and California's score was directly due to several successive penalties inflicted by Referee Unmack. As a result of the first penalty, California was given a free place kick from the twenty-five-yard line and Johns booted the ball squarely between the goal posts, but the score was disallowed by the referee because the kicker overstepped his line. A moment later Johns failed to make another place kick from a more difficult angle but the third attempt from a heeled kick sailed over the bar and three points were chalked up for California.

After this score the Cardinals' goal line was in constant danger, but the Stanford youngsters rallied desperately and no further scoring was done. Johns, Burnham, Miller and White played star games for California while Worthington, Thorpe, Little and Pemberton did the best work for Stanford.

Elmore in New Dress.

"S. S." Smith is enthusiastic over the new three-cylinder Elmore, which he says will have the swellest body ever seen. The design will be somewhat different from this year, and will combine a curved back with the straight-line style. The rear of the car will resemble a Thomas slightly, and the rest of the body will be along the French style. In addition the hood will be longer and more racy, and the new French style of square lamps, like carriage lamps, will be used. The design will give more space in the tonneau than even the present four-cylinder has.

GAME SEASON HERE.

blinds for the first attack upon the web-footed enemy. Many overlooked the general development of water and forgot that the numerous new wells put down would to some extent borrow from those existing. When time to uncap came, figuring on their last year's supply of water, several of these clubs were sadly disappointed. Very often about a gun club as elsewhere, what is everybody's business is nobody's business, and things are allowed to run themselves until too late. Now has ensued a frantic scramble for drillers and a frenzied attack upon the subterranean water. By the time it has been reached probably the rains will have settled the matter off hand.

The Chico Land and Water Company's preserve is in good shape for duck shooting, but owing to inability to get a driller, the ten-inch well designed to fill its overflow ponds has not been started, hence it has no more pond acreage than last year, if as much. The same trouble holds with the Green Wing. Keeper Tegel worked all summer throwing up ponds; but has very little water to put in them, otherwise this club might declare in on the Chico's great sport.

The Olympic brethren struck plenty of cater in their twelve-inch well and have no cause for worry on that score, being considerably better fixed than the Green Wing, although no older a club. They have been boarding and lodging a large band of sprigs for nearly a month. Taken as a whole, notwithstanding the swarm of birds that arises on the Chico marsh every time the keepers sally forth to feed, the duck supply is not up to last year's grade by any means—that is, as regards number. In class of birds it is better. There are not as many ducks, but it is the trash varieties that are lacking—the sprig, widgeon, mallard and gadwell representation is about par, apparently.

At the Chico clubhouse this evening the annual celebration will occur, and the season will be inaugurated in the Teutonic style typical of the Chico membership, which is largely drawn from the solid German business men of this city. Many guests will be present, and a big banquet will be served.

The Canvasback Club kept its water in all summer, and is therefore pretty well fixed at the present writing with any number of big ducks on its qonds. Six will constitute the opening day turnout. In common with the other clubs in the vicinity, it has been feeding for two weeks, and the result is very apparent.

ON THE CHRISOPHER.

The Christopher Club has enough water to shoot over, although not as much as last year. Keeper Tony Rodriguez had a long head and turned loose his wells early in July. The result was that, although the flow from each was considerably less, the two months of time thus gained evened up the discrepancy, and as a result the Christophers can congratulate themselves.

The Blue Wing has enough water to shoot over, although it could use more. Had the water been turned loose a month earlier, it would have been better for all. Greenish yellow moss covers many of the ponds in the Chico country yet, but the keepers are learning how to make the mudhens work for them, and gradually are getting rid of it.

The Sunset and Center clubs are running in their water as fast as they can, but find filling dry ponds long, tedious work, so much of the needed water going into the ground. The Sunset people found a good flow in their ten-inch well.

The San Pedro Club is another which developed plenty of water, but a little too late. Several of its neighbors would be glad to use some of that same flow if they had any way of getting at it.

The Westminster is considering the sale of forty acres of its 260 to the Golden West or another neighbor in order to square up its own piece. Water will be run over more of the Westminster holdings next year, more wells being developed as raqidly as possible.

The little Golden West Club has had water for two months, and no end of big ducks on its ponds. It should kill plenty of birds when the season opens. The Algonquin, a small twenty-acre proposition tributary, also has water in its levees. The Lomita, nearest the ocean, is in good shape, and will have a big turnout opening day.

On the Bolsa Chico, probably twenty guns will be out tomorrow morning. This big club has plenty of grounds and accommodations galore for the hunter; in fact, it takes a new member a season to learn the marsh. Limits will undoubtedly be bagged.

Below Huntington Beach are several clubs which are, almost without exception, arguing the water question at the present writing. The Pacific, Newport, Borchardt, and Surf clubs put down shallow wells and are learning the same lesson that was borne in upon the Chico clubs last year—that of going down for permanent flow. They can probably get it by drilling for it. There is no marked scarcity of ducks down that way, however, and some good scores will be rolled up, notwithstanding the water shortage.

All things considered, the Southern California sportsmen have little cause to worry about the duck prospect, although it is not nearly as good as last year.

One firm reports the sale of over 160,000 shells already this season, at a round cost of over $27 a thousand, and other houses doing a smaller business will probably run the total up to 500,000, making a total of $13,500 in round figures that Southern California has already paid as toll to the ammunition trust this season. And yet some people say that game has little economic value except as a food product! This one item does not take cognizance of the millions invested in duck clubs, which own their land; the hundreds of thousands invested in fine guns, equipment, dogs, and the like, or the salaries of men whose livelihood depends on the demand for these things.

COMMISSIONERS' DEFENSE.

Allege That Chief Deputy Vogelsang Is Active in Performance of His Duty.

The Sacramento County Fish and Game Protective Association and the Stockton Anglers' and Hunters' Association defend Charles A. Vogelsang, chief deputy for the California Fish Commission, in the fight being waged against him by the Santa Clara County Fish and Game Protective Association. Both organizations have addressed letters to the Santa Clara people repudiating the charges made against Vogelsang and extolling the latter for the work he has done. The Sacramento county association went so far as to adopt resolutions highly commending Vogelsang.

The Board of Fish Commissioners, in a lengthy statement signed by W. W. Van Arsdale and John Bermingham, Jr., makes a detailed defense of Vogelsang. The commissioners decry the charge that Vogelsang received bribe money to permit Chinese to export shrimp, contrary to the provisions of law. They say he was offered a bribe, but refused it and reported the matter to the commission. It also is alleged that neither Vogelsang nor the commision made requests asking that certain parties, on trial before the court for having deer skins in their possession, be dealt with leniently.

The commission also claims that no one in San Francisco or elsewhere, is allowed to have more than the limit bag of fifty ducks in his possession, and that many dealers have been arrested for violating the law in that respect, have had their game confiscated, and were fined for their action. In regard to Mr. Vogelsang's alleged activity in opposing the passage of the proposed law prohibiting the sale of ducks, the commission makes no defense, but claims that the proposed law was vigorously opposed by the press and by most of the people of the State.

The Rowley case also is gone over. Mr. Rowley is curator of Stanford University and he was given permission to kill a limited number of deer for scientific purposes. The skins were stuffed and placed in the Stanford University museum.

The commission adds in the defense of Mr. Vogelsang, that the Santa Clara organization allowed itself to be misled by the reports of persons discharged from the service of the commision, and that an investigation would have brought out the truth.

In defending itself against charges that little good has been accomplished, the commission gives the following statistics, the arrests and fines being recorded to September 1:

MEN Only

DR. TAYLOR,
The Leading Specialist.

I have teated men's diseases only for twenty-five years, and one year of my practice represents a greater volume of good experience than several years brings the average physician or specialist. In explanation of this statement will say that I have been the busiest specialist upon this coast, curing several cases to other physicians' one. I began my practice with accurate knowledge concerning men's diseases, and my patients have received thoroughly scientific treatment. I have not only treated an unusual number of patients, but have treated them rightly, thus acquiring an abundance of the very best kind of experience—experience of positive value to those I treat and experience that enables me to offer cures with certainty of effecting them.

Weakness

My ability to cure those derangements commonly termed "weakness" has done more to extend my reputation as a specialist in men's diseases than any other thing. I was the first to discover that "weakness" is mererely a symptom resulting from a chronically inflamed prostate gland, and that to remove this inflammation is the only method of permanently restoring lost vigor. To this day my system of local treatment is the only scientific one in use. In years I have not failed to effect a complete cure. There are two reasons for this: First the unequaled effectiveness of my method; second, because I attempt to cure no incurable cases. My long experience enables me to recognize those that have passed into an incurable stage, and I treat only such as I know I can cure.

My right to the title of "Leading Specialist" has never been seriously disputed. It is the number of perfect cures to my credit that entitles me to the enviable place in the medical world that I hold.

I Also Cure Promptly and Permanently

Varicocele, Hydrocele, Losses, Stricture, Contracted Disorders, Specific Blood Poison and all Reflex ailments.

You never find absurd or misleading statements in my announcements. I state nothing but the SQUARE, HONEST TRUTH.

Advice and Consultation Free

Come and have a private talk with me concerning your ailment. Even if you are not prepared to undergo treatment at thi stime I can always give helpful suggestions to men who are diseased or weak. If you cannot come to Los Angeles, write for particulars of my system of home treatment. Interesting literature and colored charts free if you will call.

MEN
..I Cure..

Every Case
Thoroughly and Completely by Removing the Exact Cause

I have confidence in my treatment, knowing what I have accomplished, and if, after an examination, I tell you I can effect a cure, you can rest assured of the results, that they will be satisfactory. There'll be no guessing, for I will see and know that my treatment is for the exact cause. I know that hundreds of men have tried many different kinds of treatment and have been guessed at through the mail until they are naturally prejudiced against most everything. But mine is of a different kind and it is personally given in my office and the good results I can guarantee. I am sincerely interested in these diseases from a scientific standpoint and I attach great importance to their effective cure by personal treatment.

Varicocele Cured Four to Six Days

Many men suffer from varicocele and have many times treated without satisfactory results. I want to say to all such that my treatment, personally applied, will cure you in 4 to 6 days, and the cure will be permanent.

Functional Decline Termed Weakness by Some
The success I have had in restoring the functional derangement has been a great surprise to many who have met with failure in former treatment. It's the right treatment applied in the right way that brings the satisfactory results. By my direct method all inflammation is removed, and free, healthy circulation is established.

Contracted Diseases
Failure to quickly cure these conditions is due to harsh measures, which are the direct cause for chronic conditions. My treatment is most cleanly and perfect.
I cure Rectal, Kidney and Bladder Troubles, Piles, Fistula and Blood Diseases, Wasting, Nervous and Chronic Conditions, causing functional derangement, impairing strength and vitality.

SIWASHES ARE WHITEWASHED.

Looloos Win Beautiful Game by Bit of Luck.

Garvin Holds Locals Down to Three Hits.

Randolph Does Great Work at Critical Times.

Los Angeles, 1; Seattle, 0.

Each of the local ball players spent the greater part of the morning yesterday pitching horseshoes, and after they had kept at this for several hours they stood around blacksmith shops to watch the business going on there. As a result they defeated the Siwashes yesterday by a score that makes one laugh, if you look at the hit column.

Garvin was in to pitch for the Siwashes, and he let them down with three little singles, while they pounded Randolph for nine swats. In three different rounds they punched the Red One twice, but the horseshoe business was too much, for the Red One was there with the bells when he had to pitch winning ball. In the fourth inning for the Siwashes, Van Buren led off with a double and Blankenship followed with a single, and then stole to second base, and yet they couldn't score.

Garvin had the Red One beaten a block on pitching, as far as hits are concerned, but the Red One did equally great work when he had men on bases. It was a beautiful contest to watch, for every ball was handled in perfect style, without the sign of an error. Toman, Brashear and Kane did their best, and from the first inning the game settled down to which team would have the luck to get a run.

The Looloos were the ones, and it came in the seventh inning. Garvin gave the only pass of the game to Cravath at the opening of the last half of the seventh, and he advanced on Brashear's sacrifice, scoring a moment later on Dillon's swipe over second base. The next man flew to right and the next after him struck out.

There were no fielding features, for the hits were clean and the chances easy. The Siwashes got but one man to third base, and the locals did no better, with the exception of Cravath, when he scored. It was a poor game to enthuse over, but a great one to watch for real baseball. Gochnauer had to retire in the first of the fifth on account of a bad foot, and Nagle took his place and had but one chance to show what he could do there. Blankenship had three singles out of four times at bat, but he was the only man in the game who made over one hit.

FRESNO SHUT OUT.

BRILLIANT FIELDING.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

FRESNO, Oct. 13.—In a fast game of baseball, marked by brilliant fielding stunts in the infield and outfield by both teams, Portland shut out Fresno today. Hoag, who twirled for Fresno, pitched a shut-out game, but an error by Cartwright let in two runs in the second inning.

WILL SEATTLE LEAVE US?

"The Seattle ball club does not want to quit the Pacific Coast, and will not, as far as I know. I never made any statements that it would, and while we expect to lose some money this year, we hope to make it up next season."

This should satisfy some of the Pacific Coast fans in regard to the position of Russ Hall and the Seattle team, but in all probability some more of them are not satisfied, and these might be President Bert, Treasurer Cal Ewing and some of the Seattle newspaper writers. There are a lot of people who think that Seattle is only four-flushing now about wanting to stay in the league, and these doubters will doubtless have to wait until the annual meeting of the league in December before the truth comes out.

Information comes from the North that the Seattle people are really anxious to jump back into the Northwest bush league, where Dugdale is believed to be the only man that ever lived since Noah built the ark for the big wet winter we had some years ago. There is no question but that Seattle has lost money since the earthquake, for Hall himself says that his team drew but $300 for a week in Oakland, which is about half the expense account of the team. It's enough to make any man bite a bulldog when he has to throw about $400 into the sewer every Sunday morning before he goes to church, and it's small wonder that Russ Hall don't feel like a girl graduate thinks she looks.

Hall declares that the phony dope that has been appearing in the Seattle papers was not mixed by him, and that he never told any man that he wanted Seattle out of the league. He has naturally been sore over his team being out of line and losing money all the time, but he considered that some of his men were not in shape, and that it would take all season for the league to recover from the earthquake.

He thinks that an eight-club league might be a paying thing next year, if there can be four clubs in California and four in the Northwest. He suggests Tacoma, Seattle, Spokane and Portland, and that the California teams play at least half of the time in the Northwest in the summer, when the weather is so warm.

Concerning that $14,000 the Coast League is generally supposed to have received from the eastern teams as an earthquake donation, Russ says that President Bert told him that only about $6000 was received, and that this sum would not be distributed to the six clubs until the end of the season. President Corney Pendleton has a somewhat different story, saying that the Los Angeles team has already received $1500, and has $600 or more still due.

McCreedie of Portland says that he is willing to buy the Seattle franchise and put other people in that city besides Hall and Agnew, but that the present owners won't sell at a fair valuation. In any event, if Russ sells or doesn't sell, he will finish the season as the champion spitter of the league, and this kind of a reputation may be worth paying out good money for.

LONGEST BASEBALL GAME.

Contest Between Fargo and Grand Forks Went Twenty-five Innings With no Scores.

Following is the record of the longest game of baseball ever played, and the press report sent out:

DEVIL'S LAKE (N. D.) July 18, 1891.—A twenty-five inning 0 to 0 game was played here today between the Fargo and Grand Forks teams.

Raymer pitched for Fargo and Gibbs handled the hide for Grand Forks. The captain of the Fargo team became greatly dissatisfied with the work of his first baseman because that luckless right committed one error. He called Carman in from right to cover the gateway bag, and sent Lebo from the base to the field. No man made more than two slips, which was pretty good in view of the fact that the second baseman took advantage of thirty-five chances, the third baseman of twenty-two and the shortstop of twenty. Twenty-five Fargo batsmen died at first. How many Grand Forks locust hitters did the same is not shown by the score, owing to the swap in position between Fargo's first baseman and right fielder. Forty-five outs went to the credit of the backstops, thirty-seven of which were strike-outs. Nine men, counting both teams, made two hits or more. Four batters did not rap safely even once:

Game at San Diego.

SAN DIEGO, Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] San Diego will play the Keystone team of Los Angeles tomorrow at the Middletown grounds, and a battle royal is expected. Several new men, who promise to become stars, will be tried out with the local team, and considered as possible material for reinforcement if the San Diego nine joins the Coast League, as expected this winter.

RIVERSIDE BUDGET OF NEWS.

RIVERSIDE, Oct. 13.—Eight of the jury voted for acquittal and four for conviction in the Cochrane liquor case, which was tried before the City Recorder on charges brought by the Anti-Saloon League. David Cochrane, proprietor of the Holyrood Hotel, was alleged to have sold a bottle of whisky to W. B. Laport, September 12. Cochrane pleaded not guilty and in the trial denied that he had sold the liquor or that he had even seen Laport until the latter appeared as a witness. It is announced that there will be another trial.

After deliberating over the Bennett case for twenty-four hours, the jury returned a verdict of not guilty. The charge brought against the defendant, L. H. Bennett, was that of having attacked Irene Butler the 11-year-old daughter of O. L. Butler of Highgrove. Bennett is a prominent rancher of Highgrove.

Chris Belton was dragged a city block yesterday at the end of a rope with which he was leading an unruly cow. His foot became entangled in the rope and the cow made a dash. Belton's only injuries were a sprained ankle and knee.

T. S. Breckenridge will represent the Riverside bankers at the annual meeting of the National Bankers' Association, which convenes in St. Louis, October 13 to 17.

Mrs. Lizzie Belle Cross of Los Angeles, past president of the Woman's Relief Corps, inspected the local corps today.

COVINA NEWS PARAGRAPHS.

COVINA, Oct. 13.—F. W. Hyde, a local painter, and a married man, is awaiting trial on charge of obtaining goods under false pretenses, the charge being preferred against him by C. F. Clapp, a local druggist. The case was to come up before Justice C. E. Crawford on Monday. Hyde was unable to furnish $50 bail, and was locked up in the County Jail to await trial.

The Baptists of Covina have decided to build a new church, their present edifice being inadequate owing to the rapid growth of the town during the past year. The building which is being considered is of the mission style of architecture, and will contain a large auditorium with all the classrooms and offices necessary for a well-appointed church.

AUTOMOBILES

ular Packard output, a two-cylinder car rated at about twenty-four horse power. The drive in this car is by short side chains, instead of the construction which is a feature of the touring car, and in several other features it does not much resemble the more luxurious product.

AUTO DEALERS MEET.

Association in Prosperous Condition, With Large Membership—Auto Show Question Goes Over.

The first of the regular fall meetings of the Automobile Dealers' Association of Southern California took place the past week, and the association was reported to be in the most flourishing condition. Twenty-five firms are now members, and nearly all the other concerns handling automobiles in the city have promised to join at the next regular meeting. The firms already members handle nearly forty-five makes of cars, so that they form a large portion of Gasoline Row.

At the meeting the proposed automobile show was thoroughly discussed, and it was decided to hold the question over until another meeting before any decision was made.

The next meeting will be on October 19.

AMONG THE DEALERS.

No Matter What the Season, Sales Go Merrily on—Recent Buyers and What They Have Bought.

Harry Burt has an American for his rental service, which is the third car of that make in the business.

During the past week Wayne runabouts have been sold to Dr. A. P. Wilson and the Imperial Curtain Cleaning Company.

Northern touring cars of the two-cylinder type have been sold to Allen Craig, R. D. Wade and Charles Off.

"S. S." Smith has just sold an Elmore to E. R. Thomas, but not the famous manufacturer of that name. This Mr. Thomas is a miner, and lives at Emigrant Springs in the Death Valley region, fifty miles from a railroad.

The Maxwell-Briscoe-Willcox Company has been busy lately, and reports sales of the Maxwell as follows: Tourabouts to the Union Hardware & Metal Company, W. F. Callander and Howard Taylor of Los Angeles, and to C. Y. Martin & Son and Mr. Kelley of Santa Ana; and speedsters to Dr. H. G. McNeil, J. H. Young and the Los Angeles Railway Company, which got two cars.

Manager Lee had nineteen Cadillacs on his floor ten days ago, and now there is one. Where they have gone is partly explained thus: Runabouts to Dr. J. M. King, and J. F. Goodwin of Santa Maria; light touring cars to D. F. Baxter, Dr. Broughton, Whiting Wrecking Company, W. H. Cooper, Julius Conrad, H. N. Stringer of Long Beach, B. S. Virden of Oxnard and C. C. Carter of Redlands; four cylinder cars to Dr. R. W. Whomes and Thomas Vigus; and a delivery wagon to the City Dye Works.

Charles L. Pinney has bought a thirty-horse-power Mitchell touring car, and has had the body changed so as to make the tonneau removable. Thus he has a high-powered runabout and a family car in one.

HOW THEY TOOK CORNERS.

Manager Swan Saw Elimination Trials and Tells of the Driving—Some Couldn't Keep to Course.

John W. Swan, manager of the Diamond Motor Car Company, has just returned from a trip to the factories, and while East took the opportunity to see the elimination races for the Vanderbilt cup. Speaking of the driving he said recently:

"Le Blon was the prettiest driver of the lot. When he came around a turn, he swept along smoothly, and never swayed out of the curve he was making. He never underestimated or overestimated his speed, but always came up to the difficult parts of the course at just the right rate to negotiate the turn. The performance of Harding in the Haynes was the next best, and Tracy also did well, but at the difficult turns he slowed down to a much lower rate of speed than the others. Once he almost stopped, having made a false estimate of his speed.

"Some of the drivers would swerve from side to side and slide around the corners first one way and then another, and it is a wonder they stayed on the course."

Mr. Swan while East had a ride in the new 60-horse-power air-controlled Northern, and expects a demonstrator of that type fairly soon. He says it is one of the finest ever. He also went to the Waltham factory, and arranged for 1907 cars. The little $400 runabout he does not expect to handle this coming season, but demonstrators of the other types will be here soon.

NEW HOME FOR ELMORE.

Self-Starting Smith Takes to Sylvan Quietude of Figueroa Street, for Five-Year Stay.

After the first of the coming month the Elmore agency will be housed in another building. A. J. Smith has announced his departure from Gasoline Row for the sylvan quietude of Figueroa street.

He has just concluded a five-year lease of the building at Nos. 1228-32 Figueroa street, at present occupied by the Phillips garage. This is one of the largest places in the city for the automobile business, and Mr. Smith will have all of it for the exclusive use of himself and the Elmore. The machinery and shops at present there will be removed to some other place, so that over 9000 square feet of floor space will be in use for the Elmore.

Mr. Smith is going to have a fine show room, with all the wrinkles that he picked up in the East incorporated in the fixings.

During his trip to the factory he acquired the entire Pacific Coast agency for the Elmore, a territory extending westward from Denver to the ocean. He also contracted for 100 cars, but this allotment is for the Los Angeles house alone, and the demands of other parts of the territory will be filled from another allotment.

TOP FLOOR FOR TOPS.

Franklin Factory Makes New Departure and Henceforth Will Build Its Own Tops.

A new departure at the Franklin factory is the manufacture of tops. This has been made necessary by the steadily increasing demand for them as a regular part of automobile equipment. From orders already received by the Franklin people and other manufacturers in the vicinity, the officers of the factory estimate that fully 70 per cent. of all automobiles sold this season will be so equipped. The demand is not only for tops, but in general for a good grade of tops.

In arranging for this new class of work the Franklin people have devoted nearly the whole part of the top floor of the main building to the plant, and have employed a large number of experienced men. Within a few weeks the factory will be able to supply the demands of buyers. One advantage of having the tops made in the factory is that a good fit to the irons is assured.

Auto Club to Build.

The San Gabriel Valley Automobile Club has inaugurated a movement for the building of a commodious clubhouse. Until this can be accomplished temporary quarters will be secured. This club has now a membership of forty-five, and is devoting its energies to the securing of good roads and all things helpful to public progress in the upper San Gabriel Valley. At a recent meeting green and gold was selected as the club colors.

To Visit Factory.

J. E. Paul and James Speed of the Southern California Motor Car Company have gone East on a visit to the American and Marion factories, to arrange for next year's deliveries. They are also agents for the Grout, but they will not take the time to go clear back to Massachusetts, where the Grout is made. The American for 1907 will be a higher-powered car, and there will be a runabout on racing lines that will have several unique points, especially having the frame hung very low, underneath the axles. Paul and Speed hope to hurry up a demonstrator of this, as well as arrange for more cars than they had this season.

WHITTIER BOYS BADLY BEATEN.

VISITORS PUT UP PLUCKY GAME BUT ARE OUTCLASSED.

High School Rolls Up Twenty-six Points to Nothing—Stan Mitchell Views Contest from Sidelines Until Second Half—Negro Boy Plays Sensational Ball.

Football men of Los Angeles High bowled the Whittier players over the gridiron at Fiesta Park, yesterday, and rolled up the highest score of the season. Whittier was defeated 26 to 0.

From the kick-off the advantage was decidedly in favor of the locals who showed their superiority by working successfully the forward pass, and exhibiting a knowledge of the new rules which should work in their favor later in the season.

Whittier was woefully weak in spots, and large holes were torn through left tackle and right guard whenever the High School backs charged. The game was spectacular but not exciting. Whittier looked fit as the State school's lads trotted onto the field shortly before 3 o'clock. The school band struck up lively airs and there was much enthusiasm. The boys went through five or ten minutes of signal practice and gave place to their opponents.

POUND THE LINE.

Whittier kicked to High School a few minutes after the hour and at once the pounding qualities of the locals were apparent. With terrific line smashes they advanced the ball, worked two forward passes for short gains, and by hitting the Whittier tackle and guard went steadily down the field and over the line for the first touchdown after only five minutes of play.

Surprised, but not conquered, Whittier went into the fray after the second kick-off and also succeeded in making gains with the forward pass and twice worked the delayed pass for distance. High School began to be a little worried when Whittier lost the ball on downs.

Again the locals pounded the weak spots in the State school team and the effect of the charges was seen in the distressed condition of the visitors. Buck after buck netted substantial gains and the ball went over the line for the second touchdown, and the game was practically won.

Another brace by the visitors kept the ball see-sawing forth and back in the center of the field. The spheroid changed hands several times after the third kick-off, but High School continued to gain and cross the line for another touchdown before the whistle blew. Score at end of first half: High School, 16; Whittier, 0.

MITCHELL GOES IN.

Whittier opened the second half by kicking 40 yards into High School territory. The locals, strengthened by Stan Mitchell in the back field, went into the play savagely. Three minutes of line bucking was necessary to bring the ball the length of the field and over the line.

The next kick-off was enlivened by Kyle, Whittier left end, a negro player. After a hard scrimmage Kyle got away and went down the field 35 yards, almost clearing the last man. This was Whittier's only chance to score, and though Kyle broke away twice after this, his mates lacked the ginger to send him on and Whittier dropped back into a defensive style of play.

Following the same battering-ram tactics, High School forced the ball down the field for another touchdown and would have scored again had not the referee's whistle closed the game. Final score: High School, 26; Whittier, 0.

PERSONAL—

Business.

PERSONAL—
MRS. MASSON, the noted palmist of London, Eng., may be consulted at 222 S. SPRING ST. (Suite 17,)
by those desiring CAREFUL, CONSCIENTIOUS, AND SCIENTIFIC HAND-READINGS FROM ONE OF THE FOREMOST PALMISTS OF THE DAY.

The earnest student and thinker will soon learn, in his investigations along psychological lines, that what pertains to occult phenomena proper can readily be distinguished from crude and oft-exposed SLEIGHT-OF-HAND TRICKS, the most common of which is the telling of the subject's name, age, etc., AFTER HE HAS HIMSELF WRITTEN THAT INFORMATION.

PALMISTRY, HONESTLY PRACTICED, WILL NOT tell you your name, but it WILL give you information of considerably greater value in every-day life.

Your vocation, your present line of work, matters of health, marriage and domestic life, financial conditions and ways and means of climbing out of a rut of ill-luck into wide paths of success and prosperity can all be told you through scientific palmistry, WITHOUT A SINGLE QUESTION, WRITTEN OR VERBAL.

MRS. MASSON DOES NOT APPEAL TO IGNORANT SUPERSTITION, BUT TO THE FINEST INTELLIGENCE.
HIGH-CLASS PATRONAGE SOLICITED.
(Daily and evenings; Sundays, 9 to 3.)
14

PERSONAL—
MME. LE PIERRO,

One of the foremost and well-known Scientific palmist and psychic life reader, born with double veil; all hidden mystery revealed; when only a child it revealed to her that she was endowed to this by Mme. Morrow, of Nepoleon fame, and has devoted her entire life to it; will tell your past, present and future; will show you how to overcome your enemies; your vocation and ability; your health, wealth and happiness all depends upon you knowing yourself. All who wish a true, accurate, reliable life reading and learn facts and not fictions in place of truth, call at once and consult a reliable palmist and life reader. Psychic teaching and developing.
MME. LE PIERRO,
654 S. HILL ST.
This week 50c. 14

KNOW THY FUTURE
BY CONSULTING THE WORLD'S GREATEST CLAIRVOYANT, PALMIST AND SPIRIT MEDIUM,

PROF.
MILBURN

PERMANENTLY LOCATED IN HIS OWN HOME, 659 S. HILL ST., 659, CORNER OF SEVENTH ST.

Forty years a practicing psychic, known from ocean to ocean as the marvel of two hemispheres, press and public recognize Prof. Milburn as the foremost and most able clairvoyant and spirit medium now before the public. Where others fail he succeeds with ease and he positively will NOT accept fee for his readings unless you are perfectly satisfied and receive the information you desire. Marvelous demonstrations of second sight, that must be seen to be believed, so be sure and consult him at once. Elevate thyself! Know thy future. Positively no equal on earth in his profession. By his wonderful powers he will tell your full name, tells what you called for, tells what you want to know. If not correct, free, free. So positive am I of my power to tell the past, present and future that I will make NO CHARGE, NO CHARGE, NO CHARGE, unless you obtain the information you desire and find me superior to all clairvoyants, palmists and mediums in this city.

SPECIAL OFFER FOR ONE WEEK ONLY.

Realizing there are many skeptical people in Los Angeles, and that this city has been overrun with pretenders under the guise of clairvoyance, palmistry, etc., and that many of its best citizens would be only too anxious to visit a TRUE clairvoyant medium were they assured of satisfaction, therefore Prof. Milburn will (to convince the public of Los Angeles of his superiority over all clairvoyants) give his full readings to all, for seven days only, at

50C

WHEN CONSULTING A CLAIRVOYANT ALWAYS CONSULT THE BEST. AS A TEST IN THE READING HE WILL TELL YOUR NAME, AGE, OCCUPATION, WHOM AND WHEN YOU WILL MARRY.

ASSISTANCE FOR TROUBLED OR UNFORTUNATE—If you are in trouble of any kind, discontented, unhappy, or not satisfied in life, or have domestic, love or business troubles, you will be told how to overcome all trouble. WHEN OTHERS FAIL HE SUCCEEDS WITH EASE.

HE GIVES ADVICE ON BUSINESS, speculation, investments, insurance, changes, travels, health, sickness, love, divorce, marriage, lawsuits, separations, wills, deeds, mortgages, patents, claims, collections, mining, etc. He will tell you what trade, speculation, or profession you are adapted for.

LAWSUITS, WILLS, DIVORCES—He can render you assistance and give you advice in a way that will bring success in business transactions, property speculation, investments, mining, etc.

LOVE, COURTSHIP, MARRIAGE—Gives truthful revelations of all love affairs, troubles, marriages, restores lost affections, reunites the separated, settles lovers' quarrels, etc.

Tells how to WIN the man or woman you love, and how to make your husband or wife be true to you, and how to overcome all your enemies.

WHY CONSULT AN INFERIOR MEDIUM WHEN PROF. MILBURN, THE ACKNOWLEDGED LEADER OF THEM ALL, IS HERE AND HIS FEE NO HIGHER THAN THOSE LESS COMPETENT.

His past record and strictly honorable dealings are sufficient guaranty for his future work and have won the good will of the press and public.

READING BY MAIL, ONE DOLLAR.
SEND DATE OF BIRTH.
REMEMBER THE REDUCED PRICES FOR ONE WEEK ONLY.

HOURS—10 a.m. to 8 p.m. daily and Sunday. Satisfaction garanteed or no pay. All business sacred and confidential. Lady in attendance. Private parlors and office.

REMEMBER THE NAME!

SPECIAL READINGS.

25C

FOR FOUR DAYS ONLY.
Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday.

REGULAR FEE, $2, $3 AND $5.
ALL READINGS REDUCED THIS WEEK.

If you contemplate consulting a life-reader, several things should be taken into consideration, ABILITY, the HONESTY of methods, the FAIRNESS of dealings, the HIGHER degree of work, the ACCURACY of each prediction, the COMMON-SENSE used with it, the INTEREST taken in each case, the RESPECT shown to each caller, the fact of SECRECY in consultation, the FEE charged for services.

These things, taken under consideration, will place a thinking public in a position to judge for themselves and not be misled, imposed upon or their time thrown away.

WONDERFUL—ASTONISHING—CONVINCING.
ST. ELMO WILL tell you your full name, age, occupation, your mother's maiden name and whom and when you will marry and what you called for, without asking you a question; will tell you the name of your sweetheart, or anything you want to know. He sends you away much wiser and happier than when you called.

IT IS NOT ONLY WHAT CAN BE SAID BY AN ABLE LIFE-READER, BUT WHAT CAN BE DONE, for besides the wonderful gift of second sight, Mr. St. Elmo possesses the secret knowledge of reconstructing unhappy domestic affairs, of making the home happy, of gaining the one you wish in marriage, of making the one you love admire and love you, of overcoming rivals and enemies, gives you the secret power of influencing others (without their knowledge,) into doing your every wish. LEARN THE EAST INDIA METHOD OF FASCINATION.

WANTED—TO PURCHASE REAL ESTATE.
I want a good income investment in the semi-business property, small stores or flats, or both which will show a fair rate of interest on the investment. I also want small piece of acreage on car line, near Los Angeles, at reasonable price. I will continue advertising until I get what I want. My time is valuable, and cannot run around with three or four hundred real estate men looking at something which is not desirable, so please give exact location, full description, size of lot, contents, etc., and how to get there, the lowest price for all cash, and best terms for part cash, balance on 3-year mortgage at 6 per cent. If you cannot give details, don't answer.

MY MAGAZINE, "INVESTING FOR PROFIT," (which I'll send free) is worth $10 a copy to any man who intends to invest any money, however small; who has money invested unprofitably, or who can save $5 or more per month, but who hasn't learned the art of investing for profit.
It demonstrates the REAL earning power of money—the knowledge financiers and bankers hide from the masses.
It shows how to invest small sums and how to make them grow into fortunes—the actual possibilities of intelligent investments.
It reveals the enormous profits bankers make and shows how one can make the same profits safely.
It explains HOW stupendous fortunes are made and WHY they are made—how $1000 grows to $22,000.
To introduce my magazine write me NOW, mention this paper and I'll send it SIX MONTHS FREE.

FOR SALE—
Well established MACHINERY BUSINESS (incorporated,) controlling sole Western agency of superior machinery, and having large orders booked, wishes to interest additional capital. (About $10,000 required.) Bona fide proposition. Address X, box 137, TIMES OFFICE. 14

A VERY REMARKABLE OPPORTUNITY for a man with $500 to engage in manufacturing a staple building material, the demand for which is increasing every day, everywhere. Profit averages 100 per cent. No risk. No partnership. Control of business entirely in your own hands. Can be established in any town. Presents unusual advantages to a carpenter, stone-mason, bricklayer, architect, builder or contractor, although previous experience is absolutely unnecessary, and anyone can engage in it. One man in Indiana did a business of $16,000 the first year and doubled it the next year on an original investment of $500, and this is but one of many similar successes. Full particulars and unquestioned references to those who show evidence of being in earnest. IDEAL CONCRETE MACHINERY CO., South Bend, Ind.

FOR SALE—
A manufacturer controlling valuable patents, on a wonderful necessity, which is a proven seller, cannot for the lack of health and age carry the enterprise on to its great possibilities that await the active management required, desires an interview with some one who is in a position to invest $10,000; is willing to consider some real estate in exchange and courts the strictest investigation. I OWN FIVE BROAD PATENTS, PROCESS and constructive, which entirely cover a new art, the conversion of music and harmonics into electro-magnetic vibrations and passing them through the human organism, the person being in direct or vibratory contact at any distance away from the source of musical generation. This process has been tested and has proven to be an immediate deadener of pain, and of the greatest benefit for any disease, its effects being felt at once. These methods and devices can be used in sanitariums and cities in the same manner as the telephone. A central office, and music transmitted, heard and felt by each subscriber at their homes, some of them are also adapted to be used for exhibition purposes on the vaudeville stage, others are specially adapted for mail-order business. I am already fixed to manufacture them, but desire to interest one or more parties with money who will push their commercial exploitation in this and foreign countries. FOR SALE—THE VALUE OF AN INCUBATOR is determined by what percentage of fertile eggs it will hatch and not by what it is supposed to hatch. If you are at all skeptical about the hatching qualities of the SURE HATCH incubator, come and see them hatching, and be convinced. The SURE HATCH is winning on account of its utter simplicity, all the head splitting theories of moisture and air are overcome by this machine, and gives the operator no trouble whatever. If you cannot come and see them hatching, send for our new catalogue and hand book, on poultry culture. 5 years' guarantee. We pay the freight anywhere. DOKE STOCK FOOD CO., 711 S. Main st. Anna P. FOR SALE—

COEUR D'ALENE MINING STOCK.

I handle all the stocks quoted on this market of the Coeur D'Alene Mining District. I have visited a number of the properties owned by the different companies, therefore am familiar with the majority of the best known and most active stocks of the Coeur d'Alene, and know from personal investigation the real merit and value which these stocks represent.

Through my efforts in placing the treasury stock of numerous prospects, they have been developed into paying mines, among these being Snowstorm, Big Creek, and Tamarack and Chesapeak.

SNOWSTORM I originally sold at 15c. It is now worth $2. This stock paid a dividend of $90,000, or 6c a share, in this month.

BIG CREEK, another property, the treasury stock of which I sold at 10c, is now soaring toward the dollar mark.

I am in the market for:
Reindeer,
Idaho Los Angeles,
Tarbox,
O. K.,
Big Creek,
Tamarack Chesapeake,
Stewart Benton,
Moonlight,
Rex.

I have for sale:
Idaho Los Angeles,
Benton,
Tarbox,
O. K.,
Reindeer,
Mayflower,
Moonlight,
Oom Paul,
Rex,
Stewart,
Stanley,
Silver Cliff,
Little Chief,
Iron Crown,
West Bell,
Great Northern (near Burke, Idaho).

The Idaho-Los Angeles has just made a remarkable strike of rich carbonate ore of shipping quality, the stock is now 15 cents a share, and I believe this stock will be worth 50 cents before the first of the year. The property of the Idaho-Los Angeles is on the same vein as the Tamarack and Chesapeak, the stock of which is now $1.50 and the company is making steady shipments of ore to the smelter.

SNOWSTORM EXTENSION MINING CO.

This property is appropriately named, it being the adjoining claims to the now famous big copper producer, THE SNOWSTORM COMPANY of Mullan, in the Coeur d'Alene district. The Snowstorm Extension Copper Mining Company owns 3000 feet of the Snowstorm vein adjoining the latter property to the east. No long cross cuts will be necessary as in the case of all the other properties to the west, but driving toward the Snowstorm from the North Fork, the vein can be picked up from the start. Contract has been given for 200 feet of tunnel on the Snowstorm Extension. Two shifts of miners are to drive the tunnel, and the work will be pushed to the limit under excellent management.

This property bids fair to being a second Snowstorm, which is now paying 6c a share dividend on 1,500,000 shares.

A limited block of the treasury stock of the Snowstorm Extension is now being placed.

THE D. & W. MINING COMPANY owns a copper property located 40 miles from the Needles, Cal., which has a most excellent showing, and will bear the strictest investigation. We are offering the first block of treasury stock (limited to 50,000 shares) at 15 cents a share. This is a new property, but has the highest recommendation of the best mining experts, and has exceptional values on the surface which have been proven to increase with depth. We have personally inspected the property, and what we say to you is from personal observation, and not hearsay, and we are willing to back up our statements by offering to pay your way to and from the mine, if our statements are not facts. From assays we have had of the ore, we expect to be shipping before a great while, therefore the opportunity to buy at this price, 15c, will not last long.

For further information:
A. J. RICHARDSON,
610 Chamber of Commerce.

I HAVE FOR SALE AND CAN RECOMMEND at these prices, the following Coeur D'Alene stocks:
Reindeer at 16c.
Tarbox at 6c.
Moonlight at 6c.
Trade Dollar at 3 1-4c.
Horn Silver at 3c.
Headlight at 15c.
O. K. Con. at 6¼c.
And many others.
All Big Creek stock is withdrawn from the market, but I have another which will equal if not excel it; let me tell you about it; we commence shipping in 90 days.

CLOVERINE WASHES AND POLISHES without the use of water. Preserves the varnish and paint from heat and moisture, and keeps it from cracking or chipping. Is not a varnish, but a surface food which cleans the old finish and supplies it with new life and elasticity, bringing out all the old-time brilliancy and adding more gloss to it. Renews enameled surfaces, as well as nickeled and other metal parts. Requires no labor whatever; merely wipe off your machine with a piece of cheesecloth moistened in the Cloverine, and the work is done. Cleanses the leather upholstering in a manner that is truly wonderful. Sold to do as represented or money refunded.
Not a metal polish.

We want every teamster who uses heavy wagons for hauling sand, gravel, brick, etc., to come and see what the "WEBER" King of all wagons looks like; it is far ahead of the average wagon in strength, finish, light running and great carrying capacity; a 3-inch steel skein Weber gear will carry as much as a 3¼-inch of any other make. Come in and satisfy yourself that this is so.
SOLD ON INSTALLMENTS.
We will sell these wagons to responsible parties on monthly payments; if you want a harness we will sell you one the same way, and sell it for less than you can get it elsewhere.
We want your trade, and will give you a square deal. 14

MINING—

INCORPORATING—SELLING OF STOCK. GET INTO ACTION NOW.

Every indication points to this being the most successful year ever known in the sale of stock of legitimate mining and other companies. The insurance scandal, and the almost impossible task of disposing of property in the East, caused by the unsettled conditions of the real estate market there, have caused thousands to invest in good mining propositions that never would touch them before. For once the general public is making money by investing in mining stocks, etc. We make it a specialty of our business to assist those who have strictly legitimate properties to place in the East. We will not consider a single proposition unless it can be proven reliable and honest. If you have such, and are ready to stand the preliminary cost, we can and will help you. Our whole organization is at the disposal of those who can meet these requirements. We have a splendid list of agents' names, gotten from the very highest sources, who will take hold of good propositions. See us when you are ready to incorporate, or finance your company. CHAPMAN BRISCOE & CO., 702 Delta Bldg., 426 S. Spring street. 14

FOR SALE—MINES—
$100,000—Gold mine, Nevada, working.
$5000—Copper mine, Searchlight, promising.

OLD ELI PUZZLES HOLY CROSS MEN.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW HAVEN (Ct.) Oct. 13.—Yale won a decisive victory over the Holy Cross football eleven here today, 17 to 0. The contest was free from roughness and abounded in punting and end runs. Holy Cross was unable to solve Yale's defense and although frequently within striking distance, failed to secure their advantage on fumbles by the Yale backs. The home team scored one touchdown in the first half and two in the second.

BROWN'S NO-HIT GAME.

San Francisco's Pitcher Only Allows One Batsman, Who He Hit, to Reach First.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

OAKLAND Oct. 13.—Brown's remarkable delivery was the feature of a fast game at Idora Park today and resulted in a complete shut-out for Oakland. The home team was utterly unable to touch Brown. Score:

versity freshmen was one of the exciting ever played on grounds and the crowd of tors were kept for the most their feet. Few had expected could rouse so much enthusiasm at no time did interest lag.
The most remarkable part of game was that no players suffered slightest injury. In the first a man had to lay out and in ond only three dropped from haustion rather than any harm. The California freshmen excellent game, equal in every to that of Stanford and in many spects superior.
Berkeley's scrum was far Cardinal and their team remarkable considering short practice. Stanford lost through many errors and plays, but had it not been weakness in that particular Berkeley probably would won, as the score was made penalty kick. Very little was done and in the first half cially there seemed to be not to kick much, which is good Rugby players a very feature of the game. Stanford's ing was perhaps somewhat better that of California, although both were good in that respect.

LITTLE IS A STAR.
R. Little, captain of Stanford was the star player of the match headwork was no less than his excellent kicking
ing. On the other hand,
captain of Berkeley's team, of the headiest men on the time after time distinguished by clever playing. C. Thorpe of Los

FACT AND COMMENT.

THE Oakland Tribune in an issue of recent date makes an impressive display of a little item regarding the appearance of some Los Angeles real estate dealers in that city. It is not surprising to us that some of the active men interested in real estate in this city should seek scope for their energies abroad. Things are exceedingly active at home, but, although this is a pent-up Utica, it is not big enough to contain all the surplus energy of the thousand or more brokers who are trying to make a living or a little more dealing in real estate. Like the famous Macedonian general, they are all the time sighing for new worlds to conquer. Even Oakland under present circumstances may seem attractive to some of them. But when the Oakland paper sneers at the activity in Los Angeles real estate as different from conditions prevailing on the wrong side of the bay, saying that with them values are based on "a substantial growth and genuine prosperity, and not on an artificial system of boosting," it goes a little bit out of its way.

—o—

We Are All Alike.

We are all alike in this matter of "artificial boosting." There is no denying the fact that the Los Angeles real estate agent has acquired exceeding great skill by long practice in boosting, whether his system is artificial or natural. There is a good deal of art in selling real estate, as there is in selling anything else, and the dealers in Oakland do not differ radically from those of Los Angeles in the way of morals. They may in the way of skill. If the Oakland fellow, who wants to earn, or at least to obtain, a commission, could use a little art he certainly would not be behind in the use of it any more than his fellow-agent in Los Angeles. Another word about "substantial growth and genuine prosperity." If the growth of Los Angeles is not substantial enough and the prosperity not genuine enough, it will be hard to find a city where the growth is more substantial and the prosperity more genuine. Our fellows down here use all the art they are able to cultivate, and they have cultivated a good deal of it, but it would not obtain results were it not for the "substantial growth and genuine prosperity" which prevailed in Los Angeles for the last twenty-five years with scarcely any interruption. "Substantial growth?" There are coming into the city in these recent years something like 30,000 new people a year. These all must have houses made to house them. That looks like pretty substantial growth. The clearings through the Los Angeles clearing house during the last year were more than in the previous year, or 33 per cent. increase. That prosperity looks tolerably genuine. During the month of June last there were issued permits to build aggregating in cost $870,000. There were issued last week in Los Angeles permits to build aggregating in cost $891,000. Another sign of both "substantial growth and genuine prosperity."

—o—

How to Build Homes.

A New York architect named Palliser has published a book called "Up-to-Date House Plans," which contains 150 designs of buildings to cost from $500 up. This book will, no doubt, prove convenient and of value to many people of quite moderate means who desire to build a house. It will not prove so in Los Angeles. The style of houses shown in the plates of the book is not at all what prevails with us. The first half of the book is devoted mostly to houses of very moderate cost, and their outlines are exceedingly plain and inartistic. They are such structures as you find on small eastern farms. The bungalow or cottage now being built in Los Angeles at a cost of $1000 to $1500 is an exceedingly more artistic production than those shown in the New York book. Some of the designs are absolutely hideous. There are some that are called Dutch colonial homes with [illegible] in it, which would create a [illegible] on the part of the least observant person in the world. There are one or two houses of this style along [illegible] boulevard, and no resident of Los Angeles ever passes them without [illegible] attention to their extreme ugliness.

What Is a Cottage?

In the book just referred to all the buildings marked cottages are two stories, some of them two stories and an attic. With us, a cottage means always a one-story building. If it is a story and a half it has come now to be classed as a bungalow, and anything with two full stories is dignified as a house. There are many cottages which are called bungalows having only one story, but in nearly every instance where the home is a story and a half, it is now being built in bungalow style. There is another feature about this architect's book that attracts attention. The plans which he characterizes as colonial show the colonial style of architecture in a very modified form from the real colonial type. They have towers and other ornament not found in the original American colonial style house. But this is not exceptional. There are very few architects at the present time who even pretend to try to produce a house of any pure style of architecture. They are nearly all very composite or exceedingly modified. Some of the purists among the architects object to these modifications, and this combination of styles, but the people generally see nothing to object to in such treatment of houses; indeed, they rather approve of it, as shown by the general demand of this composite or modified style of house. A mission house, with a Greek portico is certainly not in the line of purity in architecture, but it has an exceedingly attractive effect and an entrance of great convenience as well as beauty.

in Real Estate.

statements appearing in Fact Comment a week ago about the values in real estate in differ- attracted a good deal of at- a fact which indicates that it attractive. The New York Sun most impressive instance of increase in value in real estate in New York City. John M. Bixby came from the interior of New York to the city of New York about 1830, or earlier. He says of himself that he was a raw, poor, struggling lawyer, paying $4 a week for board and washing and finding great difficulty in making both ends meet. A lawyer friend said to him one day: "Here's a chance for you to buy a farm. I want to sell it to close an estate and you can have it for $200." Bixby had no money. The lawyer said he would take his note and wait, and renew the note as long as he paid the interest until he could sell the property and make something out of it. He was reluctant to take the chance, but finally did so, risking the shouldering of so large a debt as $200. The property is on Murray Hill. The farm lay in the square at present bounded by Fifth and Sixth avenues, Thirty-ninth and Fortieth streets, and other blocks adjacent to these. The Union League Club is at present on one of the corners; the Casino is on another. The old Bixby House still exists on Fortieth street and Fifth avenue. After two or three years a small part of the farm was sold for enough to lift the note, pay Bixby back the interest and taxes he had expended, and he had the rest free for nothing. Forty years ago Bixby said it was worth about $7,000,000.

Population and Values.

Of course this New York property is probably worth today many times as much as it was in 1867. Its increase in value came with the growth of population in the city. What is the ratio between population and real estate values in a growing city? The best experts say that the addition of 1000 to the population of a town adds from $12 to $16 a front foot to the lots in the best business sections. But the addition of 100,000 population in some instances may not change the value of other lots in the same city by a single dollar. Indeed, with the growth of population it is not an unheard-of thing for values in one part of the city to depreciate instead of rise. It depends upon the trend of the population and the uses to which the property can be put. Therefore it would be impossible to base any statement as to the increase in value of property upon the increase in the total population of the city. It would be necessary to learn the increase in the population in any given section of the city to work out an estimate of the legitimate increase to put upon the lands. Residence property will hardly rise in value so rapidly with the growth of population as business property. A great deal depends upon public facilities. Values will not rise in a section of the city where street-car service, electric service and gas are not good. It will not rise in a section of the city where the property owners will not spend money to put in a proper sewer system, to improve the streets and sidewalks in a proper way. Under such circumstances population will not go into those sections of a city. Then in the industrial districts, railroad facilities of course count for a great deal in fixing the value of property.

Investment and Speculation.

Los Angeles real estate agents have a way of speaking of buying property as an investment where it is purely a speculation. Any person who buys property in a district lacking in facilities which will allow that property to be used for its natural purpose cannot be called an investment. It is nothing less than a pure speculation. It is never possible to foretell whether railroads will penetrate a given district until they are there. No one can foresee when gas and electric service will be certainly extended to a given point, and until these things are determined the value of the land remains entirely problematic. The person who buys to hold, either until he can use the property himself or sell to somebody who wishes to use it, and in either case he is speculating, not investing. He may get his money back, or the value of it in the use of the property, but the day may never come when he can realize this hope.

BY OWNERS AND DEALERS.

MODERATE COST LOTS IN VERY ACTIVE DEMAND.

Industrial and Business Property Sells at Stiff Prices—Acreage for Investment Brings Good Prices. Suburban Activity—Very Firm Market.

On East Ninth.

Charles O. Goodwin has sold to Dr. J. R. Hinde of Illinois, 112 feet on East Ninth street, near McGarry, for $10,000.

Washington Street.

M. Hurtwitz has sold to Thomas E. Metcalf, through Del Valle & Freeman and McKoon & Metcalf, an unimproved lot about 53x176 feet, on the north side of West Washington street, between Cherry and Oak streets, and looking down Norwood, for $7000.

Good Sale on Los Angeles Street.

Sherwood & Koyer have sold for Newell Mathews Company the property at No. 121 to 127 South Los Angeles street for $51,500. The property is about 70x175 feet and has an old two-story brick building thereon which rents for $235 per month. The new owners, Albert A. Reed, James H. Woods, A. S. Koyer and Hattie P. Sherwood, bought the property as a speculation.

Active Sale of Lots.

George W. Williams Company report the following sales of lots: Lot 50x125 feet on West Twety-ninth street near Western, Cora M. Ray to C. S. and W. A. Huff, $1200. Lot 47x125 feet on Flint avenue, just west of Durango, S. Preston to George R. Wells, $1000 cash. The purchaser will improve at once with a bungalow, to cost about $2500. Heyler to A. MacDonald, lot 50x145 feet on the east side of Los Angeles street, between Twenty-third and Washington, $5000. E. Florence to M. J. Miller, lot 50x130 feet, on the east side of Sixth avenue, between Washington and Twenty-third streets, $1400. George Goldworth to J. H. McCutcheon, lot 50x150 feet, improved with an eight-room residence, No. 2428 Budlong, $7200; purchased for a home. Miss E. Wolley to Lawrence Edwards, lot 50x150 feet on Tenth avenue, between Adams and Washington streets, $1000. Stanley Larman to H. G. Crock, lot 50x150 feet on the west side of Sixth avenue, between Twenty-third and Washington street, $1400. J. A. Bowden to W. O. McCubbin, lot 50x125 feet, improved with a six-room bungalow, No. 2305 Flint avenue, $3500. G. A. V. Meulen to W. J. Lawrence, lot 50x125 feet on the south side of Flint avenue, between Cimarron and Durango streets, $750. H. Wildey to J. Stigman, lot 45x135 feet, improved with an eight-room residence, No. 1156 East Twenty-seventh street, $3000. Purchased for a home. H. E. Newel to the California Bungalow Company, lot 50x118 feet, on the west side of Oxford avenue, between Washington and Sixteenth streets, $2200; purchaser will improve with an eight-room modern residence.

Big Sale on Main.

H. B. Smith has transferred to a local syndicate the southwest corner of Main and Pico streets for $131,250. This is at the rate of $1250 a front foot. The lot, upon which there are no improvements, has a frontage of 105 feet on Main street, and a depth of 150 feet.

Lake Street Lot Sold.

A. E. Boles buys of the Bush estate, through the agency of the C. J. Heyler Company, lot 120x306 feet, on the south side of Twentieth street, between Vermont avenue and Aubrey street, consideration $3100. Rudolf Mausard sells to a local investor through the same agency, 180x145 feet to an alley, on the west side of Lake street, between Twelfth and Pico streets, consideration $12,000.

Fine Home Bought.

Charles O. Goodwin has sold for the Clark estate the beautiful modern seven-room residence, No. 1124 West Adams, corner of Monmouth street, to Charles Legge of Pasadena. Consideration, $16,500.

Pico Street Sale.

Joseph F. Goodenow has sold to R. P. Wooly a lot on the south side of Pico street, between Main and Hill, the property being described as No. 142 Pico street. The consideration was $27,500. This lot, which is 50x150 feet, has on it a ten-room house.

Grand and Seventh.

A lot 60x110 feet on the northeast corner of Grand avenue and Seventh street has been sold by Philip Pholman for $160,000.

NEW RECORD SALE.

Fifty-four Dollars a Square Foot for a Lot on Fourth Street Between Spring and Main.

W. B. Merwin & Co. has sold to a syndicate of local capitalists a little lot, only 40x60 feet, for $130,000.

This is the old Holiness property, long known, on the north side of Fourth street, between Spring and Broadway. The lot is improved with a three-story building, the upper stories of which are occupied by the Holiness band still. Downstairs are stores. The improvements cut no appreciable figure in the price of the ground.

If you will figure by area, it will be seen that the price is $54 a square foot, which is a new record for the city of Los Angeles.

Although the building probably was looked upon as a negligible quantity in the purchase, yet it has an earning capacity which seems to justify the price. Its present leases pay about 6½ per cent. net on the investment.

For property so inadequately improved, bringing by square foot a price which makes a new record in Los Angeles, and yet paying so large an interest on the investment, is an unusually impressive fact.

SOLD AND RESOLD.

Hill Street Lot Brings a Profit of Twenty Thousand Dollars in Few Days.

George F. Valiant sold a few days ago to Allen H. Paull, through the agency of W. I. Hollingsworth & Co., the southeast corner of Hill and Tenth streets, being 150 feet on Hill by forty-four feet on Tenth, for $100,000. Since then the property has been resold to an eastern investor for $120,000, and this, too, before the actual recording of the papers in the first transaction.

The new owner has deeded the property to the Title Insurance and Trust Company with the most remarkable instructions for the sale of same. He has placed the price at $125,000 if sold within fifty days, after which $100 per day is to be added to the $125,000.

BUYING TO THE WEST.

Big Profit Taken in Three Years' Investment Along Vermont Avenue and Wilshire Boulevard.

About three years ago C. T Crowell bought a tract of twenty-two acres just west of Vermont avenue for $22,500. He has sold one-half of this, the north eleven acres, for $125,000 net. In addition to this purchase price the buyers pay the assessment for grading Wilshire boulevard and the commission of the agent who made the sale. West of this tract the same interests have bought a strip through two other pieces of property, one of them belonging to Godfrey Schmidt, and rumor has it that they paid about $22,500 for a seventy-five-foot strip through one of these tracts, the area being about an acre and a half or thereabouts, and through the other, the Pellissier tract, about $37,000 for a similar bit. This strip is about two acres. Beyond, around Tenth street, the same operators have secured a large slice of lots in the Forester Wilshire Heights tract, paying regular prices for the lots.

By this deal Crowell gets about five times the money that he put in three years ago, and has one-half of the property left.

GARVEY MAKES GOOD.

Sells Petrero Grande Ranch for Big Sum—Old Grant to Mission Fathers.

Richard Garvey and his son, Richard, Jr., have conveyed to M. N. Newmark the Potrero Grande ranch, lying along the Rio Honda and consisting of 232 acres of what has been known in Los Angeles as damp land. There are a number of fine wells upon the ranch, and it has an established walnut grove of 135 acres, the rest of the land being in alfalfa, excepting a small patch of oranges. The price paid for this ranch is $145,000. There goes with it all the water rights to the Rio Honda, and they are enough to irrigate thousands of acres lying anywhere below the source.

This land is historically interesting as being the first grant made by the Spanish government to the mission fathers. The old San Gabriel Mission was established on the bluff just over these lands, but the mission was afterwards removed several miles farther up the mesa to where the San Gabriel Church now stands. Mr. Newmark declares it to be his intention to hold this piece of property as a permanent investment.

A little while previous to this time, the Garveys sold to the same investor another piece of the Garvey ranch for $6000, making the total sale amount to $151,000.

The history of this Garvey ranch illustrates the immense increase in the value of real estate which has taken place in this valley during the last few years. Some years ago, Garvey owed about $110,000 on his ranch, a debt he had incurred to buy thirty inches of water from the Shorb ranch above it and to pipe it to his land. Some dispute arose as to the terms of the contract for the delivery of this water, and Garvey was put to exceedingly great inconvenience. The bank holding the note and mortgage foreclosed upon him, and the attorney for the bank at that time in open court claimed that the debtor was bankrupt.

In a foreclosure the debtor is given a year to redeem, according to the laws of California. Several months ago, he sold M. N. Newmark and his associates about 1000 acres of this ranch for $135,000. This was mesa land lying south of Alhambra. The money received paid Garvey's indebtedness to the bank and left him $25,000 in cash. That $25,000, added to the present $151,000, makes $176,000 the Garveys have received over and above their indebtedness.

He has 400 acres of land clear of all incumbrances left lying along the hills east of the old Monterey Pass.

WHAT FITCH IS DOING.

Boom in Pomona Real Estate With Many Sales at Increasing Values All Around.

J. A. Fitch reports an activity in real estate prevailing at Pomona which is astonishing, even here in these days of such general activity in the real estate market. He makes apologies to the real estate department for not having reported sales regularly, but Fitch says: "I have been too blamed busy to bother about reporting." The list that he hands in this week, covering not many weeks past, is so unreasonably long that the lack of space forces the condensation of the report. If the items were all given, with all their details, Fitch's list of sales would figure out something like $400,000 in value. When one considers that Pomona is but what is called a country town, although an exceedingly beautiful and prosperous one, these figures must appear astonishing. Following are a few of the more important sales around Pomona made by this single operator in the last couple of weeks:

P. J. Dreher to C. T. Naftel, twelve-acre orange grove, northeast corner San Antonio and Cucamonga avenues, $16,000.

Wallace Montrose to Ida R. Wilson, modern cottage, East Fourth street, $2500.

Emma A. Arbuckle to C. T. Naftel, thirteen-and-one-half-acre finely improved orange grove, $15,300.

James E. Orumm to a local investor, lot on West Fifth street, $700.

Same seller to a local investor, adjoining lot, $650.

R. D. Simpson to W. J. Allender, house and two lots, northwest corner Eighth and Parcells street, $1500.

Mrs. Enos Clark to D. R. Kelsey, cottage and lot, northeast corner Fifth and Gordon street, $2400.

The Pomona Improvement and Realty Company to local and outside investors, the northwest corner of block 199, also the southwest corner of block 200, comprising some ten acres, $1500. This is finely located, fronting San Antonio and Holt avenues. It is the intention of the new owners, now that the removal of the reservoir which blocks Holt avenue is assured, to subdivide and highly improve this tract and make it a high-class residence section.

F. E. Perley to Sarah E. Utassy, five-acre orange grove, East Holt avenue, $2400.

C. T. Naftel to P. J. Dreher, sixteen acres, part in full-bearing oranges, part vacant, on San Antonio avenue, near Holt, about $12,000.

Stoddard Jess, vice-president First National Bank, Los Angeles, to C. E. Walker, president of First National Bank, Pomona, five acres, highly improved, on North Ellen, near Holt, about $2000.

Thomas S. Wadsworth to Emma L. A. Sims, four lots on East Seventh street, near Fourth-Ward school, $1400.

Mrs. Sims also purchases two lots on West Holt avenue, near Rebecca street, for $1100.

Ida A. Romick sells to C. E. Rice, two lots near Fourth-Ward school for $500.

Charles Cawrey sells to J. F. Ulery forty feet of vacant business property, fronting West Second, adjoining the Edison Electric Company's plant, for $2000.

R. D. Simpson to C. S. Elwell, ten-acre ranch, northwest corner Ninth and Hamilton streets, $2500.

D. W. Chambers to R. Rathbun, two lots on West Ninth street, $750.

Lucy A. Arnsbry to local investor, house and lot on East Second street, $4000.

Besides these sales, of which details are available, Mr. Fitch has sold more than fifty other parcels to nearly as many individual buyers.

REAL ESTATE NOTES.

Nearly three and one-half miles of street work is nearing completion in J. Frank Bowen's tract No. 10, Vernon and Hooper avenue tract. A large number of lots has already been sold in advance of the street work. Contract for the street work in J. Frank Bowen's No. 12, Pleasant View Terrace, has been let and work will begin this week. This is a scenic tract at the city limits on the new Eagle Rock electric line, and is composed of orange grove, walnut grove, grain fields, foothill lots, the whole forming an unusual and superb combination. J. Frank Bowen reports the sales in his No. 7, Vernon and Compton-avenue tract, of half a dozen lots at $700 to $2050, a total of $5900.

Arthur W. Kinney Company, agent for the Fulmer tract, has sold to William McClelland, Jr., a sixty-foot lot on the south side of Leeward avenue, for $2400; also a lot on the south side of West Seventh street, seventy feet east of Vermont avenue, to C. R. Hixon, for $2500; also a lot on the south side of West Seventh street, 275 feet east of Vermont avenue, to R. B. Morris, for $2500.

The Howard Park Company report the sales of two lots of Athens acres, for $12,750. The annual stockholders' meeting of the Howard Park Company was held October 12, and the following directors were reëlected for the ensuing year: M. N. Newmark, Frank R. Strong, A. H. Busch, J. W. Vaughn, Daniel Stone, H. G. Watkins, George F. Burton. At a directors' meeting the following officers were reëlected: George F. Burton, president; A. H. Busch, vice-president; J. W. Vaughn, treasurer; J. A. Farnsworth, secretary.

W. P. Healey has sold to Sherman Pease through Arthur W. Kinney Company a modern ten-roomed house on the east side of Alvarado street, between Tenth and Eleventh, for $9750.

Arthur W. Kinney Co. reports the sale during the past week of eight lots in the Jefferson-street Park tract for a total of $7400.

Geo. J. Cote reports that the street work on Crenshaw boulevard is about completed, and that the roadway is being prepared for oiling, and that palms and shade trees on the whole tract are being set out. The tract consists of 112 lots, averaging 50x150 feet, on the east and west side of Crenshaw boulevard, between Washington and Adams. The special features of the boulevard are the street improvements and the seventeen-foot parkings, all to be set with palms and California poppies. Mr. Cote reports that since taking hold of the tract on the 8th of September over two-thirds of the lots have been sold.

Why not buy one of these remarkable properties? If you are looking for a home today you could not do better than select from this list. Let me show them to you.

VERY CHEAP COTTAGE.

This handsome little 6-room home is located near Vermont ave. in one of the best southwest streets. The lot fronts north, 50x135 feet, with shade, fruit, flowers, etc.; house 1 year old, all large rooms, and has hardwood floors throughout. It's a fine buy for $3600.

THE PRETTIEST BUNGALOW.

It is located on W. 28th st., in an all new neighborhood, and near good car service; the lot is nicely terraced, 50x135 feet; this bungalow is certainly a beauty, with wide veranda, hall, with seat and hall tree built in, large living-room with fireplace, and outside chimney, large paneled dining-room, three big sleeping-rooms, big closets, oak floors, Flemish oak finish, etc., etc.; a really perfect little home; price $4200; terms $1500 cash.

SOUTHWEST BARGAIN.

A large home of 8 rooms, besides reception hall and den, located in pretty and quiet street, southwest, near the University of Southern California; all rooms are large; 4 fine bedrooms, large bath and balcony, wide windows. The lot is 50x135 feet, finely improved with shade, flowers, much fruit and berries, chicken corral and house; price only $4600; terms $1000 cash.

ON WEST EIGHTH STREET.

This beautiful home is only 2 blocks from Westlake Park, close to two car lines, and has a view of the mountains that can never be cut off, full-sized lot, 50x135 feet, with cement retaining wall; neighborhood restricted to two-story houses; the house is practically new, a large, substantial, handsome home of 8 rooms, besides halls, large living-room, cosy library, bright dining-room, spacious reception hall, cabinet kitchen, oak floors, Flemish oak finish, basement and furnace pipes complete, four fine large bedrooms and balcony; nothing else like this property in all Westlake section; price $8500.

HERE'S A BARGAIN.

On a fine east-front lot, 60x135 feet, and in a neighborhood closely restricted to splendid two-story homes, we offer this large, handsome property; the house has stone and cement veranda, imposing entrance, large rooms throughout, especially the music and living-rooms, oak floors and Flemish oak finish, basement, furnace, etc., complete, four large bedrooms and a rear balcony on which two more could be easily built; auto barn, etc., etc.; as complete a home as is to be found anywhere in the city. And it would take $1000 more than the price asked to duplicate this property today. Price only $7500.

AN ELEGANT HOME.

A spacious 10-room residence, located in very closely restricted residence district, adjoining Adams st., in the best of the southwest. Here is a fine corner lot, handsomely and completely improved, and the house is as attractive as anything in the city. The entrance is from a pressed-brick veranda, which adds a striking touch to the beauty of the home. There are hardwood floors upstairs as well as down; Flemish oak finish; built-in appointments very complete; basement and furnace; no stairs; floored attic; five fine sleeping-rooms, partly inclosed large balcony; auto barn and oil-house; many flowers, etc.; just a complete, well-established home ready to move right into; price $8250.

HOME AND INVESTMENT, TOO.

This spacious 9-room mission-style home is located near W. Seventh and Rampart sts., on very large corner lot; the house is now a splendid home, having 5 bedrooms and every convenience; it fronts east and the neighborhood is unexcelled; but values are changing so rapidly that this corner cannot fail to be wanted for business or apartments reasonably soon, so to buy here now will surely make big money for the investor. The property would demand large rent if offered for that today. The price is only $10,500.

ON MAGNOLIA AVENUE.

Here is one of the most beautiful homes it has been our good fortune to offer. It sits in wide grounds, 70x140 feet to alley, and the locality is one of the best the city affords. The lower floor arrangement includes living-room 17x29, with pressed brick mantel and fireplace, seats, etc., dining-room, or the front, with brick mantel, buffet, paneled walls, etc., spacious reception hall, paneled and beamed in harmony with living-room and dining-room, so that it is a splendid addition to the beautiful arrangement of this home; two steps lead down to the den, in the rear of the reception hall, and this apartment is paneled, carefully appointed and has brick mantel. The floors are all oak, the lighting fixtures very fine, every appointment carried out in elegant harmony, above the ornamental stairs are four very large bedrooms, and a floored attic, large enough for two fine rooms. This property is very cheap at $10,000.

ONE BLOCK FROM WESTLAKE.

Here is a large, spacious, and very finely built home of ten rooms, located in perhaps the finest residence section of the city, which may be had at very low figure. The owner wishes to sell quick, and has just cut $1000 from his price to secure such a sale. Of the ten rooms five are on the lower floor, four bedrooms on the second, and the attic is finished to closets and one large room, 18x32 ft., full height, and admirable for two or three nice rooms. The rooms below stairs are dining-room, with mantel and fireplace, reception-room, also with mantel; splendidly large dining with swell bay, paneled and finished with plate rail and beautiful sideboard; den, which may be nicely used as servant's room; two pantries, complete kitchen, screen porch, etc., etc. Basement and furnace, auto barn, etc. Oak floors below stairs and in hall and bath above. Rear stairs extra large closets, up to date finish and arrangement throughout. The veranda is 12 feet wide, with the end inclosed in glass. The house stands on fine terraced lot, and commands beautiful view. Price reduced to $9000.

FOR SALE—

BEAUTIFUL BUNGALOW.

Artistic 6-room bungalow at 1919 W. 22nd street; lot 50x135; driveway on side, with a storeroom in rear.

BEDROOMS finished in white enamel, with walls hung in the very latest papers; one in green and white, the other blue and white; casement windows have leaded art glass.

PARLOR AND HALL have beautiful wall hangings, with panels done in free hand, hardwood floors in parlor.

LIVING-ROOM has long panels, with art shelves and lockers, a delightful place to spend the evenings.

BREAKFAST-ROOM shows careful planning, and the walls are finished in imitation marble, a very cosy and attractive room.

The best of plumbing, gas and electric fixtures throughout the house. The very latest heating devices have been installed; electric heating radiators.

Home life is here characterized by simple elegance. Utility has not been sacrificed for beauty. For finishing the different rooms two things have been kept in mind, simplicity and color scheme. The place serves, to a certain extent, as a model for young folks about to set up housekeeping.

You are invited to inspect the most artistic-built house in the city for the money.

Price $4250; $1000 cash; $25 per month.

DAVID BARRY & COMPANY,
DAVID BARRY & COMPANY,

(SUCCESSORS TO BARRY BROS.)

328-329 BRADBURY BLDG.

PHONES HOME A4082; MAIN 4083.

BELOW ARE BRIEF DESCRIPTIONS OF A FEW OF THE HOMES WE HAVE FOR SALE. WE HAVE INVESTIGATED THESE AND KNOW THEM TO BE OF GOOD VALUE, AND THEY ARE ALL LOCATED IN THE MOST DESIRABLE RESIDENCE DISTRICTS OF THE WEST AND SOUTHWEST. IF YOU FAIL TO FIND ANYTHING HERE THAT SUITS YOU, CALL ON US, FOR WE CAN SURELY PLEASE YOU.

FIVE-ROOM BUNGALOW.

$3300—$500 cash. If you are in the market for a home of this size it will pay you to see this. The location is new, Arlington and about three blocks to either the West Adams or West Jefferson car line. Pretty veranda, handsome reception hall, which is paneled and has built in seat; large living-room with cove ceilings and in one end is a pretty mantel; flanked with two bookcases, above bookcases are casement windows; dining-room is paneled and has a pretty built-in buffet; nice large kitchen and pantry, two nice large bedrooms; screen porch with tub. This is a very artistic bungalow without and within.

PRETTY SIX-ROOM COTTAGE.

$3400—Located on W. 23d near Vermont; reception hall, living-room, dining-room, kitchen, pantry, screen porch and three nice bedrooms and bath. The lot is 50x118 and is about 3 feet above the street; fine lawn and flowers; easy terms if desired.

A PRETTY SIX-ROOM BUNGALOW.

$3800—Entirely new and modern, and located in a nice section of the Southwest. From a nice porch you enter into the reception hall, pretty archway between hall and living-room; handsome brick mantel in living-room; dining-room is paneled and has built-in buffet; nice kitchen and pantry; three nice bedrooms and bath; oak floors in hall, living-room and dining-room. This bungalow has a very pretty exterior; lot 50x135.

A FINE SIX-ROOM BUNGALOW.

$4300—$1000 cash, located in a fine section of the S.W., handy to two car lines; you enter from a nice porch into reception hall, through pretty archway to living-room; the hall and living-room occupy the whole front of house; pretty dining-room paneled with corrugated slash grained Oregon pine; the finish on these rooms and front bedroom is the weathered oak and oak floors; two of the bedrooms finished in white; pretty cabinet kitchen finished in white; this bungalow will be entirely completed this week and ready to move into; lot 50x135.

ON THE HEIGHTS, NEAR ADAMS.

$4500—New 1½-story 6-room home, located on a corner, with east and north exposure; veranda across entire front; reception hall, living-room with brick mantel; dining-room paneled, built-in buffet and brick mantel; all these rooms have the dark finish and oak floors; nice kitchen, pantry and screen porch; upstairs there are three nice bedchambers, bath and balcony, from which one has a fine view of the mountains; lot 42x100; while this lot is not large, remember it is a corner, and in a fine section of the city. Terms 1-3 cash.

A BEAUTIFUL BUNGALOW.

$5000—This is one of the best bungalows to be had in the S. W. section of the city; it contains six large rooms and reception hall; the lot is 60x135. The entrance is from a large veranda into hall, on your right through pretty archway to living-room with handsome brick mantel, built-in bookcases and writing desk; through sliding doors into large dining-room which is paneled and has a very handsome built-in buffet; three very pretty bedrooms, two of which are finished in white; nice large kitchen with cabinets; also pantry with cabinets and bins. Attic with stairs from screen porch which makes a fine storage room. Fine lawn and flowers. This house has only been completed about four months.

A VERY ARTISTIC 7-ROOM BUNGALOW.

$5250—This is without doubt one of the most artistic bungalows to be found in the city at this price. Located on a corner in the S.W. part of the city near W. Adams car line. From the veranda which runs across the entire front you enter the living-room which is 15x30, and in one end is a fireplace which occupies the entire end of this room; paneled walls, arched ceilings, heavily beamed; beautiful dining-room, paneled 7 feet; built-in window seat and handsome buffet; a pretty little breakfast room; 3 pretty bedrooms and bath all finished in white enamel. Built-in features such as bookcases, china closets, kitchen and pantry cabinets and bins are made a feature in this bungalow, and add much to the attractiveness as well as to the interest of the interior. This bungalow is not quite complete, but if you wait until it is entirely finished it is likely that you will be too late.

ON DOUBLE CLEAN CORNER.

$6250—An entirely new, modern 8-room home, located on a fine wide avenue; you enter from a nice wide veranda with reception hall, on right of hall is the dining-room with swell bay with five windows; also large plate-glass window, pretty built-in buffet; on left of hall is the living-room with stone mantel; the den has built-in seats and bookcases; nice kitchen and pass pantry; four nice bedchambers with large closets, one of the bedrooms is very large; nice lighting fixtures, furnace, shades, etc.

FURNISHED OR UNFURNISHED,

NEAR BERKELEY SQUARE.

$6500—You may look the city over and not find the equal of this, all things taken in consideration. Nearly new, modern, 7 large rooms and large reception hall; you enter from nice porch into reception hall, on your left through pretty archway into living-room, through sliding doors to dining-room with built-in buffet; all these rooms have the weathered oak finish and hardwood floors; nice kitchen and pass pantry; three fine bedchambers and bath on second floor; lot 50x150 to alley and improved with good lawn and fruit trees; pretty little barn. Remember this house is nicely furnished and this price includes the furniture, but will sell unfurnished.

A FINE NINE-ROOM HOUSE.

$7250—It's located on the heights, near Berkeley Square; large reception hall with built-in hall rack with large mirror; pretty living-room with cove ceilings and decorated walls, library with built-in seats and bookcases; dining-room, paneled walls and beamed ceilings, built-in buffet; all these rooms have the dark finish and oak floors; nice pass pantry, kitchen and screen porch. Upstairs are five nice bedchambers; all have polished floors. Large attic. House heated with furnace. Nice two-story barn; fine lawn; taking into consideration the price of building material and the price of lots in this locality one could not duplicate this place for less than $8000 today.

ON BEACON STREET.

$7500—This modern, 8-room house is located on Beacon st. between Ninth and 10th. Reception hall, living-room, library, dining-room, kitchen, pass pantry and screen porch on first floor; on the second floor are four nice bedchambers and bath; nice lawn front and rear; two mantels, and furnace. This is close in, and in a fine residence district. If you are looking for property in this locality we know it will pay you to investigate this.

NEW TEN-ROOM HOME.

NEAR WILSHIRE PLACE.

$11,500—This beautiful new modern 10-room home is located on a fine east-front lot, just off Wilshire Blvd. Large living-room with handsome brick mantel, built-in bookcases and seats, beamed ceilings and paneled walls; library paneled with Spanish leather; beautiful dining-room with an elegant built-in buffet; a very cosy little den; nice kitchen and pantry; servants' room downstairs; upstairs there are 4 fine bedchambers and bath; hardwood floors throughout the house; furnace; nice lawn; lot 60x170. If you are in the market for a home of this class, let us show you this.

Has either made a splendid sale of the same or retains a flat full of satisfied tenants.

The last residence flat completed which we built for Mrs. K. A. Dickson at 661 S. Bonnie Brae st., was entirely rented before it was nearly completed.

We have splendid references from representative business people in our city for whom we have built who state there is nothing rents or sells better than our residence flats.

Call and see the number of plans we have embodying a similarity of interior arrangement with a distinctly different exterior.

If you own a lot we will loan you the money to build with from 6 to 7 per cent., the rate depending on the location.

Fronting on a beautiful 80-foot street, in the southwest, and near West Adams st., we have a lovely new 7-ROOM 2-STORY HOUSE,
now offered for the first time.

This property was built by the owner for his home, and that no expense was spared to make it complete is evident to any one who makes a careful examination.

The entire downstairs, except kitchen, is finished in selected quarter-sawed oak, with paneled walls and beamed ceilings. The parlor and dining-room are each 15x20 feet, connected by beautiful archway. The reception hall is 12x15, and with the den is tastily arranged.

Upstairs has 3 bedrooms, with large bath and portico. Large porch has cement floor and house sets well above street. There is pass pantry, complete kitchen, stationary tubs and furnace.

LOT IS 50x148 TO ALLEY.
Half block to cars.

To any one interested we will make a price that will sell this property, as circumstances compel the owner to sacrifice.

WHY PAY RENT?
When you can buy a five room modern bungalow for $150 cash and $20 per month? Price $1950. Just like rent, only you are owning it instead of paying it to a landlord. And rent receipts are worthless, but payments on a home are an asset that becomes more valuable every year.
We have a five room modern cottage that we will sell for $1950, $150 cash and $20 per month. If you are tired paying rent come in and talk it over with us.

FOR SALE—

A SHORT TALK ON EAGLE ROCK.

A SHORT TALK ON EAGLE ROCK.

Don't read this and lay it aside as the product of a real estate man's imagination. It is a clean-cut statement of actual conditions at Eagle Rock, and

IT IS TRUE.

There is absolutely nothing so close to the city center (six miles) that presents the wonderful natural beauties of Eagle Rock. This is true regardless of the price you are asked to pay at other places.

Probably more than half of us would like to secure

A COUNTRY PLACE, CLOSE TO THE CITY,

where our children could grow up in a healthful environment and away from certain undesirable city conditions. Probably more than half of us have looked the near-by suburbs over for such a place. Certainly very few of us have been able to get just what we want. WHY?

FOR A BUSINESS MAN of the city, there are certain essential conditions necessary to a successful country place:

FIRST—IT MUST BE CLOSE TO THE CITY.
SECOND—IT MUST HAVE A GOOD CAR SERVICE, WITH CITY TRANSFERS.
THIRD—IT MUST BE BEAUTIFULLY SITUATED.
FOURTH—IT MUST HAVE THE ELEVATION TO INSURE PURE AIR AND COOL BREEZES.
FIFTH—IT MUST BE PROVIDED WITH A CHEAP AND ABUNDANT SUPPLY OF PURE WATER.
SIXTH—IT MUST BE PROTECTED BY PROPER BUILDING RESTRICTIONS.

NOW, NOTE THIS STATEMENT.

EAGLE ROCK

SATISFIES ALL THESE CONDITIONS.

It suffers from two TEMPORARY DISADVANTAGES, dust and insufficient car service.

The dust nuisance will be abated as quickly as money and men can grade and oil the 120-foot boulevard running through the valley. The car service is now being improved by double tracking, which will give frequent, through cars, with transfers to every point.

Remember, these two drawbacks, THE ONLY TWO, are temporary, they won't exist after December first.

YOU FAVOR NO ONE BUT YOURSELF IN LOOKING OVER EAGLE ROCK.

We are owners and general agents of six tracts, located at various points in Eagle Rock, and each so situated as to command a sweeping view of the surrounding country. They are, without question,

THE SIX BEST TRACTS

IN EAGLE ROCK.

KENILWORTH.

This tract has been upon the market about two months, it is already

HALF SOLD OUT.

Splendid trees cover most of this tract. 70 and 120-foot streets—15-foot parkways, 5-foot cement walks, and 3-foot cement gutters now going in. Water—the finest in the State—piped free to every lot by the Eagle Rock Water Co. Most of the purchasers so far have bought to improve with houses. Building restrictions $2500. Three handsome two-story houses starting now. Large lots, 185 feet deep. Price $700 to $750. Terms, ¼ cash. On account of the unusual success of this tract, intending purchasers will have to make immediate selections.

GLENWOOD PARK.

Two blocks from the car line, but beautifully situated from a scenic standpoint. All street work paid for. The Eagle Rock Water Co. pipe water to every lot. One-half acre lots, covered with LARGE LIVE OAKS.

We offer these lots at preliminary sale for from $450 to $700. They cannot be duplicated for double the price. Bungalow restrictions. Easy terms.

ARTESIAN HEIGHTS.

This beautiful property will be placed upon the market October 14. It is situated upon the WESTERN SLOPE of EAGLE ROCK VALLEY, having a commanding and magnificent view of Old Baldy, Mt. Lowe, the Eagle Rock, Highland Park, etc.

The L. A. Railway Company cars pass the tract. All the improvements of ARTESIAN HEIGHTS are going in according to city specifications, and paid for. The lots vary in depth, but average 60x150, many are covered with SPLENDID TREES.

Building restrictions from $1500 to $2500. We have decided to make this the only high-class residence tract in Eagle Rock, selling lots upon

EXTREMELY EASY TERMS.

Opening prices from $200 upwards. Terms, 10 per cent. down, $10 a month. These preliminary prices speak for themselves and are subject to change without notice.

MAYFAIR PARK.

If there are anywhere in California more beautiful home sites than can be found upon this exclusive residence tract, we do not know of it. For years, MAYFAIR has been the show place of Eagle Rock and an attraction to Pasadena and Los Angeles tourists, driving through the valley. All lots front upon

ROYAL DRIVE.

Eighty-six feet wide, with twenty-foot parkways on either side.

TWENTY-YEAR-OLD PALMS

line the drive, interspersed with navel orange trees, and choice roses. Most of the lots are covered with a variety of full-grown trees, and every lot commands a grand view of the entire valley.

IT IS WITH A WHOLE LOT OF GENUINE SATISFACTION that we offer this property to our old friends and customers. When it is sold out (in about sixty days,) you cannot equal such lots for twice the money. Fifty lots in the tract—twelve sold last week. Price $750 throughout the tract, ¼ cash.

OUR BRANCH OFFICE

is at the end of the Eagle Rock car line. If you do not wish the agent to drive you over these properties, call or write to main office for our souvenir of the entire valley. This will enable you to find by yourself any tract in the valley you wish to look over.

PANORAMIC PHOTOGRAPH

BEAUTIFUL MODJESKA PARK.

For the man of moderate means Modjeska Park surpasses in attractiveness every other suburb on the market. It offers the refinement and improvements of an exclusive residence situation at a very low price. The Long Beach blvd., 100 feet wide, passes through it and the Santa Ana electric line reaches it direct in 15 minutes from 6th and Main. It has improved streets and water. Cement walks and curbs render it more valuable than any other tract in that vicinity. It has pretty plazas at street intersections, handsome mission entrances and a stately depot on the electric line.

LOTS ONLY $90 AND UP.

THE DOLLAR BASIS.

A dollar down secures a lot and a dollar per week on each $100 makes the payments. It has no equal anywhere at the price. Don't wait for a second invitation, but come in now for map and free ticket, while prices are low.

FOR SALE—
Acreage for Subdivision.

FOR SALE—

THE BRIGGS CO.,
234 S. BROADWAY.

Home Ex. 501.
Sunset Main 537.

"Better See Briggs."

We have an exceptionally desirable piece of property for subdivision. It contains 23 acres fronting east on Western ave., with a frontage of 925 feet on that thoroughfare.

This property is extra well located, with an elevation of about 300 feet. It will cut up into 120 lots, all with 50-foot frontage and allow plenty of room for streets 80 feet wide.

This piece is practically the last desirable acreage on Western ave. If you are interested, see us at once.

"Better See Briggs." 14

FOR SALE—OVER 100 PER CENT. PROFIT WITHIN 60 DAYS ON A SMALL CASH INVESTMENT ABSOLUTELY ASSURED.

AT A GREAT SACRIFICE, THE CHOICEST PIECE OF ACREAGE FRONTING HUNTINGTON DRIVE BLVD., ADJOINING HUNTINGTON'S BEAUTIFUL ONEONTA PARK, AMONG THE OAKS AND ON PASADENA'S SHORTEST LINE.

This tract will be sold this week at LESS THAN HALF OF ITS PRESENT CASH MARKET VALUE and ON LIBERAL TERMS OF PAYMENT. A small cash payment will handle it. As the street is already in and paid for the property can be subdivided and sold without expense. Tract is improved with a full bearing orange grove. There is a greater activity in this district in the demand for lots and erection of beautiful suburban homes than in any other in Southern California, and the buyer of this tract is ABSOLUTELY CERTAIN TO CLEAN UP A PROFIT OF OVER 100 PER CENT. WITHIN 60 DAYS. These statements will be more than confirmed by an investigation. Act quickly if you wish this. PACIFIC MORTGAGE-LOAN CO., 658 Pacific Elec. Bldg., (between 10 and 12 daily.) 16

TO INVESTORS.

$4 PROFIT FOR $1 INVESTED.

We have the option on some acreage in the southwest part of the city that we desire to form a closed syndicate to handle. It offers to return a very large profit to the investor, probably $4 for every $1 invested; this we think is conservative and will be borne out by the facts; there is an abundance of water already developed and which will in the near future be worth the price asked for the land today; if you can invest $10,000 to $25,000, come in and talk over the matter with us; we can do you good; we handle only such property that promise large safe returns.

VERMONT TO THE SEA.

I am a firm believer in the future of th GREAT SOUTHWEST of Los Angeles, and I have "shown my faith by my works." For nearly a year past I have consistently, persistently and unswervingly advocated the purchase of property on WEST JEFFERSON St., I still advocate that street, and advise the purchase of property on it, as strongly as ever, and shall CONTINUE to advise same, but I believe the time has come to call attention to a great—a wonderful southwestern highway that, while always looked upon with a certain amount of favor, has never been given the credit by the investment public that the LONGEST PUBLIC THOROUGHFARE IN LOS ANGELES COUNTY is entitled to. I am, of course, referring to VERMONT AVENUE.

What a wonderful street it is, Stretching from the hills of Hollywood on the north to the sea at San Pedro on the south—TWENTY-SEVEN LONG MILES WITHOUT A BEND OR A BREAK. Where will you duplicate it in a city street on the American continent. The length of Halsted st. and Western ave., in Chicago and Broadway in New York pales into insignificance when compared with it.

What will happen within the next few years when Los Angeles becomes a city of a million people; when the annexation of this city and San Pedro is completed; when the traffic to and from the greatest city in ALL CALIFORNIA and the GREATEST HARBOR ON THE COAST is moving steadily along its natural and direct highway—VERMONT AVENUE? What will happen, further, when those stores and places of business of all kinds are built on VERMONT AVENUE to accommodate this great traffic, and cater to the wonts of those myriad thousands who are already beginning to settle up the great southwest of Los Angeles, where even now building statistics show the city is growing faster than anywhere else?

Every large city has its great north and south thoroughfare. VERMONT AVENUE will not only become great within the next few years, but it will become FAMOUS as well. Ten years from today the present prices of property on this street will appear as microscopic as those of twenty years ago look now.

The first great step in joining Los Angeles and San Pedro has just been taken by the City Council. On the 12th of next November it will be ratified by an enormous popular majority at the polls, and what has been a cherished dream of every loyal Angeleno for so many years—a continuous city from the mountains to the sea—will be a REALITY.

The first section to benefit will be that wondrous GREAT SOUTHWEST. Its marvelous progress in the past is only a foretaste of that progress which is to come. In the midst of it all—in the very center of the greatest industrial and commercial activity of all Southern California—will be VERMONT AVENUE.

If you doubt what this street is to BECOME take a drive over its great 27 miles and see what it is TODAY. Note the traffic there. Note the business settlements that are springing up and stretching along its course for blocks. Study its ideal location and prospects, and I think you will agree with me that VERMONT AVENUE is THE STREET OF THE FUTURE, and at present prices the greatest proposition in Los Angeles today for the permanent investor or the quick turn speculator.

In the principal business section of this street, between Washington st. and Santa Monica ave. I have some very exceptional bargains—a little better, I think, than anybody else can offer you. In particular I might mention a CORNER in the most active locality, for SIXTY-FIVE DOLLARS A FOOT. If I said $100 a foot it would be just market price. I couldn't sell you an INSIDE piece on the whole street, within these limits, for less money.

FOR SALE—

CONCERNING JEFFERSON STREET.

Two very important things happened on JEFFERSON street during the last week. This is nothing unusual, as there is ALWAYS something happening on this remarkable street—the most notable crosstown thoroughfare south of Pico. I refer to the Gould depot rumors which were given wide publicity in the newspapers, and the public announcement of the completion of the plans for the great Shriners' Auditorium on JEFFERSON, between Figueroa and Wesley. Hudson & Munsell are the architects. This great auditorium will seat upwards of 5000 people, and will cover a space of 154x282 feet. It will POSITIVELY be completed in time for the immense Shriners' gathering next May.

The Gould line talk is not mere rumor. I believe it is TRUE. If not, it's the most persistent and healthy and long-lived rumor I ever become acquainted with. We don't have to "fake up" rumors on JEFFERSON ST. When we say things are going to happen on that street, especially on the golden three-quarters of a mile between Main and Wesley, they DO HAPPEN.

As usual, I have the best things going in the realty line there. One is a vacant lot, 50x180, directly opposite the proposed Gould depot, for $7000, or $140 a foot. It's location makes it worth 20 per cent. more than any other lot now purchasable on JEFFERSON.

The other is a house and lot, directly opposite the Shriners' Auditorium. It is $8000 for a few days ONLY. The land ALONE is worth the entire price, and the income is $30 a month.

These two bargains CAN'T BE APPROACHED on JEFFERSON.

FOR SALE—

We have said time and again and now repeat it, that close-in property is the property on which the MOST MONEY is made. Take such a street as East Ninth for instance, hovering as it does on the very edge of the active business section and in trend of its most rapid growth, THIS STREET will soon demand the attention its importance justifies, and IT IS HERE that values are enhancing daily; for a quick turn get a piece of it. THERE'S MONEY IN IT. Scan the following list of medium-priced properties and see if you cannot swing some one of them. If you do and hold for five years you will have a reasonable competency.

$4500—45x40, with cottage, on the north side of Ninth st.! 50 feet east of Hemlock st.

$10,000—Northeast corner Ninth and Hemlock, 60x40, all corner; deep enough and will pay big improved with stores.

$18,000—Northwest corner Ninth and Hawthorne, 120x48, three exposures; $150 per foot—not deep, but CHEAP.

$30,000—Business for industrial site between Mateo and Santa Fe on the north side of Ninth—runs through to Porter st., 150x167 feet, two frontages; will sell part at $200 per foot.

FOR SALE—
NOTICE TO INVESTORS.

Did it ever occur to you that Beaudry ave. and Lake Shore ave. are the only two thoroughfares that lead out from the business center by way of Third st. tunnel into the northwest hill section, on easy even grade with no hills to climb? Also that at the intersection of Beaudry and Sunset blvd. five different streets converge to a common point in front of Sisters' Hospital. As water flows through a channel on easy grade, so will the traveling public follow Beaudry ave. to the Third st. tunnel by way of Second and Figueroa, both of which are already established business streets.

It is a question of months only when Beaudry avenue property will bring as high prices as Figueroa street property brings today and he that can forecast future events should take warning and buy a few of the choice close-in properties on the coming business street south of Sunset before the boom.

The completion of the Second-street tunnel will add greatly to the value of property on this street, as, in fact, it is the only close-in section that has been overlooked by investors. Remember, Beaudry ave. connects the four prominent thoroughfares running westward, Sunset blvd., Temple, First and Second sts. on even, easy grade, no hills to climb. In passing on this street look at the southeast corner of Beaudry and Mignonette, 150x150 ft.—choice location for apartment-houses, flats and stores, only 1 block north of First st., a large piece of ground with a big future for very small money, only 8 blocks from Broadway. The corner 50 ft. alone will bring the price I ask for the whole within 2 years. $12,500 is the price for a short time, and I am the sole agent. Agents co-operate.

WAKE UP.
READ THIS CAREFULLY.
CONCERNING JEFFERSON STREET.

Read articles in Examiner and Express Thursday about immense station projected corner Jefferson and Grand for Gould and Huntington lines.

Statements and rumors of this nature have a foundation. Almost every owner thereabouts refuses to sell.

I have option for a few days on 50 feet on Jefferson, directly opposite proposed $500,000 station; price $7000; $300 under value; absolutely nothing in vicinity less than [illegible] foot; $3000 to $5000 profit by Christmas. If station is built, will be worth $20,000. By far the biggest bargain on Jefferson today. Several other exceptional Jefferson bargains.

FOR SALE—
$5500—Seaton street, near Arcade depot. 50x150, right in the heart of the manufacturing district, small income. This property adjoins very large factories, and will soon be required by them, chance here to make some quick money.

$35,000—Grand avenue corner, 75x136 and very close in. The income is $125 per month. This property is actually worth $35,1000 now, and will go to $50,000 in one year. Remember our predictions are based upon sound judgment of values, and have almost invariably been realized. Hill, Olive and Figueroa have all done as well and better than we predicted, and Grand ave. will do even better, because the advance need not be so great to get good returns.

JEFFERSON ST.

THE COMING BUSINESS STREET.

HAVE YOU NOTICED THE NEWSPAPERS during the past week, regarding what is liable to happen on this coming business street? We have already been informed of an ELECTRIC DEPOT TO BE BUILT on one corner of JEFFERSON AND GRAND, AND NOW comes the good news of a possible RAILROAD DEPOT, for a TRUNK LINE STEAM RAILROAD ON ANOTHER corner of JEFFERSON AND GRAND. Do YOU KNOW what this means? Simply, that when a transcontinental LINE like the GOULD system—Western Pacific, is to approach our city, hauling people from as far back as New York, the possibilities for advance in PROPERTIES in this IMMEDIATE VICINITY, are so GREAT, that we can only advise "BUY ON JEFFERSON."

FOR EXCHANGE—
M'DONALD AND STOTT COMPANY,
309-11 Lankershim Building,
Corner Third and Spring.

Today, tomorrow, the next day and every day thereafter, until they are all sold, we will offer to you and our other good friends, the best buy in vacants ever offered in this great city; our Springdale tract, on the electric line, sixteen minutes out from the Sixth street electric station, lots of 1-4 and ½ acre, which will be sold at lower prices than lots of but ordinary size in the same locality, are selling for. We secured this tract on such terms as enables us to give to our clients this opportunity of making quick money. These lots are good buys, selling under prices, whether you buy to build or buy for speculation. You will appreciate this fully when I tell to you, notwithstanding we are but today for the first time ready to offer these lots, we have sold 48 to our clients, who came begging for them, having seen the signs evolving on the tract. When one-half of this tract is sold out, the prices will be advanced not less than 25 per cent., and we want you to have one, or as many as you want, at prices now prevailing, enabling you to take that profit out yourself. You well know what the wizard has done for you in exchanges. Let that be the criterion as to what we will do for you when you buy these lots. Come in and get free transportation to Springdale and return. Our city office, No. 312 Lankershim Bldg. will be open until 1 o'clock p. m. today, where we will be tickled to death to give to you and your friends, and everybody, a free ticket there and back. This costs you nothing, insures you a pleasant outing, and you will then have seen our Springdale.

I intended telling you today something of the wizard, the best trader in the United States, which would have interested you; something of his great work during the past week; but the grand old man said, "No, tell to my friends of this opportunity to buy lots at prices which will make them money while they wait, and they won't be kept waiting long." Now, therefore, buy some of these lots, get in on this while you can, or forever, after hold thy tongue. For exchanges, you know exactly what to do; read the wizard's bulletin which follows. It is all good, as usual, but if you find it not, then come in, or write, and the wizard will find it for you.

574. New 8 room modern house, large lot, one block from short line, between Los Angeles and Pasadena; large cellar, barn, A-1 condition; $8000, worth the money. $4000 incumbrance. Want an orange grove, vicinity of Glendora, Covina, Upland, or Ontario.

669. On a corner, Hope street, top of Bunker Hill, 96x155 feet, excellent for apartments or flats. Good hotel site, value $24,000. Incumbrance $12,000. Want an orange grove, nearby for the equity.

1171. How is this? Well improved two acre ranch, between here and San Gabriel, ripe for subdivision; improvements are, a 5 room modern cottage, with porcelain bath, hot and cold water; excellent barn, chicken equipments, etc. Everything in A-1 condition. Water in abundance, and cheap, too; mortgage $350. Price of this property is $4000, and it is worth it. The owner will consider good ranch property in California, and $600 in cash difference.

Once again let us tell you, the reason why you do not get the trades, it's because you do not interview the wizard, and do not send in your list. Keep after the wizard, and you will be wise. Ask the wizard, and he will tell you to buy lots in our Springdale tract. Do not let the other fellow get all the money all the time.

Whatever the the beginning, associa- men and women soon to him. shown that messen- inveterate "dope" on a "hop" joint the arrest of district that happens to the boy is a term in jail, where he meets petty crooks. Some young crooks receive the benefit of special training at Whittier Reform School, which may be termed the post-graduate course of the crook. Some boys have come out of that school good men. A lot more, however, have come out hardened crooks, "wise" to every trick of the underworld.

In the opium dens and the tough saloons to which they are sent the messenger boys pick up acquaintances with professional crooks. They fall in with other bad boys. An easy introduction into crime is "rolling" some drunken man who has a pocketful of money, and who only needs to be tripped up and robbed while he lies in drunken stupor.

The next step with the boy crook seems to be hiding in the saloon until the place is shut up, then robbing the cash register. Then the cigar stands; nearly all the cigar stands robbed are said to owe their pillaging to boys.

READY TO MURDER.

The wise old crook usually knows where everyone sleeps, and what there is in the house in the way of valuables before he ventures in with his life in his hands. These boy crooks who have been caught have been known in several instances to have but five cents to show as the result of their work.

They go blundering stupidly, make noise enough to rouse the dead, stumble around without finding anything, and rush out through the kitchen window half frightened to death and ready to murder anything from a cat up to anything that shows its head.

On most of these boys were found either guns or "black jacks." Some of their hold-ups have been accomplished by beating their victims suddenly in the back of the neck.

In the case of Epperly and Smith, one held a revolver under the nose of the victim, while the other went through his pockets.

Although they have all confessed to a long list of crimes, the sum total of their plunder does not amount to the wages of a good week's work.

Of all "occupations" open to ambitious young men that of burglary is the least satisfactory, the poorest paid, the hardest work, the worst hours and the least peace of mind.

Why they do it, except for the gradual drift into degradation as described—is mysterious. There possibly lingers about that "trade" some flavor of melodramatic glory which attracts stupid young fools.

That a boy with a "mug" like the boy Brooks in this picture should yearn to be a hero is humorous; but he evidently does.

He is the perfect type of the dull degenerate. Smith is said to be the brightest of these young villains. McIvor is a bullet-headed gaping Scotch boy, who is probably the best of the whole outfit. Which isn't much of a tribute.

WHAT'S TO BE DONE?

What is to be done with them and the like of them?

To send them to State's prison only means turning them from unskilled blundering crooks into experienced expert crooks. Merely means that they will come out with fierce burning hatred in their hearts for everything that has to do with law and police.

There must be some answer to the problem. But equally certain it is that the police are not the ones who will ever discover the answer. Although the policeman is handy to have at intervals—the Lord must have meant him for something—he is not strong on thinking capacity. As a machine designed for thief catching and crime smothering, it must be confessed that the modern police system is not a success.

The examiner for the civil service says that the stupidity of the candidates for admission to the police force is absolutely astounding. With the salary of $100 a month held out as an inducement, it is remarkable that more men of fair education are not drawn into police work.

TOO MUCH FOR POLICE.

This boy problem is appalling. The police are not equal to tackling it.

There must be a reason why boys become criminals rather than respectable citizens when respectability pays better, and is easier to do.

There must be some way found to squeeze the crime out of them when caught. Under the present system, it would seem, on the whole, that to catch the young burglar is the worst thing that could possibly happen either for the burglar or for society. They are caught young and bad; they are held at heavy public expense long enough to make them worse.

Candidly, the Juvenile Court is not the glowing success the muck-raker would have us believe—especially as regards older boy prisoners. The best feature of the Juvenile Court is that it provides a separate jail for children so they do not have to associate with hardened crooks.

If you examine the records of the County Jail, it will be found that most of the tramps are boys of 20 or a very few years more. They are making themselves into criminals as fast as they can.

HUNTINGTON GOES EAST.

Head of Pacific Electric Leaves on Business Connected With Extension of That System.

H. E. Huntington left on the Santa Fé limited last night for New York. It is not known how long he will be away from Los Angeles, but he said: "My stays in this city are getting to be longer each time I come, and my visits away are becoming shorter." Mr. Huntington left in splendid health. He is visiting New York on business connected with the extension of the Pacific Electric system, and will visit his large interests at Newport News.

During his absence O. V. Eaton of San Francisco, who was recently appointed his confidential assistant, will have charge of Mr. Huntington's interests here. Eaton has won his way with the officials of the Pacific Electric and Los Angeles Railway companies, and is carrying the responsibilities of his important position with a swing.

CAUSES POLICE TROUBLE.

A. W. Hughey is held in the City Jail on the charge of stealing a bicycle on Friday from V. E. Herbst of No. 467 East Twenty-second street. Hughey has caused the police considerable trouble. He was arrested, some days ago, on a misdemeanor charge and the officers discovered that he answered the description of a deserter from the United States Navy Yard at Mare Island. The northern authorities turned the matter over to the local Federal authorities, the police say, and Hughey was liberated.

ARREST OF MESSENGER.

V. Welter, formerly employed by the California District Messenger Service, was arrested last night on the charge of stealing $1 from an envelope. The police say that R. A. Taylor gave the lad a package containing $11.70. The boy is charged with opening the package, taking one dollar and delivering the rest of the money.

CUBA.

MAGOON TAKES TAFT'S PLACE.

Omits Ceremony When Assuming Rule of Cuba.

Takes Command by Virtue of Platt Amendment.

War Secretary Returns at Once to Washington.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

HAVANA, Oct. 13.—Without any formality excepting the issuing of an extraordinary copy of the Gazette, the government of Cuba was transferred at noon today by Secretary of War Taft to Charles E. Magoon.

Secretary Taft's contribution to the Gazette was simply a paragraph stating that "by direction and with the authority of the President of the United States, I hereby lay down the office of provisional Governor of Cuba, assumed by me August 29, and turn the same over to Charles E. Magoon, my successor."

Gov. Magoon issued a proclamation in assuming the government of Cuba which differed from Secretary Taft's in referring definitely to the Platt amendment as the authority for the United States' intervention and for all exercise of powers in the island. As the hour of noon approached, Secretary Taft jocularly remarked to the reporters that he had been unjustly characterized as the "biggest man in Cuba," and he wanted them to observe that Gov. Magoon was bigger than he. Magoon replied that as a matter of fact he had been posing for caricatures of Taft. The newspaper men thereupon presented Taft with several pictures of the Cuban capital, including one of the American fleet as it appeared during the momentous three weeks of Mrs. Taft's and Mrs. Bacon's visit, and voiced their appreciation of the frankness and consideration with which the press and public had been treated throughout their brief régime.

The battleships with Messrs. Taft and Bacon and Brig.-Gen. Funston and their parties on board will proceed northward at 4 o'clock this afternoon.

MAGOON'S PROCLAMATION.

In his proclamation Gov. Magoon said:

"The policy declared and assurances given by Secretary Taft will be strictly adhered to and carried out.

"As provisional Governor, I shall exercise the powers and perform the duties provided for by the third article of the appendix to the constitution of Cuba for the preservation of Cuban independence and the protection of life and property. As soon as consistent with the attainment of these ends, I shall seek to bring about the restoration of the ordinary agencies and methods of government under the other and general provisions of the constitution and laws, which for the time being will be inconsistent with the exercise of powers provided for by the third article of the appendix, must be deemed to be in abeyance. All the other provisions of the constitution and laws continue in full force and effect."

War Secretary Taft and Assistant Secretary of State Bacon will start on their return to the United States on board the battleship Louisiana this afternoon.

RICH GYPSIES SEARCHED.

CHICAGO, Oct. 13.—A dispatch to the Tribune from Carmi, Ill., says: On complaint of Gus Mitchell, a gypsy, a warrant was sworn out last night for the recovery of $1000 which Mitchell claimed had been stolen from him by a rival band of gypsies.

Taking a dozen deputies, heavily armed, Sheriff Grissom went to the camp and began to search. In the first wagon examined more than $10,000 was found, mostly in gold. The second wagon contained the richest treasure, $15,000 in gold being found.

A certificate of deposit for $25,000 issued by the First National Bank of Chicago also was found. On sixty-four men searched several smaller certificates were found.

SMELTER WILL BE ENLARGED.

GOES INTO ACTION MAY 1 WITH IMMENSE CAPACITY.

Balaklala Mine Will Turn Out 1250 Tons Per Day and Earnings Are Estimated at $2,700,000 Annually With Enormous Copper Output and Much Ore Blocked Out.

BOSTON (Mass.) Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] It is now planned to increase the smelter capacity of the Balaklala copper mine to 1250 tons, the enlarged smelter going into commission on May 1, by which time the owners will have two million tons of ore blocked out, of which 900,000 tons will run 4 per cent. copper.

It is figured that Balaklala ores can be treated at a cost of 8 cents per pound and that the average recovery from ore will be 54 pounds of copper to the ton. On this basis the monthly production will be two million pounds of copper and the earnings, at 20 cents, $2,790,000 annually net, or $7 per share.

TO STOP STOCK GAMBLING.

ROCK ISLAND (Ill.) Oct. 12.—The Farmers National Congress today adopted a resolution demanding the passage of a law prohibiting dealings in futures and puts and calls and denying the use of the mails and telegraph wires for quotations of stocks. It also went on record in favor of a separate bureau in the Department of Agriculture for dairy industry, reciprocity treaties with countries that are large consumers of agricultural products and government aid for highway improvement.

CAPITALISTS VIEW RAILROAD.

CHICAGO, Oct. 12.—A party of New York financiers, headed by M. L. Schiff of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., spent today in Chicago. Mr. Schiff stated that he and his companions are bound for the Pacific Coast on a pleasure trip. It is understood that they will inspect various railroad properties on the way.

DANES CHOOSE FRESNO.

COUNCIL BLUFFS (Iowa) Oct. 12.—Fresno, Cal., gets the next quadrennial session of the Danish Brotherhood to be held in 1910. Duluth, Minn., was a strong bidder for the meeting and the preliminary canvass has been very active. The vote taken this afternoon

GATES BUILDS PIPE LINE.

It Taps Indian Territory and Brings Much Oil to the Texas Refineries.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

GALVESTON (Tex.) Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] An agent of John W. Gates admits that Gates will build an oil pipe line from Tulsa, I. T., to Port Arthur, Tex., connecting the Indian Territory oil fields with the Texas refineries.

He denies that the Standard is interested to evade Texas trust laws, but says the Standard may be a patron of the line which will cost $1,500,000.

ARREST REVOLUTIONISTS.

Prompt Action Is Taken by President Diaz and One Rebel Will Be Shot.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

GALVESTON (Tex.) Oct. 13.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The arrest of seven Mexicans near the Rio Grande reveals a plot implicating several prominent Mexicans in the revolutionary movement. Miguel Gomez, a wealthy Mexican and land owner, living at Del Rio, Tex., has been arrested. President Diaz has ordered a speedy trial for all persons implicated and the death penalty for all convicted.

Señor Rojo, commissary at Victoria, has been sentenced to be shot.

WOMAN IS MURDERED.

ABERDEEN (Wash.) Oct. 13.—The body of a murdered woman was recovered last evening from the Chehalis River. A long gash over the eye denotes the manner in which she met her death. Evidently she had been killed about two or three weeks ago. The woman was about 32 years old.

A money order was found on her person bearing the name of W. H. Brady and Mrs. G. C. Thurston. She had secured money orders at Bellingham and at Tacoma. In the purse, also, was a letter recommending her to charitably inclined people. The letter was dated at Everett and signed "G. H. Wood, M.D." The police are working on the case with some hope of clearing up the mystery.

DOCTOR TAKES POISON.

NEW YORK Oct. 12.—Dr. Eugene Van Ness committed suicide by swallowing poison at his laboratory on West Thirty-first street tonight while his wife and step-daughter struggled with him in an effort to snatch the bottle containing the poison from his hand.

The Soil, the Water and Big Half Acres

Are at Belle Vernon

With good transportation what more do you want? You reach Belle Vernon quicker than Alhambra, Dolgeville, Pasadena, Hollywood, Gardena, Glendale or Compton, and you buy at less than half the money. Just now for a limited time, to fully establish this beautiful garden suburb, big half-acres are priced lower than the raw land can be bought, and free water thrown in, too. Directly south of the city, it is reached by the Long Beach or the Santa Ana line, by the Southern Pacific railway and also by the new motor line as soon as it is in operation. NO FACILITIES BETTER, NO SOIL MORE FERTILE, NO WATER MORE PURE AND ABUNDANT.

Have a Home Self-Sustaining

A half-acre in such a spot will maintain a family in all the products of the soil and earn a profit. The climate needs no recommendation. The proposed air line from Pasadena to Long Beach will pass directly through this tract, making every foot of it more valuable. The Southern Pacific railway has increased its service to Belle Vernon by adding three new trains daily.

POLICEMAN ARRESTED.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 13.—John Law, a patrolman of San Francisco, is under arrest on a charge of robbery. Law is accused of having robbed John Lovejoy, a Sacramento bartender, who was shot early this morning in a quarrel over a woman.

Lovejoy was unconscious when removed to the Park Emergency Hospital by Law, and another policeman. After recovering consciousness, Lovejoy discovered that a roll of bills, amounting to $620, had been reduced to $500.

Dr. Hill of the hospital started an investigation, and Law, among others, was searched, in spite of objections he made. A number of bills were found in Law's possession and he was formally accused of the robbery by Chief of Police Dinan, who stripped him of his star and ordered him under arrest.

Law had a good record in the department, of which he has been a member for twelve years. He recently has acted as bailiff in Judge Conlon's department of the Police Court.

SICK CHILD SCARES HIM.

BURGLAR THREATENS DEATH TO A LITTLE GIRL.

Ill With Diphtheria, She Sees a Man Enter Her Room—He Commands Silence but She Screams Loudly—The Family Is Aroused but Intruder Escapes.

A sick child defied and put to flight a burglar in the home of James Maguire, No. 628 San Julian street, early yesterday morning. The child, a little girl of 6 years, alarmed the family although the thief, bending over her, grimly threatened death if she spoke.

The case was reported to the police, but was not given out by the department. The burglar answers the description of the barefoot thief, who has been operating in residence districts during two months past.

Because of diphtheria the Maguire home was quarantined. Evidently the burglar did not see the placard, or perhaps he was immune. At any rate, he broke into the house, prying open a rear window with a jimmy. He softly entered the room where the sick child lay. She was not asleep. There was a light in the chamber and when the man moved toward her, she looked at him with wide open, questioning eyes. He leaned over her and shook his fist at her.

"If you say a word, I'll kill you," he whispered.

Then the child screamed, shrill and loud. The sound of swift footsteps followed her voice. The burglar fled. In his hurry he had forgotten his threat of death.

GOOD MAN GONE.

Josiah Heistand Roads, Known for His Unobtrusive Charities Passes Away.

In the death of Josiah Heistand Roads this city has lost one of her valuable and unobtrusive citizens.

Mr. Roads came here twenty-two years ago from Ohio, with an invalid wife, to whom he has assiduously devoted his life during all these years, and she has lived to see him first pass over the river to the great beyond. When he first arrived in Los Angeles he made some small investments that proved fortunate, but he never became engrossed in any active business nor connected himself with any corporate interests, thus testifying to the love of home that was his ruling trait.

His death occurred at the family home, No. 407 West Twenty-third street, on Friday night, at the age of 82 years. His widow survives him at the age of 81. The deceased also leaves an only daughter, the wife of Prof. E. C. Moore, superintendent of the public schools of this city. He was an ardent member of Immanuel Presbyterian Church, where the funeral will be held on Monday afternoon at 2:30, following which the body will be privately cremated.

He was for some years clerk of the session of Immanuel Church, and was known for the methodical correctness of his records. Dr. Hugh K. Walker gives many instances of the benevolence of the deceased, his aim being to constantly seek out some person in need and send them unsolicited aid. He has been particularly active in this respect during his illness of some weeks, and he will be mourned by many people who have been recipients of his bounty.

STRUCK ON CROSSING.

Pedro Moroles was struck by an inbound Pacific Electric car at Macy and Lyons streets, last night about 5:30 o'clock, and sustained severe injuries about the legs. Moroles was crossing the track and paid but little attention to the approaching car. After the electric struck him the crew picked him up and assisted him to the Receiving Hospital.

POISONED AT HOSPITAL.

Last night William Williams, an attendant at the Receiving Hospital, drank water from a cup in which, a few minutes before, he had placed a number of bichloride of mercury tablets. He is suffering from internal burns.

HEARST HIRES COOLIES.

Such Is Charge Made in New York, to Be Proven on a Thousand-Dollar Challenge.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

ELMIRA (N. Y.) Oct. 13.—On the receipt of William R. Hearst's dispatch last night from Ithaca, offering to pay $1000 to the home for the aged if the Advertiser will prove its charge that Chinese labor is employed on Hearst's estate in California, The Advertiser announced in its issue today that it accepts the challenge and will submit the evidence in the case to the Chief Judge of the Court of Appeals of New York, to the Chief Judge of California, and to an ex-President of the United States. It says that Hearst evaded an answer tonight in his speech at the Lyceum Theater and waited until he arrived at Ithaca, and then sent his challenge by wire at midnight.

TRAIN KILLS TRAMPS.

EVANSVILLE (Ind.) Oct. 13.—A wreck is reported to have occurred on Louisville & Nashville Railroad on the Indiana side of the railroad bridge twelve miles below this city. Physicians have been dispatched to the scene of the wreck, which is fully a miles north of Henderson, Ky. A freight train is said to have jumped the trestle, and the report says that several tramps were killed, but it is not known if any of the train crew was killed or injured.

LOCKS OUT EMPLOYEES.

CHICAGO, Oct. 13.—A lockout of 5000 building trades employés is threatened as the result of the numerous sympathetic strikes on various buildings now being erected in the downtown district. At a conference today between union representatives and several contractors no settlement of the differences was reached, and at the close the contractors issued an ultimatum, which was in effect:

"Either return to work of stay away forever." The strikes are said to have been caused by rivalry between the steam fitters' and plumbers' unions as to which trade shall install pneumatic tubing. It is said that close to $3,000,000 worth of contracts are tied up pending a settlement of the difficulty.

CONSTRUCTS BRIDGE.

KANSAS CITY (Mo.) Oct. 13.—The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company will at once begin the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at this city, to cost more than $1,000,000. This bridge will take the place of the Hannibal bridge, built fifty years ago, which has been condemned by the government, engineers having pronounced its piers unsafe. Engineers are already at work on the new bridge, and it will be completed in one year.

AN EASY WAY

To a

Safe, Strong, Lucrative Investment

With Small or Large Capital

In order to conserve the convenience of our customers, we have arranged with the Directors of the Sunset Hospital Association to sell shares of stock in that corporation at the regular price of the present allotment, SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS per share, on moderate installment payments, that is 25 per cent, or one fourth, of the amount of the investment at the time of subscription for the stock, and the remaining 75 per cent in payments of equal amount in 30, 60 and 90 days. This procedure is unusual in the disposition of the stock of such an enterprise, but it is entirely practicable with the Sunset Hospital Association because that corporation will need the funds derived from the sale of its stock only in reasonable installments. The corporation has no indebtedness to pay. The sole reason for selling stock is to procure money for the construction and equipment of the hospital building. The payment for this construction is done by installments, as is usual in building. Hence, the directors of the corporation find they can comply with our desire to render it easy for our customers to become shareholders in what promises to be the most popular and prosperous hospital enterprise in Southern California. The buyers of stock under this method will not have to pay the entire purchase price of their shares until after, in all probability, the sale of treasury stock shall have been stopped, the hospital building be nearly completed and the shares of the company be bid for in the open market at or above par. The cessation of the sale of treasury shares and the near completion of the hospital are practically certain to cause an immediate appreciation of the stock, for the will stand in the forefront of hospitals in California—indeed, in the West. In scientific construction, arrangement and equipment it will be the equal of institutions of the kind anywhere, and more advanced than any in this State. In location it will be superior to all other hospitals in Los Angeles, for its site is not in low lying, damp, fog afflicted territory, but high and healthy, where the air is pure and dry, and the view of mountain and valley inspiring and cheering to sick and convalescent; and it will be the ONLY FIRE PROOF HOSPITAL in Los Angeles.

PHENOMENAL PROFITS

Prove the soundness of hospitals as business enterprises in Los Angeles. Hospitals in this city have been uniformly and wonderfully successful. There has been NO FAILURES AMONG THEM. THEY HAVE ALL "MADE GOOD." Under this head nothing better can be said than the following from an extended article in the Los Angeles Herald on the Sunset Hospital:

> "Apropos of the launching of this splendid enterprise, the extraordinary profitableness of hospitals in Los Angeles may be remarked on. Probably no other legitimate line of business in this city can show so large an average profit. The earnings of some of the local hospitals, it is stated by persons in a position to know, are equivalent to about 100 per cent. on the capital invested. People who hold shares in Los Angeles hospitals are apparently the most contented stockholders in the world. No stock of operating local hospitals is on the market. From what is understood the early buyers of the stock of some of the best known hospitals in the city must have reaped a princely percentage of profit. The reason for the remarkable prosperity of local curative institutions is found in the fact that Los Angeles is the objective point of the world's sick and invalid—and that it will always be such a point goes without saying."

THE MANAGEMENT

The officers and directors of the Sunset Hospital Association are: Ex-Supervisor E. S. Field, president; C. W. Mills, vice-president; Dr. William W. Hoagland, secretary; John G. Johnston, treasurer; Dr. T. J. Randall, Frank P. Fay, Bradner W. Lee, J. M. Herndon, J. C. Wilmon and William Hixon.

The staff of the hospital will consist of well known physicians and surgeons, including prominent specialists. The office of the hospital is at No. 452½ South Broadway.

Go out today and see the Sunset Hospital now under construction at the corner of Sunset Boulevard and Marion Avenue, and come to our office tomorrow and subscribe for stock at

Athens On The Hill

Fulfills Every Requirement of the Ideal Southern California Home

Its Location

Is in line with the greatest progress of the City of Los Angeles, occupying the only high ground within the strip of land to be annexed to the city with San Pedro Harbor.

Its Climate

Combines all the qualities that have made Southern California famous all over the world. Athens is close enough to the ocean to secure the full benefit of its breezes in summer and elevated sufficiently above the surrounding land to make it absolutely frostless in winter.

Its Accessibility

18 minutes from the business center of Los Angeles, only 20 minutes from the beaches. The new four-track Huntington electric line now building through Athens. Now reached by two direct electric roads from Los Angeles to the ocean.

Its Character

Is strictly high class. Ample parks and miles of parked boulevards. Streets 80 to 140 feet wide; cement curbs and six-foot cement walks. Athens is laid out in most artistic manner. No expense spared to build Athens as solidly beautiful as men and money can do it. It will be given a distinctively symmetrical and harmonious appearance by taking advantage of the wide variety and classic proportions of the Greek and modern Colonial architecture. Buildings subject to careful restrictions.

Its Water System

Includes the delivery, under pressure and at low cost of an abundant supply of pure artesian water. Two complete plants are being installed, insuring a constant supply at all times.

Prices and Terms

We unhesitatingly say that no such property for home and investment purposes is being offered at even double the prices asked for Athens lots. Terms to suit everybody.

Costs nothing to investigate. See ATHENS before deciding to build your home. Take advantage of present low prices.

NEW WORK PLANNED.

The Builder and Contractor gives the following new work for which the various architects are drawing plans:

C. F. Skilling, plans for a fire engine house at the corner of Sunset avenue and Mohawk street.

H. M. Patterson, plans for the Christian Church of Rialto. It will be a frame structure with plastered exterior. It will have Sunday-school rooms, dining-room, kitchen, social rooms and furnace in the basement. Pastor's study, ladies' parlor and main auditoriums will be on the main floor.

Edelman & Barnett have taken bids for the construction of a thoroughly fireproof, reinforced concrete building, designed as a substation for the Home Telephone and Telegraph Company. It will be 70x105 feet, one story and basement, at the corner of Adams street and Western avenue. The floors and the roof will be of concrete and the doors, frames and sash copper armored.

C. F. Skilling, plans for a two-story brick livery stable, 50x100 feet, on Maple avenue near Eighth street, for James Wilson. It will contain sixty stalls on the first story, carriage room, hay storage, harness room, office and living room on the second floor. It will have pressed brick front, cement floor and composition roofing.

Morgan & Walls, plans for a chapel building, 42.6x53 feet, at the corner of Dayton and Avenue Thirty-nine, for Dr. J. P. Widney. It will be of frame construction and have rubble stone foundation, galvanized iron gutters and ridge, composition roofing, etc. The same architects are receiving bids for an excavation 59x100 feet at the southwest corner of Flower and Washington streets. The property is to be improved later with a three-story-and-basement building. Albert Cohn is the owner.

Hudson & Munsell, plans of the proposed Shriner Auditorium building at the corner of West Jefferson and Royal streets for Al Malaikah Shrine. It will be one story, of frame construction, with concrete footings and steel roof girders and supports. The building will cover an area of 150x273 feet, and will have seating capacity for 5000. The auditorium proper will be 186x150 feet, with an open floor space 100x150 feet. There will be quarters for the patrol, banquet and cloak rooms, kitchen department, etc. The exterior will be of Mooresque design and highly ornamented. The same architects, plans of the new Sixth Ward fire engine station on East Fifty-second street. The plans are ready for action by the Board of Public Works, and will be submitted for bids shortly.

S. Tilden Norton, plans for extensive alterations and additions to the Hotel Palms buildings, No. 609 to 619 South Broadway. The property is now controlled by the Central Broadway Building Company. The alterations consist of the entire removal of the interior partitions, etc., and for the erection of an annex 80x126 feet, three stories and basement, with new plate glass and copper front. The outside brick work will be plastered with cement. A ten-foot basement will be excavated under the entire building. Six first-class electric elevators, four passenger and two freight, will be installed. New plumbing and steam heating systems will be installed. The entire building, when done, will cover a ground space of 125x170 feet, and the improvements will have cost $75,000. It will be used as a department store. The same architect has sketches for a six-story semi-fireproof structure, 125x160 feet, on Hill street, adjoining in the rear the Hotel Palms. It is also owned by the Central Broadway Building Company. It will be divided into six store-rooms on the first story, the upper part being partially arranged into lofts and partially for hotel purposes. It will be modern in every detail, and will represent an expenditure of $200,000. The work will be done by the day, the general construction being let to Robert Beyrle. Other smaller contracts will be awarded as the work progresses. The same architect has plans for a four-story brick building, 60x110 feet, to be constructed on the northwest corner of Broadway and California street for H. C. Smith. It will contain sixty-five rooms, arranged into one, two and three-room apartments, with buffet kitchens, etc. There will be twenty-five bathrooms. An electric elevator will be installed. It will be heated by steam.

F. M. Tyler, plans for a one-and-one-half-story, five-room house for Arthur Holliday; also a two-story, six-room residence for Mr. O'Brien, both at Third avenue and Coronado street. He has also planned a six-room bungalow on Thirtieth street, near Western avenue, for William R. Zeigler. Also plans for a two-story, eight-room frame residence on Harvard boulevard, near Dorchester street, for G. M. Smith and W. H. Allen. Also plans for a two-story, seven-room residence in Santa Monica for T. J. Hampton.

W. H. Spurgeon is having plans prepared for a two-story brick building, 50x100 feet, to be built on Sycamore street, Santa Ana. It will be used for postoffice purposes and will be fitted for the requirements.

Clements, Stannard & Blachmann have completed the plans for a new mercantile building at the corner of Sixth and H streets, San Diego, for D. H. Steele of Los Angeles. The work of clearing the site is now in progress. It is proposed to have the building completed by March 1 next.

HOME BUILDING ACTIVE.

The group of three houses shown on this page of the real estate department of The Times this morning is in the line of the continual rush of home building for the city. Where there are 25,000 or 30,000 new arrivals coming into the city in a year, and where the county shows an increase of voters in two years amounting to 20,000, the building must be kept actively going to meet the demand for new houses.

The house of Mrs. Schmitker, 2037 West Twentieth street, is a house of eight fine rooms. The house was built as a home for the owner. It is not a brand new structure, having been erected some little time ago, and has since been occupied by the person for whom it was built.

The two other houses are built after plans made by Frank M. Tyler for the Home Building Company of this city. They are in a very popular part of the city, where they are surrounded by some of the finest houses in Los Angeles. They are of about the same type of house, one containing ten rooms and the other nine. The houses have two stories and an attic. They have basements under the whole house. The rooms are of very ample dimensions and each house has two baths. Of course these homes are furnished with an abundance of pantry and closet accommodations, both in connection with the kitchen and dining-room and with the bed-rooms. There are four bed-rooms in one house and five in the other. There is a very liberal amount of art glass used in the finish, and all the glass in the houses, as in all first-class homes now building in Los Angeles, is good. The same is true of the hardware throughout the whole house. The walls are decorated in tapestry and Spanish leather. Closets are furnished with bureaus. The bed-room doors have full length bevel plate mirrors.

The building permits issued by the city authorities show that about 600 dwelling houses of one class or another are going up in the city every month in the year. It marks a marvelous city growth, something like 7500 new homes built in a year. If there are five persons to a family it would indicate room for 37,500 people. Of course that is a large estimate for an average family. There are a good many flats erected in the city by the year and also apartment houses, [illegible] tendency is [illegible] that tendency. The average newcomer to the city brings a family and the desire in most cases is to get a home of their own, but a modest cottage of five or six rooms where there are ample grounds, plenty of air, sunshine for the children to play in. The cramped up life in the flat and apartment is less and less popular. There is good demand for accommodations in flats and apartments by single persons and married persons without children or with only one or two. A great many persons must be lodged close to their places of business and for this reason in the center of the city the demand for accommodations in flats and apartments is heavy.

FOR SALE—DO YOU WANT A RANCH?

If so, let us show you one of those kind that really makes money for its owner. One of the kind that HAVE MADE CALIFORNIA FAMOUS as a producer of wealth; one that is for sale because the owner IS REALLY OBLIGED TO SELL ON ACCOUNT OF ILL HEALTH. He is an Italian pioneer, HAS MADE A FORTUNE OUT OF THIS RANCH, and wants to retire.

1223 acres of the choicest land in Southern California.

All under cultivation.

Modern wine distillery and equipped cellars, capacity 60,000 gallons; 6 houses, horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, vineyard, oranges, olives, lemons, grain and alfalfa and, above all,

An abundance of water.

And for less money than you can buy raw land for, without water.

Does it look good to you?

Well, then, come NOW.

MARCHETTI & SON,
14 109 Court st.

FOR SALE—IN THE SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY, I have 12,000 acres of the choicest frostless foothill orange and grape land in California. Here oranges are two weeks earlier than at Porterville, where they ripen before Thanksgiving. This is the inevitable orange belt of the future. The advantages of time and cheap land are irresistible.

This soil is a rich sandy loam, very prolific. The land lies on the S. P. R.R. I can deliver it today at $30 an acre. The terms will be very favorable. By the use of $50,000 or thereabouts the returns in five years can be made extremely large, if a programme of gradual development and the sale of 20-acre farms, improved to grapes and oranges, is followed. I would like to talk this proposition over with a party interested in either the purchase of the land or the organization of a company to handle the property. I will co-operate in the matter.

BEAUTIFUL
IN

LOTS $900 TO $1100; 1-3 CASH.

The lots are 55x135 and 50x135. The streets are 60 ft. wide, highly improved with cement walks, curbs and gutters, and lined with ornamental trees and palms; building restrictions $2000, $2500 and $3000 have been placed upon the lots, thereby insuring good improvements. The property is on the south side of Prospect ave., an 80-ft. boulevard, traversed every 10 minutes by finely-appointed electric cars; get off the car at Willard or Glorietta ave., and you are at the tract, which is only three blocks southwest, of the stately mansion of Arthur Letts, proprietor of the Broadway Dept. store, which stands as a monument to his faith in this beautiful suburb, and which when completed will be recognized as the show place of Southern California.

There are only a few lots left in this handsome subdivision, they will not last long; price list and maps can be had at office on the tract, or at city office.

ACTORS AND ARTISTS

This year brought celebrations in Paris and all over France in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the birth of Corneille. The Club Francais will pay its tribute to the famous Frenchman by inaugurating its series of free public readings with "Le Cid," his greatest work. Mr. Benedict Papot will read October 13 and 20 at noon in Fullerton Hall. The meetings for the study of the French dramas will continue throughout the season and are free to the public.

One of the chorus girls who played with Fay Templeton said, "We hold Miss Templeton in a sort of reverence for the good things she has done; she never forgets a face and can call any one of us with whom she has worked by name."

Before Edgar Selwyn had met with any success he was stranded in Chicago with but $5 in his pocket. Not knowing what to do he went to his friend, Edwin Arden, who loaned him $25 to get back to New York, and from that time Edgar Selwyn's fortunes began to pick up.

The author of a little book called "Lacon" was a parson named Colton, long ago returned to dust, but he wrote some things which will live forever. This is one of them: "Criticism is like champagne—nothing more execrable if bad, nothing more excellent if good. If meager, muddy, vapid and sour, both are fit only to engender colic and wind; but if rich, generous, and sparkling, they communicate a genial glow to the spirits, improve the taste of ear and heart, and are worthy of being introduced at the symposium of the gods."

A coal black kitten got into the Colonial Theater in Chicago one night last week and, after wandering all over the place, finally landed on the stage while George M. Cohan was singing his big hit, "There's Really Nothing New Beneath the Sun." It walked calmly down to the footlights, and after taking a good look at the audience, which was in an uproar by this time, started to follow the actor as he crossed and recrossed the stage, which is part of the "business" of the song. In the meantime, all the "grips" and stage hands were trying in a quiet way to chase the kitten from the scene, but she refused to leave until the curtain was lowered. Mr. Cohan has adopted "Nigger" as a mascot.

"We are all relieved," says an English writer, "to learn M. Rostand's decision not to produce his play 'Chantecler,' which we have been expecting for the last couple of years. We are grateful, for the sake of such masterpieces as 'Cyrano de Bergerac,' to be acquainted with its author—have we not put up with the interminable tedium in 'l'Aiglon?'—but it is doubtful if our admiration for Mr. Rostand would have led us to receive favorably a play in which men and women impersonating baryard fowl talked allegory to the tune of five acts."

Ben Greet, who is in England, takes a delightfully optimistic view of the future of the drama in the United States. In talking with a reporter, after deploring the stagnation in things theatrical in England, he proceeded to say: "In America on the other hand, everything is active and full of life. Certainly they have not, generally speaking, such good acting in Shakespearian and serious plays as we have, and their drama is even more frivolous and thoughtless than ours—but there is an ever-increasing intel-

Beginning tomorrow, Martin J. Jackson will show, for two weeks, at the Blanchard gallery, about sixty pictures in oils and water colors. They will be both Eastern and Western subjects, from New York, from Colorado and from Southern California. Many of them will be recent Laguna sketches—for Mr. Jackson, too, has responded to the lure of the rocks on this enchanted shore.

Mr. Jackson will give a private press view tomorrow evening from 8 till 10. Mrs. E. M. Berlin, of Buffalo, N. Y., will give a short talk on this occasion, on "Whistler—the Man and His Art." I shall have more to say of Mr. Jackson's pictures in next Sunday's Art and Artists.

C. P. Neilson's exhibition of water colors will also open tomorrow morning at Steckel's, 336½ South Broadway. About thirty pictures will be shown, subjects from California, north and south, and from Mexico. These water colors were reviewed very fully in last Sunday's Art and Artists.

The show of water colors that William Swift Daniell has held for the past two weeks at Steckel's closes this afternoon at 5 o'clock. It will be open to the public from 2 o'clock till the closing hour.

This is Mr. Daniell's first downtown exhibit, though he held a smaller one in his studio six months ago—and the public's interest in it has been most gratifying and encouraging. Up to 1 o'clock on Thursday, Mr. Daniell had already sold twelve out of thirty water colors shown.

The pictures disposed of are: "The Ever Sounding Sea," "Low Tide—Laguna," "Capistrano Cloisters," "The Mariner's Foe," "August," "A Path Through Wild Flowers," "Over the Hills and Far Away," "The Sentinel," "Noonday," "Clouds," "The Beach—East San Pedro," and "A Jolly Day."

It looks very much as if Angeleños were beginning to sit up and take notice—and finding out that we have painters among us who can paint.

Our art schools, as well as our painters of pictures, seem to be very busy during these halcyon autumn days. On Friday William Lees Judson invited the public to his large reception rooms at the College of Fine Arts, where a gold medal was bestowed on the most worthy pupil of the year. A number of Mr. Judson's recent landscapes were shown on the walls, as well as some of the work of the pupils.

Hobart Bosworth, the actor-painter, sold two of his pictures from Steckel's on the eve of his departure for Tempe, Ariz., and received a commission to paint another, an Arizona scene. The canvases sold are: "Sandstorm on the Desert" and "Sunset on Salt River." Mr. Bosworth's theatrical ventures, while in Los Angeles, were also remarkably successful.

PRINCIPALS OF "MADAME BUTTERFLY."

Puccini's latest work, based on John Luther Long's tragic story, will be the American musical novelty this year. In New York Conried will produce it, with Puccini himself at the desk. In Los Angeles, Henry W. Savage will present it, at the Mason Operahouse, in January. The accompanying photographs of Mr. Savage's principals were taken in New York two weeks ago, especially for The Times, and are the first to be produced in the West. Elza Szamosy is the most famous prima-donna who has yet sung the part, and was chosen by Puccini himself in Hungary. She has learned English for this role. Norwood is an American artist of international reputation. Jannsen and Behnee are new singers, said to possess brilliant voices. Sheehan and Goff are known here for their splendid operatic work at the Mason two years ago. The orchestra here will number seventy men, and the engagement is for a week, in which each of three sets of principals will be heard at two performances.

TOPICS OF THE STAGE.

IN one week the theatrical season will be in full swing, and events will follow each other in brilliant and rapid procession throughout the major part of the winter.

"Checkers" will commence the season rather quietly at the Mason Operahouse, but "Bob" Edson's picture is placarded, and several offerings of the first order are on Mr. Wyatt's books previous to the new year. Among these are Maxine Elliott and Olga Nethersole, feminine stars of international reputation who will follow each other directly, the one in Christmas week and the other in New Year's week.

This week at the Belasco will be marked by the first stock production of "Shore Acres," to be followed by other presentations of equal importance. Almost a dozen of last year's successes are on the list of the Belasco's available plays, among them a spectacular surprise of the first importance.

"Lady Windermere's Fan" will serve Mary Van Buren for her reëntry, after a brief rest, at the Burbank, and Mr. Morosco has in preparation an elaborate revival of "If I Were King," for the return of popular "Bill" Desmond.

At the Auditorium the twenty-four-hour force is on, in changing shifts, preparing for the grand opera opening, November 8.

E. A. Fischer is concluding his negotiations for the big Tivoli comic opera company, which he expects to establish permanently here in stock.

Mr. Drown avers that the Orpheum's winter list of attractions is the greatest that this vaudeville house has ever known.

A succession of road shows will start at the Grand Operahouse early in December.

Two more grand opera engagements of the highest character are booked for the Mason in mid-season.

Plans for at least one new theater are in agitation.

Can any town west of Chicago show a dramatic forecast that will compare at all with ours? If there be any, returns are yet to come in.

THE LOCAL WEEK.

Manager Blackwood has a novelty this week in "Shore Acres," James A. Herne's successful play, which will receive it first stock production anywhere at the Belasco theater tomorrow night.

George W. Barnum will take Herne's old part, Nathaniel Berry, while to William Yerance will be entrusted the part of the brother, Martin Berry. The entire company and a number of auxiliary players will be engaged in the production.

The famous turkey dinner, the stirring conflict between the brothers in the lighthouse, and the view of the sloop "Liddy Ann" in a storm at sea will be notable spectacular features.

Following "Shore Acres," the Belasco company will play for the first time here "Mistress Nell," with Amelia Gardner as Nell Gwynne.

The first advertisements of the Mason dramatic season have been sent out. A week from Monday the first show, which is "Checkers," will open for a week's engagement.

The story is one of racing and racers, and there has been enough warm human interest in the drama to keep it going successfully for a number of seasons.

A good cast is promised for the local offering.

Mr. Morosco continues after records of all sorts. His latest pursuit is for the two-week production feat, and "Sherlock Holmes," which will continue today, is the third in a consecutive series of two-week plays.

Next week Mary Van Buren will return in a revival of the brilliant "Lady Windermere's Fan."

Carter DeHaven and Flora Parker head the Orpheum bill this week in a singing act which, with its accompanying dancing, is said to be a sketch of unusual daintiness.

Pantomime requires maximum ability, and Zazell and Vernon company, who will present "The Elopement," are said to be artists of high order in their class.

The "Three Roses," attractive young women, have a musical skit, in which they play upon a varied assortment of instruments.

The "Wandering Minstrels," Adamini and Taylor, offer a selection of songs and ballads, enhanced by novel costuming and setting.

Clifton Crawford will remain, Eleanor Dorel will be heard in new songs, Fortune and Davis have a new act, and the motion pictures are said to be of unique merit.

"The Man from Mexico" will continue at the Hotchkiss Theater for another week. Reason: Unusual popularity of Mr. Howard with the Hotchkiss audiences. In the principal role of this play he has found a character which displays his special comic talents to good advantage—hence the prolongation.

"A Millionaire Tramp," roistering comedy-melodrama of rather unusual type, will be revived at the Grand this afternoon. There are good parts for both Harrison King and Agnes Ranken, with several character opportunities for other members of the company.

Elsewhere.

William T. Stead, the celebrated English writer who kept out of the theater until a year or two ago, has at last visited a music-hall. Why, he does not explain. He is in no doubt, however, as to what he found there. He writes: "For three and a half solid hours I sat patiently litening to the most insufferable banality and imbecility that ever fell upon human ears. Compared with much of the 'patter' and semi-articulte gibberish that was heard from the stage, the gibbering of apes at the Zoo was an intellectual repast. Hour after hour the dreary round went on. Comedian succeeded comedienne with monotonous regularity. The elaborate organization of the hall ground out 'turns' as a sausage machine forces out mince-meat. Here and there came a welcome splash of color from a human kaleidoscope, as when 'the —— Girls' were on, and there was a juggler who was clever, but for the most part the performance was as unrelieved by beauty as by wit. My second impression, which naturally followed upon the boredom, was one of wrathful indignation. It seemed intolerable that in Anno Domini 1906 the heirs of a thousand years of civilization, and the product of thirty-five years of the Education act, should relish this inane drivel. It was not the immorality of the thing that roused me so much as the imbecility of it all. It was difficult to realize that the well-dressed 'ladies and gentlemen,' who had paid four and five shillings to occupy the stalls, and who appreciatively applauded vulgarities which might have shamed a costermonger, were citizens of an empire on which the sun never sets, arbiters of the destinies of a quarter of the human race. I did not feel that they were vicious so much as they were so nakedly stupid and unashamed."

Mr. Stead is evidently judging a music-hall by lofty intellectual standards alone.

Young Irving, while a good actor, is in the opinion of Franklin Fyles no genius. Mr. Fyles writes: "It is no wonder that actors' heads swell with vanity, while their chests expand with strut, when audiences applaud them as though they were heroes in more than make-believe. To me there is nothing sillier on the stage than the mummer who, after taking on fictional glories, doesn't put them off when he comes before the curtain still puffed and dilated and seeming to see a medal for bravery proferred to him by every pair of clapping hands. The case looked utterly different when Henry B. Irving, at the end of his first performance in America, was called out in the shoes of his famous father to say something pertinent, but not impertinent, to the peculiar circumstances. There was no doubting the reality of his embarrassment as he wriggled awkwardly, clutched the curtain to steady himself, and stammered for words. He knew that all the evening the people had been sizing him up by the measure of Henry Irving to find him wanting, even though satifactory when considered by himself alone. But he may not have been aware that, as Malatesta in 'Paolo and Francesca,' he had been brought under a losing comparison with Lawrence Barrett and Otis Skinner.

"Henry B. Irving was seen at once to resemble his sire vividly in face and figure; his first utterance gave a less close similarity in speech; and then again when he moved there was an almost startling likeness in stride and gesture. To me he seemed neither so admirable nor so absurd as his father, for he lacked both the authoritative power and the ludicrous mannerisms of Irving the Great. He is an excellent actor, I think, but not extraordinary. His début may be recorded as indubitably successful. Along with him comes his wife, Dorothea Baird, a lisper. She couldn't say ess, but only eth, if to thay it were to thave her thoul. She is tall, slender, exquisite, but why should a girl unable to pronounce all the letters of the alphabet ever have become an actress? This Francesca couldn't tell the truth about her own name, but said it was Franthethca."

Kyrle Bellew made his bow a few days ago in "Brigadier Gerard," at Chicago. Amy Leslie wrote, in the News:

"Bellew builds himself up valiantly to a certain suggestion of brawn and burly swagger, the better expressing Gerard's probable physique, and he wears Bellew's own matchless satin hair of silvery white with an opposing mustache black as a raven's wing, and twisted in Bombastes Furioso curl most handsome and belligerent to see. Instantly the stunning figure of Mr. Bellew marches into the picture and his musical voice begins to ripple out anecdote, avow, stormy threat and loyal oaths, the real reason for the play is forgotten and only the hope that Gerard will come out of all his possible pitfalls predicted in his own sweet, trustful bluster and candor, excited the audience. It was so near an opening trial of the piece that there was all the tension and nervous strain of a premier in serious balance, but lines went musically on with few hesitations, points were made, and, though Kyrle Bellew does not boast of himself as a first-nighter of any scintillation, his elegance of art, personal magnetism, individual charm and thoroughly sympathetic treatment of the hero made the play his own and added to his showy list of romantic heroes one most adorable and genuinely appealing soldier and lover.

"It is a man's play with the strenuous demands made upon manly actors, though among a whole camp of army officers, politicians, traitors, and rules two feminine roles beam graciously. Miss Ida Conquest, statuesque and exquisitely attired, was intelligent and sympathetic as well as beautiful as the Comtesse de Roquelaure, beloved by Gerard and the recipient of that fervid blunderer's most astonishingly tender avowals at inopportune moments when the crisis had nothing to do with affection and love making. Miss Conquest had little to do, but with great delicacy she made the most of the part and a decided hit, particularly the romping scene in Talleyrand's private saloon, where between them the two Bonaparte conspirators manage to tie up the awesome Talleyrand in a cabinet and ship him back to Napoleon with other gifts. Elsie Ferguson, a most agreeable young person, pretty, magnetic and intelligent, played an insignificant part in so significant and charming a way as not only to win attention but applause, simply because she was so clever and attractive."

Of General Interest.

"Artie" will be the name of the new play upon which George Ade is at work. It will be produced after the Christmas holidays.

May Yohe shortly will appear in "Mlle. Nitouche," an adaptation from the French, in which she acted and sang in London some years ago.

Guy Standing's début as a star under the direction of the Messrs. Shubert will be made in a comedy drama entitled "A Society Policeman."

Gertrude Rennyson, prima donna the last three seasons with the Savage Opera company, has joined the Paris colony of former English grand opera stars.

Mrs. Stuart Robson has determined to leave the stage permanently after her present season in vaudeville. She is appearing in a one-act play by Edmund Day, entitled "The Late Mr. Wildoats."

"The Moon Man" is the title of a new comic opera, with music by A. Baldwin Sloane. The book, which deals with the results of modern financial methods applied to a South Sea island community, is by Campbell Casad, the magazine writer.

A. W. Pinero's next new play, it is announced, will be of a serious character, of a nature similar to "His House in Order." The completion of the farcical piece which he had promised has been postponed.

Charles Dillingham announces that Mrs. Leslie Carter will make her first appearance under his direction in a new play by Edwin Milton Royle, entitled "Cleo," a drama of present-day life, with scenes laid in this country and in France.

William A. Brady has entered into a contract with George H. Broadhurst for the immediate production of the latter's play, "The Man of the Hour." It is said to tell an up-to-date story of high finance, political intrigue, and the working of graft in city government.

Marie Doro's new song, "Say Fay," is being sung by Hattie Williams and James Blakely in "The Little Cherub." This marks Miss Doro's second contribution to this musical play and other songs of hers are being given by Edna May at the Vaudeville and Seymour Hicks at the Aldwych Theater, London.

Arthur W. Pinero has just sold the rights of "His House in Order" to Denmark, and the Theater Antoine, Paris, where it will be given this coming winter. It will be presented in Copenhagen this season by Madame Ida Neilson, a famous Danish actress. In Paris it is to be rendered by the stock company of the Theater Antoine, but, presumably, without Antoine himself, who has become the manager of the Odéeon.

An actor, who was playing his first small part with a first-class company and had, in consequence, changed from the lunch counter and the hash board to the hotel cafe, was making the most of his new opportunities by sending the waiter back on the slightest pretext, complaining of everything that was brought to him and using the roughest kind of language. Wilton Lackaye, seated at the same table, having finished his meal, met the waiter coming from the kitchen and, giving him a "tip," remarked: "That man is making it rather disagreeable for you, isn't he?" "Yes, sah," replied the negro, "but I get revenge on him, sah." "How is that?" asked Lackaye. "See this cup of tea, sah? Well, sah," and the negro grinned from ear to ear, "I just done spit in it, sah."

London journals speak very favorably of a new three-act comedy, by Mrs. Henry de la Pasture, entitled "Peter's Mother," which has just been played at Wyndham's Theater. It tells a simple story of a doting mother who was almost ready to desert the death bed of her husband in order to take charge of her son, mere boy who had volunteered for South Africa—and who lived to find her son utterly selfish and indifferent to her sacrifices for him. All ends happily, however, with the boy coming to his senses, and the widow, still young, marrying the man of her choice. The piece seems to have owed a great deal to the admirable acting of Marion Terry and that excellent comedian, Frederick Kerr.

Although Caruso thrives, opera managers and throat doctors in Paris are saying that the tenor species, as a general rule, is dying out. Fewer and fewer, in France, at all events, are born or made. One physician calls this a good sign for the race, as in his opinion the tenor voice is unnatural, and tenors are not fine specimens of manhood. But Dr. Poyet, another authority, contradicts him indignantly, and stands up vigorously for tenors. He acknowledges that the mere tenorino is a weakly, unmanly creature, but the robust tenor is a fine specimen of manhood." The true degenerate is the bass. Look at Caruso, de Reszke, Alvarez, to say nothing of the Germans, cries Dr. Poyet. The tenor has shorter vocal chords, and requires, therefore, greater chest powers to produce volume of sound. "Basses, on the contrary, are generally thin, dried-up men of weakly aspect." (Shades of Plancon, Edouard de Reszke and Journet!)

The Musical World.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

Olga Steeb is soon to be heard in concert.

Two years have elapsed since the girl who was once a "child prodigy" has appeared here in public, and in the interim she has been studying and toiling as assiduously as if she had never known early celebrity.

Her appearance will be awaited with speculative interest.

—o—

Gamut Opening.

The inaugural concert of the Gamut Club—which is to be participated in by almost 100 professional musicians of the city—has been postponed to Wednesday evening, November 14. It will be an invitation affair, and an event in the artistic life of the town.

—o—

Arend's Music.

W. F. Arend is continuing his good music, both at Morley's rink and at the Van Nuys.

Mr. Arend's programmes reflect not only a contribution to popular favor, but also music of worth and genuine artistic interest. Would there were more Arends.

—o—

Organ Recital.

Mr. Sessions will give his next organ recital Wednesday afternoon at Christ Church. Mr. Blumenfeld will be his soloist, playing a Vieuxtemps reverie and the Moszkowski serenata. Mr. Sessions will play the introduction and allegro from Guilmant's first sonata, a Jensen bridal song, and two Dubois compositions.

Moore's Band.

Director Moore has a good programme for his Fidelia Band at Eastlake this afternoon. His numbers include the Raff cavatina, an Ambroise Thomas overture, Betento's "St. Cecelia," a descriptive number by Myddleton, and the first local offering of Boccalari's "The Dance of the Serpents."

—o—

Long Beach Music.

The Municipal Band of Long Beach, under the direction of Marco Vessella, will offer some excellent music in its regular programmes today. The afternoon selections include Creatore's "Royal Purple," the overture to "William Tell," a Chopin nocturne, a selection from "Fra Diavolo," and a fantasia on "Gioconda." The evening programme will feature Thomas's "Raymond" overture, the pilgrims chorus from "I Lombardi," a grand selection from "Traviata," and compositions by both Oreste and Marco Vessella.

Early "Faust" History.

An interesting chapter in the history of "Faust" is referred to by the London Telegraph in its article on the late Mme. Lemmens Sherrington:

"Perhaps the brightest passage in the career of a lady who maintained a high reputation, both in sacred and secular music, occurred in the year 1864. In the previous June Gounod's masterpiece had been produced by Mr. Mapleson at the Royal Italian Opera. The late Mr. Gye, the opposition impresairo at Her Majesty's Theater, had refused to have anything to do with 'Faust,' which had made little impression in Paris, and had failed in Milan. A few days before the production of the opera in London only £30 worth of seats had been taken for the opening performance and Mapleson, after resolving on the unusual course of announcing the work for four nights in succession, arranged that, for three out of the four, not a single further seat should be sold. Nearly the whole of the tickets for the first three nights were given away, and an advertisement was printed stating that, in consequence of a death in the family, two stalls secured for the first representation of 'Faust' could be bought at an increased price. These were disposed of several times over, and meanwhile people coming to the box office were informed that neither love nor money would purchase places for the first three performances. 'Faust' immediately 'caught on' and was presented for ten nights in succession, besides being constantly repeated until the end of the season. Titiens was the original Marguerite here with Giuglini as Faust, Trebelli as Siebel, Gassier as Mephistopheles and Santley as Valentine. Mr. Gye hastened to put up the opera at Her Majesty's Theater, and on June 7, 1864, Adelina Patti performed Marguerite for the first time.

"In January, 1864, 'Faust' was presented in English at Her Majesty's, and Gounod expressly composed for Santley the popular cavatina, 'Loving Smile of Sister Kind." Sims Reeves—though not on the first night—played Faust; Santley had his old part (he afterward appeared as Mephistopheles;) Mme.2 Florence Lancia, who died last year, was the Siebel, and Marguerite was allotted to Mme. Lemmens-Sherrington, to whom the warmest praise was given for an excellent impersonation. Though not so dramatic as that of Titiens, it was marked by freshness and purity of intonation, with happy technic and a correct and tuneful delivery. The singer's methods were declared to be conspicuously artistic and musician like. There were many performances of the English 'Faust,' which to this day—forty-two years later—retains a foremost place in all operatic repertoires."

ESTER ADABERTO.

Signora Adaberto is the bright particular star of the Latin constellation which will open the new Auditorium with an extended season of grand opera. Some critics assert that she is already in the exclusive circle of the greatest dramatic sopranos in the world; however this may be, she is at least a singer of intelligence and splendid voice, and is gifted with unusual histrionic talent. She has never been heard in the United States, and will make her debut before an English-speaking audience on inaugural night, as Aida, in the opera of that name.

EMILIO DE GOGORZA.

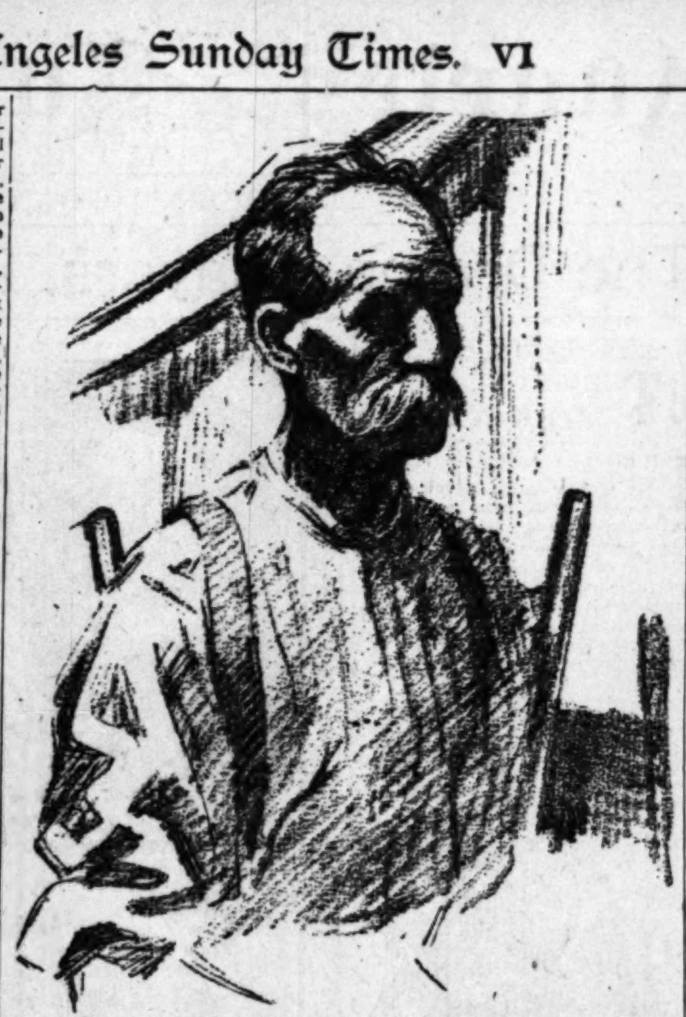
Mr. Behymer's first visiting artist is no stranger to Los Angeles, and cannot fail to receive a cordial welcome from all lovers of the best music. Gogorza's voice is a baritone of no phenomenal qualities, but in artistry its possessor is the equal of the greatest singers of the world, and ranks among the foremost concert singers of two continents. His superb style, mastery of the divergent schools of French, Italian, German and English composition, his temperamental renditions, and, above all, the consummate finish of all his work, combine to make him a rare interpreter. He will be heard at Simpson Auditorium a week from the coming Tuesday.

ART NOTES.

The School of Art, Westlake, will give an informal "at home" on Tuesday afternoon, October 16, in order that the public may have a better opportunity to see Alexander Sterling Calder's many photographs of his beautiful works in sculpture. This "at home" is given by request, as the recent reception tendered Mr. Calder was so crowded that no one had much chance to inspect photographs. Mr. Calder, who is a sculptor of splendid attainments, has already begun to build himself a studio, and will remain with us permanently—a most gratifying bit of news. His wife is also an artist, being a painter of reputation who has studied for many years in Paris.

The Art Students' League, the youngest of the schools, is also being heard from now and again. It has just doubled its quarters in Blanchard Hall. There are now three life classes, under the instruction of Hanson Puthuff, Warren T. Hedges and Joseph Greenbaum. C. P. Neilson has a class in water colors. Leta Hörlocker will start, next Saturday, a children's class in still-life drawing. She will also conduct a class for adults on Saturday afternoons, in a comprehensive study of the principles of design. These two classes will go out, from time to time, to study from nature.

Hanson Puthuff will hold an exhibition of some of his recent pictures, figures and landscapes in oils, in Blanchard Hall during the first two weeks of November. Some pictures by Charles Austin, of Denver, who has just come from Paris, will also be shown in conjunction with Mr. Puthuff's, as well as landscapes from the brush of the ill-fated Alexander Compera, a man of great and unique talent, who died recently in San Diego of locomotor ataxia. Mr. Puthuff has gained much in strength and finish of late, and this exhibition will undoubtedly excite much interest.



Sketch from life, by A. G. Vernon, pupil of Art Students' League.

Art and Artists.

BY ANTONY E. ANDERSON.

Saskia.

The lovely Friesland maiden whom the pride
Inherent in her old patrician race,
Forbade not to renounce her birthright's place,
And seek her marriage bliss at Rembrandt's side,
Had recompense to Friesland's best denied:
For, never wearying of the auroral grace
Of Northern lights that flashed about her face,
He, for all time, her beauty glorified.
Her soul lies mute on each Madonna's mouth;
Her blonde hair floats across Bathsheba's breasts;
Her mingled snow-and-roses kindle up
Susannah's cheeks; as Hagar in her drouth,
She droops; and 'mid Ahasuerus' guests,
She sits, Queen Esther with the jeweled cup.

St. Clair's First Exhibition.

Norman St. Clair's water-color paintings have been shown us by twos and threes at the various exhibitions for the past few years, and their charm of color and crisp sureness of touch have won them a host of admirers.

Tomorrow, however, and for the next two weeks, an even greater pleasure is offered us, for he is about to hold his first "one-man" exhibit at the Little Corner of Local Art on East Avenue 41—and this, by the way, is also the Little Corner's first "one-man" show. The gallery, though small, is a good one, being well-lighted and agreeably toned.

Mr. St. Clair has worked among us for years in a quiet, unobtrusive way, never making the slightest bid for our attention till he felt that he was perfectly ready for the challenge. He has painted Southern California with loving fidelity and truth. Now he comes modestly forward with thirty water colors, the most of them being recent work at Laguna. Mr. St. Clair has gained much in strength and simplicity during the past year, and many of these pictures have great beauty.

"At Morn, Beside a Summer Sea," with its rich, sparkling color and fine movement of waves, was reproduced in these columns some weeks ago. Another picture which will be shown is "The Sea Mist," giving a group of eucalypts on the hills in the foreground with a haze-wrapped sea in the distance. The hills, massive and well-drawn, are full of pleasant color, a play of broken greens, browns and purples. "Wind Swept" shows us the same hills and the same trees from another point of view and at another time of day. There is a delicate purple haze in the sky.

"The Charmed Sea" is undoubtedly one of the best painted of the pictures—all of which, indeed, are well done. The beautiful blue sea is somnolent and quiet enough, and its charm is a malevolent one—that of danger and death. There are mossy rocks in its curving arm, but the heat quivers above the bluffs in the distance. "The Charmed Sea" might with equal felicity be called "Circe's Shore"—that spot where, according to Rossetti, "the dishevelled seaweed hates the sea." It suggests, too, Capri and the Mediterranean, though it is undoubtedly California and the Pacific.

"Shining Shores" has a sea of deep blue and green. A wave breaks over sands strewn with seaweed. The background of bluffs lies yellow in the sunlight, and the whole scene vibrates with heat. "The Coast Road" is big and broad and impressional. The sea, which lies a-dream beyond yellowish brown hills, is lovely and restful.

"Radiant Morn" is another Hellenic reminiscence. The shore curves into a basin whose blue and green waters might have tempted the nymphs of Diana. The cliffs are sharply smitten by the morning sun, and the sky is delicately gray. "Sun Gleams" shows two huge rocks that are also touched by brilliant sunlight. The water swirls round the bases of these rocks. The feeling of wetness is very well rendered. "The Blazoned Cliffs" is also a sunlight picture. The bluish afternoon shadows are beautifully done. The sea, greenish gray, is beating on a strip of beach. "Mid Southern Hills" is an evening effect looking up Laguna Cañon. It is daringly conceived and well handled. The hills seem tremendously big and heavy.

These, the first fruits of Norman St. Clair's fine talent, are given us to enjoy for two weeks. All who like good water-color painting—and who does not?—should not neglect a golden opportunity for profitable pleasure. Let us show our appreciation of what Los Angeles painters are doing for us.

Pictures by the Wachtels.

The Wachtels opened their fall exhibition of recent pictures yesterday at 10 o'clock. It closes tomorrow at 5. About forty pictures are being shown. The oils are from the strong brush of Elmer Wachtel; the water colors are from the brush of his perhaps equally gifted wife, Marion Kavanaugh Wachtel.

Their new studio, which is perched on a picturesque hill near Marmion Way, at 315 West Avenue 43, has practically two exhibition rooms, the smaller one being hung with water colors.

To my mind—and I am not alone in this opinion—Elmer Wachtel has painted certain aspects of Southern California landscape as well as, or better than, they have yet been painted by anybody. I might even add, and still be within the bounds of truth, that he has sometimes rendered them in pigment as well as they can be painted at all. This is high praise—the highest, in fact—but this man's artistic equipment is so strong, so complete, and withal so refined and delicate, that it is bound to call forth praise from those who care for what is best and truest in art.

Witness his "Spring." Could anything be truer than this small canvas to the facts of California? Could anything be nearer to her poetic truths? It has no gush of overpowering emotion, but it has something which is far better than that truth to nature and restrained feeling. It's a poem in paint—but its form is as perfect as Wordsworth's most faultless sonnet. "Winter," another California landscape, with its exquisite sky that never once suggests paint, is like unto "Spring" in its completeness. The foreground is cold and dark, the hills covered with laurel and sage, are soggy with recent rains—but there's a glorious burst of light over the distant mountains.

Mr. Wachtel's "Southern California" is big and impressive in its feeling for this beautiful country of ours. This is California as we know it and love it—and no other place under the sun. It is strikingly different from "The Mountains" and "In the Foothills," both painted last spring in the Salt Lake Valley, fifteen miles from Salt Lake City. These are exquisite paintings, both of them, full of atmosphere—not mist, but air. The values in the distant mountains, painted with the utmost directness and simplicity, and entirely out of doors, are wonderfully true—and therefore wonderfully beautiful. And we have much poetry, too, for a poet laid those values in with an almost magic brush.

Other fine canvases from the hand of Mr. Wachtel are "December Afternoon," a somber picture with a big shadow resting over the foreground and with high, floating clouds; and "San Fernando Valley," in which the sunlight lies, warm, bright, yet entirely unforced.

Mrs. Wachtel shows at least three water colors which merit the epithet remarkable. These are "Wasatch Mountains at Sunset," "Morning, Salt Lake Valley," and "At Sunset." The last, which narrowly escaped destruction in San Francisco, and which came through unscathed because it had not yet been unboxed, is a California scene. It is painted in a splendidly big way. One wonders how the artist could get, with a thin film of color mixed with water, such a glow to the mountains and such a light in the sky.

"Wasatch Mountains at Sunset" is quite as perfect a tour de force in its way. Mrs. Wachtel's mists really float and move around her snowy peaks. Her twilights are not somber touches of heavy dark paint, but the tender, airy dusks of nature. They are never depressing—only delicately pensive.

"Morning, Salt Lake Valley," has caught with much felicity and ease another time of day—the breezy coolness of the earlier hours. Our artist's "Drifting Fog," a sketch from Elsinore, is full of grays, yellows, greens and purples, yet it is in perfect tone—not the effortless tone of flat washes, unpleasant adobe pigment, but the living (and true) tone that comes from the harmony of many hues.

The fact that we have two such strong and earnest workers as the Wachtels among us is a cause for congratulation. They have "arrived"—but their goal is yet higher. If we follow them with understanding, we shall gain many things to our advantage.

Captain Courtesy
A Story of Old California

By EDWARD CHILDS CARPENTER. 12 mo. Cloth; decorative With five illustrations in color by Elenore Plaisted Abbott. Price

A dainty little story, neat, clean, and artistic, with Southern California in the days of the rule of the Missions as a charming background. The character sketching is fine; Captain Courtesy, Eleanor, and the Padre are delightfully done. The action is so rapid and the climaxes come so speedily that the story suggests the play almost more than the novel. It is a tale that one does not lay down until the end is

EVENTS OF THE WEEK.

SOCIETY folk have scarce had opportunity of catching their breath, on returning from the summer outing, until they have been plunged into the whirl of social and club life. With the opening of the clubs an impetus is given to the social side of ... and a number of large functions have been given during the past week. Among others very enjoyable was a reception held Monday afternoon by Mrs. J. C. Brown of No. 1367 ... street in honor of Mrs. Ma- of Miss Ruth Clinkscales and Harry Wagner was made known. Miss Edna R. Zimberman and Clark M. Fletcher were married at the bride's home on East Adams street. Mrs. William G. Schreiber of No. 1032 Lincoln street was hostess at a meeting of the West Side Bridge Club. Wednesday evening Miss Corrine Woodcock became the bride of Harry Franklin, at a home ceremony.

Thursday an enjoyable affair was the dinner party given by Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Bartlett at "Vista Del Mar," Hollywood. In the evening Miss Ruth Adams became the bride of George F. Pfaffenberger at a pretty home ceremony. W. S. Collins and Mrs. Jessie Freeman were married at the home of the groom's son-in-law, J. C. White of South Hope street, surprising their friends. Miss Evelyn a different color scheme and the attendant at each table to be dressed in corresponding color.

The committee in charge includes Mrs. Ellsworth Downing, chairman, and Misses Gertrude Knight, Carolyn Knight, Marjory Mosher, Dorothy Mosher and Emma and Bertha Smith. Ladies who are acting as patronesses include Mesdames A. G. L. Trew, Harold Bashford, S. Fred Knight, Harry Lee Knight, M. E. Metcalf and William McLernon.

Miss Goss Is Bride.

Yesterday afternoon Miss Rachel Goss became the bride of William Dayo, the wedding taking place quietly at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Harry Hitchcock, of No. 686 Witmer street, with Rev. J. J. Wilkins of St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral officiating. After a short wedding trip the couple will make their home in this city. The bride is a charmingly pretty girl with quantities of golden hair and appealing blue eyes, and is a sister of Mrs. Simpson G. Wilson of Hollywood. She is a daughter of Mark Wentworth Goss of this city.

Phi Theta Sorority Entertains.

Saturday afternoon Miss Florence Cronkhite was initiated into the Phi Theta Sorority. This was followed by a dinner given by the president, Miss Alice Hardesty at her home on Whittier Drive. In the evening the sorority entertained a few friends with cards. The tables were arranged on the lawn beneath a canopy, which was artistically decorated with Japanese lanterns and pennants, the color scheme being lavender and green, the sorority colors.

Guests were: Misses Florence Cronkhite, Ione Ditch, Edith Gray, Ethel Wyatt, Katherine Bosshard, Fay Pendleton, Alice Hardesty, Mmes. B. Hopkins and A. H. Hardesty and Messrs. H. McDonald, D. Jones, Harry Wyatt, M. Kirby, J. Baldwin, F. Johnson, R. Smith and I. Gardner.

Miss Deming's Engagement.

Miss Kate Hanley of No. 2106 Pasadena avenue, entertained the members of the Triple K Sorority yesterday afternoon with an informal luncheon, at which time the engagement of one of their members, Miss Vallie Deming, was announced to Irvin Barret. Miss Deming is charming and popular, and the news will come as a surprise to her friends. The date of the wedding has not been set, and it will probably not take place for a year.

Those who enjoyed the luncheon were: Misses Vallie Deming, Beulah Kirby, Helen Parkins, Edna Staples, Louise Rush, Martha Dickinson, May Dickinson, Elsie Hotchkiss and Bess Rudesill.

Entertains Bridge Club.

Mrs. William G. Schreiber entertained the West Side Bridge Club at her home on Lincoln street on Wednesday afternoon. Dainty prizes were awarded to the winners, Mrs. J. C. Smith receiving the prize for points, and Mrs. Tom Fitzgerald the one for honors. Those present were: Mmes. Dudley, Harold C. Fisher, Tom Fitzgerald, J. G. Hanst, J. B. Harrison, F. H. Jones, McFarlane, A. J. Prosser, J. W. Rouse, J. C. Smith, Wm. H. Stearns, McGaw, Johnson, Hammond, Miss Baker and Helen Bushnell.

Flints' Party.

Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Flint of No. 944 West Thirtieth street entertained last evening with an informal dance and party for a number of their friends. The house was prettily decorated with flowers and ferns and Arend's Orchestra furnished music for the evening.

Mrs. Avant Here.

Mrs. Bessie Bane Avant of New York, with her young daughter, Miss Marguerite Avant, are here to spend the winter. Mrs. Avant is a writer of short stories and is now engaged in writing a book, a story of the Nevada desert. Her daughter, Miss Marguerite, is attending the Girl's Collegiate School.

"La Rosa" Club.

Thursday afternoon a new whist club was organized by Mrs. M. Danziger to be known as La Rosa Whist Club. Only two officers were elected, Mrs. M. Cohn, president, and Mrs. B. Wolff secretary and treasurer. The club is to meet on the second and fourth Thursday of each month at the homes of the different members.

Alpha Chi Omega Festivity.

In honor of the three charming patronesses of the Alpha Chi Omega Sorority of the University of Southern California, Misses White and Hawley entertained yesterday afternoon with a luncheon, dainty in all its appoint-

The same day Miss Fern Palmer and Max Parker announced the date of their wedding as November 7, to take place at St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral.

Saturday afternoon Miss Bertha Brooks of No. 2812 Menlo avenue gave a package shower for Miss Elsie Lapham, and the same day Mrs. Burwell A. Holmes of West Twenty-third street gave a shower for Miss Mary Holmes, another of the coming winter's brides.

Give Southern Supper.

The Altar Guild of the All Saints' Episcopal Mission at Highland Park is planning to give a novel affair on next Thursday evening in the way of a genuine southern supper, with all the good old dishes of the South to be served, and the girls, who will serve them are all to be in the quaint southern costume of ante-bellum days. During the supper negro jubilee singers will furnish plantation songs. Instead of the large tables used in most church suppers, the girls have planned an innovation and the guests will be seated at small tables, each to be in

Get a Properly Fitting Corset

Every lady is looking for comfort and proper fit in a corset and the way to get it is by coming to us and having one of our expert fitters attend to you. We have a model to fit every form, whether large or small, and we do not permit a corset to leave the shop unless properly fitted. Corsets are all filled with genuine whalebone, making them comfortable to the wearer and also retain the shape. Do not purchase a corset until you have tried on ours and be convinced.

Watch our windows for bargains in lingerie. We are constantly displaying garments at prices below the average. Also see our combination suits in two and three-piece garments. They are the novelty of the season.

SPRING AND THIRD STS.

SMALL PRICES alone do not make good values. Other ingredients such as DEPENDABLE QUALITY, STYLE and NEWNESS are, to our notion, just as necessary. We are as particular about STYLE and QUALITY here as we are about moderate prices. Compare our new fall and winter stock with others and be convinced.

New Silks

First showing tomorrow of a solid case of autumn novelty silks. Styles suitable for dresses, waists, evening gowns, separate skirts and petticoats. All these are new to this town — styles confined exclusively to this store.

PUNJABS in neat little blocks and checks for street dresses.

PERSIANS AND DRESDENS and pretty pompadour warp prints, in dark or light grounds for evening or afternoon costumes.

Plaids for waists or full gowns in the most exquisite colorings imaginable, with handsome warp printed Persian designs interwoven, and a host of other strictly high class effects in soft finished wearable taffetas, Louisines and Punjab weaves.

$1.25 and $1.50 a Yard

Late Waist Fashions

Never were waist styles so varied or so universally pretty as this fall. Each one you see seems newer, prettier than the last. In this stock we aim at exclusiveness, buy few of a kind that they may not become common.

Newest Silk Waists $4.95

Made of the best grades of chiffon taffeta or fine soft Louisine; fancy checks, plaids and plain colors; strictly tailored styles with open fronts, long sleeves, box plaited fronts and backs; all the best fall colors, black and white, $4.95.

Silk Evening Waists $6.50

Elaborate affairs of white chiffon taffeta; sleeves, front and back beautifully decorated with yards of Val. lace; baby Irish and embroidery medallions; short sleeves, open back. Special $6.50. And the above is only one among a dozen styles.

Silk Tailor-Mades $7.50

Tailor made waists of soft finished, plain colored taffeta silk; box plaited front, groups of fine plaits down the back, long sleeves, open front, fancy stock with bow tie; cream, navy, black, brown and gray. Specially priced $7.50.

Messaline Waists $10.00

Made of silk with a lasting luster, a silk for service as well as style; fine tucked and box plaited front and back; new long sleeves buttoned to the elbow, open front. All the pretty autumn colors, including the best blues and browns, also cream and black, $10.00.

Roman Striped Wool Waists $6.50

In this new arrival you'll see the latest eastern waist fad. Made of fine, smooth finished wool waisting cloth in broad Roman stripes of every hue. Yoke back, long sleeves, turn back cuffs and collar, black taffeta bow tie, $6.50.

Hair-Line Wool Waists $5.50

Regular shirt styles with yoke back and front, breast pocket, tailored cuffs and collar, black bow tie. They come in fine wool batiste in white grounds with little single thread hair line stripes and checks of black or navy blue, each, $5.50.

New Woolens

If there's any doubt in your mind concerning the popularity of broadcloths for the coming season, consult your fashion authority on the subject. Our stock is most complete.

PLAIN FRENCH broadcloths in the chiffon weight, every color and shade one could mention; permanent satin finish, 52 inches wide, yard $1.75.

Fancy Broadcloths of French make in novel self-colored plaids or two-toned stripes, 52 inches wide at, yard, $2.50.

MORAVINS—(the new dress fabric,) in all street or evening shades, dark, light or medium. The cloth that's thoroughly sponged and shrunk; spot proof, ready for the tailor, 52 inches wide, yard, $3.00.

FRENCH BROADCLOTHS in corn flower and French blues, and the newest of all shades, the American Beauty Rose, 52 inches wide, yard, $3.50 and $4.50.

NEW VOILES for dressy costumes; sheer, light weight, lustrous; every wanted color, cream and black, 44 in., yard, $1.50.

NOVELTY SUITINGS in cream grounds with gray or black overplaids and stripes. Most stunning styles of this or any other season. 44 to 52 inches wide, $1.25 yard to $2.50.

SCOTCH FLANNELS for petticoats, waists, night robes, pajamas or for men's shirts; half wool, non-shrinkable, permanent colors, 30 inches wide, yard 50c.

Coats for Evening Wear

It would be a difficult matter to overestimate or exaggerate this most superb showing of evening and afternoon coats and wraps. It's certainly the most extensive showing this town has seen. And with all the style, beauty and newness, there's a note of economy about the pricings that can be heard above each and every other feature. Let us prove it. Just a hint:

Evening Coats $25.00

Of chiffon broadcloth trimmed with velvet and fancy braids, satin lined, seven-eighths length. White, black, tans and grays, $25.00.

Evening Coats $32.50

New styled evening coats of French broadcloth, seven-eighths length, full sleeves, wide and narrow braid trimmings; light blue, nile and chamois colors. Special at $32.50.

Evening Coats $50.00

Cut full length, triple cape, deep cuffs and collar finished with black velvet inserts and white silk and cut steel ornaments, $50.00.

Lace Coats $60.00

Handsome white lace coat, seven-eighths length with cuffs, collar and entire front edged with wide accordion plaited chiffon ruching, $60.00. Other exclusive model of broadcloth in pink, peach, nile, corn flower, light and Alice blues, champagne, chamois, grays, black and white. Also coats of rich laces and chiffon velvet. Prices range on up to $200.00.

Table Linen Values

Most exceptional indeed, you will say, for the very beginning of the season is this special offering of table damasks. It's a portion of a big lot we bought at under value prices, and our patrons are going to reap the benefits of our good buy.

$1.25 Table Damasks $1 Yd.

Pure linen silver bleached Irish damask, full two yards wide; soft finish, heavy, fine quality in a dozen or more such popular patterns as:
Fleur de Lis borders with snow drop centers; Grecian borders with small dot and pansy centers. Large pansy borders with pin-head dot centers. Morning glory borders with fine dotted centers. It's a cloth we have never sold less than $1.25 a yard; it's truly worth it. But to introduce the new lines we have marked it for this week $1.00 a yard.

Crinkle-downs 60c Yd.

The new styled wool eiderdowns in solid colors with pretty woven stripes for robes, kimonos and other house garments. Pinks, blues, reds, grays, white, etc., yard 60c.

Onyx Hosiery

Onyx stockings are so thoroughly advertised, so well and favorably known for their style, fit and wearing qualities that it's needless for us to dwell here upon their many merits. Enough to say this is the only store in Los Angeles where they may be secured.

"Merode Underwear"

In buying Merode underwear there are three features, at least, that will not be disappointing. Fit, finish and wearing qualities. It is knit scientifically, knit to fit the form. Every garment is finished by hand, insuring the greatest degree of comfort. Only the best selected yarns are employed. Every style garment is shown in all the various grades. And best of all Merode goods cost no more than ordinary makes. Our winter lines are completed.

New and Completed Assortments in Trimmings, Laces, Gloves, Handkerchiefs, Ribbons, Neckwear, Bags, Purses, Fancy Jewelry and Notion Novelties,

Winter Tub Goods

You will be pleased with assortments here at this wash goods department; pleased with the newness of styles and colorings no less than with the little prices we have attached to them.

Cotton Eiderdowns 12½c

Of exceptional interest are these pretty eiderdowns just now at the beginning of the winter season. They are soft, fleecy and warm and heavy enough for bath and resting robes, men's smoking jackets and the like. All the pretty pastel colorings are represented with handsome floral and oriental designs. A grade that usually sells at 15c, marked at 12½c.

Tennis Flannels 15c

This popular cloth is shown in a great variety of novelty stripes, suitable for petticoats, night robes, sacques and kimonos. It has every appearance of the wool material of the same name; is just as pretty in every way, and it will wash, yard 15c.

Outing Flannels 10c

There's no end of uses these pretty striped outing flannels may be put to. They are shown this season in an entirely new line of stripes, little checks and plain colorings. Soft, warm and fleecy qualities that come in handily for night robes, petticoats, house garments and for children's wear. A grade you'll not match elsewhere under a bit a yard. While they last, yard, 10c.

News of Society—Gossip of Men and Women—Out-of-Town Society.

ments, at the home of Miss White, No. 1686 West Thirty-sixth street. Following the luncheon the guests enjoyed the football game between U.S.C. and Occidental College.

The luncheon table was most attractive in its deckings. From the chandelier to each place were stretched red satin ribbons, wound with greenery, the sorority colors being red and green. At each place the ribbons ended in fluffy bows and pretty little baskets filled with bon-bons were dainty souvenirs. A large bowl of scarlet carnations and ferns occupied the center of the shining board.

Those for whom covers were laid included, the sorority patronesses, Mmes. W. F. Skeele, Harvey Holmes, Rae G. Van Cleve and Mrs. George F. Bovard, the honorary guest, and Misses Sue Shenk, Carrie Trowbridge, Maude Hawley, Erna Reese, Mauneena McMillan, Mabel Hickman, Hazel Hearne and Louise White. Pledges present were, Misses Lulu Reeves, Faye Buck, Margaret Hough, Edith Myers and Manoona Brizzolari.

Liddells in New Home.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Liddell have moved into their fine new home at No. 2906 Harvard boulevard, where Mrs. Liddell will receive her friends on the first Wednesdays of the month.

Miss Lucille Roberts

Mr. and Mrs. Liddell left yesterday morning for San Dimas, where they have gone to visit their cousins, Mr. and Mrs. Tannon of that place.

Opening of S. M. Club.

Yesterday afternoon, Miss Ethel Graham was hotess at the initial social affair of the S. M. Club, which is now in its sixth successful season. This club started as a musical club, made up of amateur musicians, who met for recreation and music. Now it is merely a social club, though the members still devote themselves to music and at each meeting a musical programme exhibiting the versatility of the young members is given.

Miss Graham's home at No. 1331 Ingraham street was beautifully decorated, the club colors, blue and white, being carried out in great fluffy bunches of plumbago and white cosmos. Blue and white tulle in misty masses about the rooms, and low bowls were filled with the snowy cosmos, while plumbago twined over open doorways and among the folds of the lace curtains. All the girls of the club wore dainty gowns of pale blue and white, making a charming picture, harmonizing with the decorative scheme. The dainty refreshments were in blue and white also.

The musical programme presented included, "Hunting Song," (Mendelssohn,) Miss Minnie Dox; "Rosary," (Nevin,) Miss Ethel Graham; "Sisterly Scheme," (Barnard,) Anita Older; "A Mother Love," (Lynes,) Miss Alma Bradley; "Connais-tu-le-pays," (Mignon,) Miss Helen McCutcheon; Chopin Waltz, Miss Lucille Roberts; "Spring Lescome," (M. V. White,) Mrs. Walter J. Wren.

Later whist was played and handsome prizes were awarded, including a silver coffee spoon, a fancy teaspoon and a hand-painted cup and saucer.

Members who enjoyed the pleasant afternoon included, Mmes. H. L. Graham, Walter J. Wren, R. Arnold, and Misses Alice Atwell, Alma Bradley, Frances Crowder, Hortense Jones, Helen McCutcheon, Hazel Newsom, Florence Osborne, Lucille Roberts, Drevna Thomson, Florence Whelan, Frances Wartalle, Bernice Burrows, Violet McDowell, Fanny Reed, Gertrude and Edna Johnson, Jessie Probeck, Mamie Young, Grace Rockwell, Anita Older, Mimie Dox and Graham. Other guests were also invited to enjoy the afternoon.

Tour in Private Car.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Ross Clark of No. 710 West Adams street have gone in their private car to Salt Lake City for a short trip and have with them as guests Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Clark of St. James Park. They will return next Tuesday or Wednesday.

Luncheon and Bridge.

Mrs. Albert Crutcher, who has just returned from a delightful trip through the Grand Cañon, has issued invitations for a buffet luncheon and bridge party to be given next Wednesday afternoon at her home, No. 1257 West Adams street.

Mrs. Call's Affair.

Mrs. Joseph H. Call of No. 1033 Beacon street has issued invitations for a buffet luncheon to take place next Wednesday afternoon from 12 to 3 o'clock at which time she will entertain a large company of friends.

Shower for Miss Holmes.

Mrs. Burwell A. Holmes of West Twenty-third street was hostess yesterday afternoon at a shower and hearts party given in honor of her sister-in-law, Miss Mary Holmes, whose engagement to LeRoy Kingsland Daniel has been announced.

The home was decorated in pleasingly appropriate style for the afternoon. Asparagus ferns formed canopies over the rooms, in whose green depths pink tarleton and crepe paper and tiny pink hearts were enmeshed. Potted plants were arranged about the rooms and low bowls filled with spicy pink carnations here and there added to the beauty of the scene. The shower was given the first thing after the guests' arrival. A slipper covered with pink carnations and greenery was suspended from the mission bell chandelier, and when the fair honoré pulled the pink satin streamer attached, she was showered with numberless dainty gifts. Another jolly feature of the afternoon was the Indian wigwam which stood in the drawing-room and in whose depths a brown-faced gypsy was hid. She told the future of the bride-elect and later the fortunes of all the guests. Hearts was the game of the afternoon and scores were kept on dainty heart-shaped cards adorned with suggestive scenes. The refreshments were carried out in pink and green to match the decorations.

Mrs. Holmes was assisted in entertaining her guests by Mmes. Burwell A. Holmes, Sr., Hugh J. Crawford, Grace Winder and Misses Blanche Booty and Hazel Preston.

Guests included: Misses Elizabeth Page, Lulu Page, Lena Clark, Ethel Stockard, Louise Gifford, Eleanor Barr, Alice Barr, Helen Shields, Elcan Pinkham, Jessie Lotspeich, Lydia Kellam, Lida Wallace, Kitty Daniels, Leila Daniels, Fanny Kerns, Alma Kerns, Elxa Kerns, Emmie Luentzel, Elizabeth Lindenfeldt, Grace Van Alstyne, Clara Wallis, Lillian Brown, Ida Underhill, Juanita Lane, Underhill, Grace Pirtle, Hortense Jones, Alibell Hotchkiss, Elise Hotchkiss, Julia Hutchinson, Alibel Hutchinson, Frances Wartelle, Minnie Gifford, Henrietta Gifford, Lang, Kate Powell, Pauline Howard, Alice Atwell, Ada Moore, Jennie Robinson, Martha Robinson, Augusta Cloes, Mignonette Hutton, Elizabeth Hutton, Carolyn Connell and Frieda Sanderson, and Mmes. Percival G. Winnett, Elwood DeGarmor, Marion Paxton, Fred Cope, Henry Clay Walker, Robert K. Wilson, Rose Nettleton, Lucille Daniels Gay, Edgar Stanley, Raymond Chase, W. O. Morton and Harry McKenna.

Miss Helen McCutcheon

Miss Ethel Graham, the hostess
Mrs Walter J Wren

Some members of the S. M. Club, which is beginning it's sixth season, and Miss Graham, who was hostess at the opening function given for the club yesterday afternoon.

Miss Smith in Town.

Miss Emma A. Smith, lately of Philadelphia, is here and is at Hotel Fleur de Lis, No. 332 South Grand avenue. She will be at home to her friends on the first and third Fridays after 3 o'clock. Miss Smith is a sister of Wayland Smith, secretary of the Sequoia League, and has already made many friends here. She was hostess recently at a delightful dancing party given at the home of J. A. Gates at Eagle Rock. The affair took place in the pretty little hall which adjoins the Gates home, and where many of the pleasant affairs in Eagle Rock Valley have been given.

DR. LURA J. BROWN, whose engagement to Dr. J. Harvey Hall was announced at a reception given last evening by Dr. Kate Wilde to members of Alpha Epsilon Iota sorority.

Nashville Visitors.

Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Ubank and Miss Virginia May Campbell are here in Los Angeles and are guests of Ross Campbell at No. 748 South Union avenue. Miss Campbell and Mrs. Ubank are sisters of Ross Campbell.

Robinson-Donnatin Marriage.

At the home of the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Donnatin, of No. 1301 Buena Vista street, Miss Marion Robinson and Charles F. Donnatin were married, Rev. Walton Hall Doggett officiating. Mrs. Sam Green was matron of honor, and Mrs. Frank Donnatin played the wedding music. Paul Robinson stood with the groom. The bride wore a gown of white embroidered mousseline de soie and carried a shower of white flowers. After a brief wedding tour the couple will go to Indio, Cal., to make their home.

Miss Hill's Musicale.

Miss Louise Nixon Hill will give a recital on the evening of November 1 at Gamut Club Hall. The following named prominent women are acting as patronesses: Mmes. Hancock Banning, William Bayly, J. D. Bethune, Frederick W. Braun, Richard Bundrem, Robert J. Burdette, Josephine Butler, Joseph A. Call, C. C. Carpenter, George A. Caswell, J. Ross Clark, E. P. Clark, J. E. Cowles, A. L. Connell, Mrs. William May Garland and Mrs. Jack Foster. Mrs. Connell and Mrs. Garland will go directly to New York and expect to remain until Thanksgiving and Mrs. Foster will visit in Chicago and spend some time in her old home in Virginia. Mrs. Foster expects to be gone about two months.

Mrs. Lungren Departs.

Mrs. J. B. Lippincott of No. 1256 West Adams street, has had as her guest for the past few weeks, Mrs. Fernand Lungren of Santa Barbara. Mrs. Lungren left the end of this week for her home. She and Mrs. Lippincott enjoyed many pleasant little parties given in their honor during Mrs. Lungren's stay. Mr. Lungren is in Arizona on a sketching tour with friends.

Physician to Claim Bride.

There is mourning among a large corps of surgeons who frequent the California Hospital, because Cupid has claimed one of the best nurses in that institution, Miss Jessie F. Lawton. She has been connected with the hospital for ten years, and has been head nurse in the surgery department for half that time. One doctor is supremely happy, however, the lucky one, Dr. Raymond G. Taylor. While administering ether in a surgery case, he himself succumbed to the charms of the pretty head nurse.

The marriage, which will be a quiet home affair, with only members of the families present, will take place on the evening of November 7, at the home of the bride's brother, Dr. Lawton at Long Beach. There will be a short wedding trip and Dr. and Mrs. Taylor will be at home to their friends after December 1 at No. 1344 Toberman street.

Miss Lawton, by her long and capable service in the hospital, has won the warm friendship and hearty admiration of the surgeons, and there have been several affairs given indicating the appreciation of these professional friends, one of which was a china shower recently by Dr. and Mrs. W. W. Beckett at their handsome Harvard boulevard residence.

Visits Solanos.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Solano of corner Figueroa street and Twenty-third, have as their guest, Mrs. Solano's brother-in-law, Frederick H. Stevens, of Buffalo, New York, who will remain with them until after the holidays. Mr. Stevens came out here for a rest and to enjoy the duck season, for he is an enthusiastic huntsman.

Celebrate Birthdays.

At the beautiful residence of A. E. Merrill, Franklin and Olive streets, Hollywood, a jolly birthday dinner and musicale was given on Thursday evening, celebrating the sixtieth birthday of the host's wife, Mrs. Merrill, the sixtieth birthday of Calvin E. Allyn and the forty-sixth natal day of Mrs. Carrie Miner.

The home was aglow with roses and other bright blossoms and on the birthday table were pink carnations and ferns, while pink-shaded candles and pink iced birthday cakes, holding many tiny tapers, completed the pretty ensemble. Later in the evening Mrs. Abigal Crane gave interesting readings, and Mrs. Gertrude Allyn Long was heard in some charming soprano solos. Mrs. Nellie Kimball, lately of Boston, and a member of the Woman's Orchestra here, was heard in some excellent violin music. C. P. Donnell and Miss Merrill gave much pleasure with their vocal numbers.

Besides those already mentioned, covers were laid for Mr. and Mrs. Postle of South Pasadena, Mr. and Mrs. Charles P. Donnell, Mrs. Kimball, Mrs. Miner, Mrs. Long, Mr. and Mrs. Calvin E. Allyn, Melvin Trott, Pauline Long, Ruth Postle and Joyce Donnell.

Mrs. Greeley of San Francisco.

Mrs. J. J. Greeley, a charming San Francisco woman, is here visiting Mrs. Clarence Strohm of No. 1341 Valencia street. Mrs. Greeley was guest at a dinner party this week and at several theater parties. She is to remain several weeks, and this week her hostess is planning to give an affair for Mrs. Greeley. One evening this week Miss Anna Strohm entertained with a card party for Mrs. Greeley, entertaining about twenty-five guests.

Marxmillers in New Home.

Dr. and Mrs. H. G. Marxmiller, who have recently returned from Europe, have moved into their new home, No. 2744 Vermont avenue, where Mrs. Marxmiller and her mother, Mrs. Tinker, will be at home to their friends on Mondays.

Romance of Two Physicians.

In the announcement of the engagement of Dr. Lura J. Brown and Dr. Harvey J. Hall, a pretty little romance lies hidden. The love affair of the young physicians had its inception some time ago, while the two worked together in the dusty laboratories and studied all the organs of the body, including the heart, in the Medical College of U.S.C.

Dr. Brown is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. H. Brown, corner of Paloma avenue and Twenty-ninth street, and is a graduate of Occidental College, and of the Medical College of U.S.C. She is a member of the Kappa Phi sorority and of the Alpha Epsilon Iota sorority.

Dr. Hall is a son of Joseph Hall, D.D., of Vancouver, B. C., and a graduate of Columbia Methodist College, New Westminster, B. C., and of the local Medical College. He is a member of the Phi Rho Sigma and Theta Nu Epsilon fraternities, and for a year has been resident physician of the Los Angeles County Hospital.

The announcement of the engagement was made last evening at a prettily-appointed reception given by Dr. Kate Wilde at her residence on Crocker street. The wedding is to take place on December 11. Many pleasant affairs are planned for the bride-elect.

The reception was given for members of the Kappa Chapter of Alpha Epsilon Iota sorority, and those present were: Dr. Elizabeth A. Follansbee, Dr. Rose T. Bullard, Dr. Lulu Ellis, Dr. Nannie Dunsmoore, Dr. Kate Wilde, Dr. Ethel Leonard, Dr. Marietta Bewley, Dr. Caroline McQuiston, Dr. Eleanor Seymour, Dr. Caroline Rankin, Dr. Nellie S. Hayes, Dr. Edith J. Claypole, Dr. Brown, Dr. Myrtle Wellcome, Dr. Isabel Crowell, Dr. Lillian Bro son, Dr. Margaret Morris, Dr. Flo Chambers, Dr. Eva Matthews and Dr. Horseman.

South Gate's Dance.

The members of South Gate Chapter O.E.S., are planning to entertain with a large dancing party at Kramer Hall on the evening of November The ladies of South Gate Chapter have given many card parties and other social affairs during the past year, but this is the first large dance which they have given recently.

Mrs. Werth Entertains.

Rev. and Mrs. F. A. Werth entertained most delightfully on Friday afternoon with a musical afternoon in honor of the members of the Southern California German Methodist Ministers' Union and their wives. The spacious new home of Rev. and Mrs. Werth, No. 4938 Echo street, was decorated with red roses and red ribbons in the den and in the large music room Cecil Bruner roses and Saffrano were utilized with graceful effect.

CALIFORNIA

ANNIVERSARY OCCASION

Tomorrow is our first birthday. To fittingly mark the founding of this business, we have set aside the week beginning as "open house" time, when we would be pleased to welcome our public to show what we have and what we do.

Monday, October Fifteenth

Lovers of the beautiful in furniture and all interested in art and harmony in home furnishings will take special delight in the exhibit.

There is courage, confidence and conviction behind the effort—the same spirit which established the enterprise a year ago, and which, during the year, has given it rank among the first institutions of the city.

No opportunity has been spared to secure for your consideration the newest and worthiest furniture, carpets, draperies and wall decorations.

Our aim has been to assemble an assortment that shall suit your needs and that each piece shall satisfactorily serve you.

We hope you can find time during the week to enjoy the display. It would give us great pleasure to conduct you through the establishment.

$6.50 Blankets $5.00

Blanket-buying time. Nothing to be gained by waiting—instead, waiting is likely to mean the loss of such buying-chances as we offer tomorrow.

$6.50 BLANKETS AT $5—Eleven-quarter blankets of heavy and soft white wool, with wide silk binding.

Eleven-quarter blankets, of soft, fluffy, white wool; blue and pink borders. $5 a pair.

Twelve-quarter blankets, of soft, thick, white wool, with wide silk binding; blue or pink borders. $5 a pair.

Eleven-quarter blankets, of extra heavy, white wool, with wide silk binding. $5 a pair.

9x12 Ft. Wilton Rugs

No other rug made that is held closer to its established price than the 9x12 foot "Bigelow" or "Hartford" Wilton. So far as we know, there is no other store in the West selling them under $40.00. Within the past 18 months we have sold over a thousand at $29.75, but we haven't the faintest hope of getting any more to sell at that price, after this lot is gone. 8 ft. 3 by 10 ft. 6 in. $27.50.

5-in Taffeta Ribbons 25c

Here's an uncommonly low price on some of the "bread-and-butter staples" of the ribbon business—25c a yard for the finest quality satin taffeta and plain taffeta ribbons, in 5-inch widths.

Black and white, as well as the oftenest-asked-for colors.

Whittier.

AT THE Friends Church on Wednesday morning, a large company of guests witnessed the wedding of Miss Mary Rees, daughter of Mrs. Martha Rees of this city, to Alva Trueblood of Pittsburgh, Pa. The church was beautifully decorated with palms and vines, and with great masses of yellow golden-rod. The bridal procession included Messrs. Little, Wade,, Osborn and Jay, ushers; Mrs. H. A. Williams, the matron of honor; Ruth Oller, flower girl, and the bride, leaning on the arm of her brother, Orris Rees.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Andrew Mitchell of Long Beach. Preceding the ceremony a musical programme was given, a quartette composed of Miss Anna Tomlinson, Mr. and Mrs. Allen U. Tomlinson and Dr. Jessup rendering "Tis Thy Wedding Morning" from Cowan's "Rose Maiden;" and Miss Denley played the "Bridal Chorus" and the "Wedding March" from "Lohengrin."

After a few days spent at Alpine Tavern Mr. and Mrs. Trueblood will go East, and will make their home in Pittsburgh, Pa.

THE Rev. and Mrs. F. Seaman were tendered an enthusiastic reception at the Methodist Episcopal Church Thursday evening. The auditorium was thronged with people, who had come regardless of church affiliations, to welcome the popular and eloquent minister and his accomplished wife.

The address of welcome were delivered by Rev. W. L. Miller in behalf of the Methodist Church, and by the Rev. Robert Grieve, pastor of the Christian Church. Rev. F. Seaman, in response, expressed his gratitude for the spontaneous and cordial welcome accorded to him and his wife. An appropriate programme had been prepared for the occasion, which was most satisfactorily rendered.

—o—

Pasadena.

AN AUSPICIOUS occasion of the week was the first meeting of the season of the members of the Shakespeare Club. Two hundred members were present to enjoy the programme and the club tea which followed. It was "President's Day," and in honor of the occasion, the stage was profusely decorated. Across the front was a hedge of pink ivy geraniums and ferns and at either side were tall vases filled with delicate pink roses, dusty miller and trailing ferns.

Mrs. Henry H. Harris was chairman of the day and introduced the speakers. The first number was a piano solo by Miss Smythe. Mrs. Mary M. Coman, the new president, was then introduced. Before beginning her address, she asked the former presidents who were in the room to come to the platform. There were two present, Mrs. Helen Elliott Bandini, who was the third president of the club and is now the first vice-president, and Mrs. William Douglas Turner, the retiring president, who has served the club for two years. Mrs. Coman's address was earnest and forceful and held the attention of her hearers to the last word. She gave as the club motto for the year, the word "Sincerity." The two ex-presidents then spoke briefly. There are to be three sections this year, the literary, the music and the art section. The literature section is a new one and will be in charge of Miss Margaret Stratten, former dean of Wellesley College. Two new committees were formed, the courtesy committee, composed of Miss Mary Abbott, Mrs. Robert Meredith and Miss Mary Braddock, and a dramatic committee, composed of Mrs. William Douglas Turner, Mrs. A. G. Merriam and Mrs. Earl Barnhart. Another new office formed, that of club advertiser, will be filled by Miss Anita Smith. It was decided to secure Mrs. Maud Ballington Booth for a lecture in the last week of January. At the close of the meeting, tea was served and a social hour followed. Presiding at the tea tables were, Miss Mary Abbott, Mrs. Frank Jones, Mrs. Henry T. Staats and Mrs. Hibben.

Tuesday evening Mr. and Mrs. George H. Shimmin, of No. 471 Los Robles Place, entertained in honor of their house guests, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Barker Ray, of Canton, O., who are here on their honeymoon. Hearts was the appropriate game of the evening, in compliment to the bride and groom. At the close of a spirited game, Mrs. George A. Clark was found to be the winner of the first prize, a sterling silver brooch in the form of two hearts intertwined. Byron Rowray won the first prize for men, a heart-shaped silver key ring. The guest of honor, Mrs. Ray, was consoled with a heart-shaped box of bon-bons. After the games, ices and cakes were served and later, a number of the guests contributed some excellent music. Those present were Messrs. and Mmes. Thomas Barker Ray, Fred T. Huggins, Arthur Price, E. M. Hollander, George A. Clark, Ray Scoville, Paul E. Gano, Frank Scoville, Byron Rowray, W. F. Ransom, N. M. Hill, Mrs. S. D. Wilcox, Miss Helene Fitzgerald, and Harry A. Fitzgerald, Jr.

The engagement was announced Thursday, of Miss Elinor Merrill, daughter of Prof. and Mrs. A. W. Merrill of Berkeley, to Volney H. Craig of this city. No date has been set for the wedding as Miss Merrill is still in her junior year at the University of California, where her father, holds the chair of Latin. Miss Merrill will spend the holidays here as the guest of Miss Marion Craig, who is her schoolmate.

Mrs. M. S. Hill, of No. 319 Madeline Drive, is entertaining a merry house party this week. The guests are Mrs. Nutting, Mrs. Woodroffe, Mrs. Dana, Mrs. Thompkins, Miss Helen Lewis and Messrs. Henry Justice, George Wilson, Frederick Justice and George Stamm.

Mrs. William St. John Ranney, of North Euclid avenue, has gone to Santa Barbara for a two weeks' visit.

Tuesday evening Miss Aileen Lee was the hostess at a charming dinner party. She entertained the members of the bridal party who will assist at the forthcoming wedding of Miss Zela Gipson and Asa Parlee.

Buller's Career.

Sir Walter Buller, the distinguished New Zealand scientist whose death is just recorded, had an unusually versatile career. He began by editing a paper in the Maori language, at 24 he was a resident magistrate, at 27 a judge of the native lands court and shortly afterward he was out fighting the rebel Maoris. He was mentioned in dispatches for gallantry in carrying news by night through forty miles of the enemy's country. At 33 he went to London as secretary of the New Zealand agency and entered as a student at the Inner temple. He was one of the few instances of a man being made a judge before he became a barrister.

Mexican Ways Seem Queer.

Mexico is a land of lace and lice and love, of flowers and fights and fleas, of babies and bullfights; a land, according to Modern Mexico, where pillow slips are open at both ends; where passengers get off the front end of street cars; where matches are held up instead of down; where door keys, often six inches in length, invariably are turned backward and fit in keyholes turned upside down; where the tradespeople tell you the price of a thing and in the same breath ask what you will give for it; where the lowest class people have a passionate love for music and flowers, and will stand for hours in front of pictures displayed in windows; where fleas have entrée in the most polite conversation; where outside doors are locked at 10 o'clock, and guarded strictly by a porter who has to be awakened with a tip before he lets any one enter; where the weather forgets to change day after day, and people sleep under the same bed cover the year round.

Patti's Fan.

Among all the myriad treasures owned by Adelina Patti, the great prima donna, none is more valued than a fan on which are autograph sentiments written by sovereigns of Europe. Among the inscriptions are these: By the Czar—Nothing is so calming as your voice. The German Emperor—To the nightingale of all time. Queen Christina—To a Spaniard from a Queen who is proud to count her among her subjects. Queen Victoria—If King Lear was right in saying that a sweet voice is a precious gift in a woman, you, my dear Adelina, are of all women the richest.

IN THE BIG INDUSTRIES.

Helium from Natural Gas.

Scientists of the University of Kansas are finding helium in the natural gas of that State. That the impulsive westerners have observed due scientific precaution in their analysis some of the eastern sages are inclined to doubt; but there are many suggestive possibilities in the Kansas discovery. It may be that the light and power in natural gas and in the parent petroleum liquids merely are so much imprisoned sunlight, waiting to be released—for helium literally is sun stuff. The imagination even could conceive that all explosives and all illuminants are from helium—taking the oneness of the universe for granted, and acknowledging the sun as the source of all energy. At any rate, the authorities at Lawrence say they find that helium is present in varying quantities in all the natural gas of the State, the outflow of the wells in the Dexter fields yielding as much as 2 per cent. of the precious stuff. Spectroscopic work now is being continued at the university, with the announced belief that helium in practically limitless quantities may be obtained. The discovery of helium metal in Chicago excavations, followed by finding it in Kansas gas, and similar announcements from other parts of the world, renders it nearly certain that helium will not be considered so rare in the future. Whether or not the world will be benefited greatly is another question.

A New Spring Wheat.

Secretary Wilson of the Department of Agriculture is pleased with the fact that 50,000,000 bushels of Durum wheat will be thrashed in this county this year. He was on his way to the Cabinet meeting today when he told the newspaper men that his department introduced Durum wheat in the United States five years ago. This is known as macaroni wheat, because of its value in the manufacture of macaroni. It is a hard spring wheat and cannot be raised in the winter. The department now proposes, the Secretary stated, to try hybridizing the wheat with the best winter wheat of this country.

According to the Department of Agriculture, the macaroni business of the United States should increase in importance from now on, and the importation of macaroni from Italy largely decrease. The Durum wheat is the class from which the finest Italian macaroni is made.

Cigar Box Prices Go Up.

The cigar manufacturers are feeling the effect of the Cuban war in the advance of $1.00 a hundred in the price of cedar cigar boxes. The reason given is the scarcity of lumber and especially of cedar, the great bulk of which is imported from Cuba. The price of cigar boxes is regulated by a ring of nine cigar box manufacturers in Chicago which practically controls the industry throughout the country with the exception of the boxes used by the tobacco trust, which are manufactured in the private factories of the trust, and one or two large independent manufacturers of New York who also make their own boxes. The steady decrease in the supply of the world's lumber and especially of cedar has caused a corresponding rise in the price of cigar boxes for the last three or four years, the whole burden of which has fallen on the cigar manufacturers, as the retailers have insisted that their profits were far too small to permit of any increase in the price of the goods.

Unfilled Steel Orders.

At the meeting of the Finance Committee of the United States Steel Corporation a few days since, figures were presented showing the volume of business on hand. The order books now show 7,600,000 tons of unfilled business, the largest amount in the history of the company. It is said that this insures continued activity and high pressure at the plants until August of next year.

The United States Steel Corporation had 96¾ per cent. of its blast furnaces in operation on October 1, the four idle furnaces being of less than the average capacity. October is counted on to make a new record in the corporation's pig iron production. Significant of the judgment of the leading interest as to the duration of prosperity is the announcement that work will be started soon on three or four new blast furnaces in the Pittsburgh district, probably at the Duquesne and Donora plants. Thirty 50-ton open hearth furnaces will be built, chiefly in the Pittsburgh district, and probably in part in the Cleveland district. The situation in finished materials is best shown in an average of 68,000 tons a day booked by the steel corporation in September, while shipments averaged 32,000 tons a day. The record of new business is without a parallel in all lines contributed.

Bleaching Flour by Electricity.

A form of apparatus for whitening flour by means of products of the electrical discharge is described in Electro-Chemical and Metallurgical Industry. A current of air is passed through a chamber containing a long, high voltage, continuous current arc, and this air is then used for treating flour in an agitator. The result of this treatment is that the flour emerges from the agitator with a considerably whiter color.

With the largest size about thirty sacks of flour can be treated per hour. A double acting pump draws air through a chamber in which there is an electric arc. As the air flows through, the upper electrode rises, gradually lengthening the arc until it goes out, when the operation is repeated. The bleaching action is thus explained:

As to the rationale of this process it is to be remarked that in this case arc discharges are employed so that probably compounds of nitrogen and oxygen are formed in the air and the bleaching effect is due to these compounds. Essentially different from this method are those processes (proposed by others) in which ozone is used as bleaching agent and is produced by the silent electric discharge through air. S. Letham claims that the best results are obtained by treating the air successively first by the silent electric discharge and then by an arc discharge. Methods of this kind for whitening flour are reported to be in commercial use to some extent in the Middle West and South, but no exact information is available.

THE RAMBLER.

The Waning Year.

The year was bowed with passionate grief;
Alas! she felt that she was old;
Slow pulsed the veins of every leaf;
Her limbs were growing thin and cold.

She donned a garment rich and rare,
Of crimson edged with cloth-of-gold,
And twined red rubies in her hair—
And yet, her happy hours were told.

The recreant zephyrs wooed her oft
When she was fair to see and young;
Ah! sweet their whispered vows, and soft
And tender were the songs they sung.

And now!—in her supreme despair
She flung her royal robes away
And tore the jewels from her hair,
And knelt, a penitent, to pray.

She rose within the misty of morn
In stole of white, with humble grace
Of all her radiant beauty shorn—
A nun with calm and chastened face!

The Power of Suggestion.

Richard Mansfield has genially assured us, in a lecture delivered before the Friday Morning Club and its many friends a few months ago, that we are all actors, and that the stage actor is the most natural man in the world when he parades the streets in propria persona and mingles with the common crowd.

Mr. Mansfield, it is safe to assume, never had the pleasure of meeting Harold De Vere, though Mr. De Vere can be seen, on any sunny afternoon, in the Rialto of Los Angeles. He wears, always, a black frock coat long in the tails but no longer new. He also wears, and always, a faded frazzled crimson carnation that must have been pinned in place twenty years ago. He walks with a stride and an air, and twirls his stick with careful carelessness, as if, however broken and shattered he may look and feel, the odor of buskins clings to him still.

Let me add, Mr. De Vere is an actor of the old school and never, no, never, forgets for one single moment that it is his business in life to act.

The other day Harold De Vere strode moodily up to a fellow thespian on the corner of Main and Third streets. He looked worn and haggard and knew it with an inward satisfaction.

"What's the matter?" his friend began sympathetically. "You seem upset about something."

"My deah fellah," said Harold De Vere, striking an attitude and playing upon his deepest chest tones, "I am the haunted victim of insomnia. I cawn't sleep at all, don't you know. My Gawd! if this keeps on much longer I shall go mad—ma-a-d!"

The tragic manner in which he grabbed his forehead with his outspread fingers would have evoked thunders of appreciative applause from any gallery. His friend, however, only grinned. "Oh," said he easily, "I wouldn't take it so hard if I were you. Sleep will come—if you give it time. You won't go mad."

A week later they chanced to meet again. Harold De Vere was radiant. "My deah fellah," he cried, with stage joyousness, "do you remembah my telling you that Mohpheus had forsaken me?"

"Sure! Has the old cuss come back?"

"Don't jest on a serious mattah, deah boy. Yes! yes! I have found the exact environment for reposeful slumber. It is a hotel called the Rip Van Winkle. As soon as I saw the name ovah the door, this thought came to me like a flash of inspiration: 'The very place! The Rip Van Winkle—how delicately that suggests slumber!'

"I engaged a room at once, and as soon as my head touched the pillow I fell into a profound and refreshing sleep. Suggestion, don't you know—all suggestion, my deah boy. I have remained at the Rip Van Winkle ever since. I shall never leave it."

SCIENCE NOTES.

Treatment of Bullet Wounds.

A most interesting and far-reaching experiment on a large scale was performed at the battlefield of Mukden. Several sanitary officers with good surgical training being present, out of 100 soldiers wounded in the abdomen, fifty were operated upon by laparotomy, the fifty others left alone, the only treatment consisting in absolute rest and in keeping the external wound opening clean. Of the fifty soldiers operated upon forty died, of the non-operated forty survived. This striking result indicated the manner of treatment of abdominal wounds throughout the whole war. Laparotomy on or in the rear of the battlefield was afterward hardly ever performed, but strict care was taken that all soldiers wounded in the abdomen had absolute rest for the first three days.—[Post Graduate.

Energy in a Lightning Flash.

A flash of lighting one kilometer long and lasting one-thousandth of a second represents energy calculated by Otto Nairz to be worth $700 at the price for electric lighting in Berlin. This energy corresponds to the industrial production of electricity in all Germany during forty seconds, or to that of Berlin during two and a quarter minutes; and it would operate the Berlin elevated and subway an hour and a half at its busiest time, or run an express car at 125 miles an hour for three hours' trip from Berlin to Frankfort, or light a thirty-two-candle-power lamp for eight years. Yet this is only an average flash, of which as many as 1000 have been counted in a single thunderstorm.

Scientists at Work in Germany.

The industrial prospects of a nation are regarded by Prof. Lippmann, late president of the French Association for the Advancement of Science, as largely dependent upon its scientific research and the employment of the mathematician, the chemist and the physicist. Germany is setting the world's pace, and Austria and Switzerland are adopting the same methods. France, on the other hand, is lagging behind. The German way is exemplified by the Zeiss works at Jena, which employ fourteen doctors of science, and one large German aniline factory has 145 scientific chemists and 175 technologists. As these companies pay dividends of 20 to 30 per cent., there is evidently sound method in their expensive madness.

Passing of Cochineal Farming.

In cochineal farming Peru boasts of a curious but rapidly-passing survival of prehistoric industry. The cochineal, first recognized as an insect by the microscope of Leuwenhoek in 1703, thrives in tropical America, where it seems to have been cultivated for centuries before Cortes conquered Mexico. Since attracting the attention of King Ferdinand in 1528 it has been famed as one of the finest dyes. It is still unequaled for brilliant and permanent coloring, but it is being displaced by coal-tar products, and the demand has been dwindling in recent years, though the Peruvian yield yet amounts to several million dollars annually. The insect is exceedingly minute, the living female—twice as large as the male—weighing only one-tenth of a grain, while 70,000 of the dried bodies are required to make a pound. The females outnumber the males 200 to 1, the latter being quite useless for coloring. The insects appear rather mysteriously after the rainy portion of the year, and soon cover the nopal plant, a kind of cactus, living only a few days at most and possibly only a few hours, but multiplying so rapidly that three crops are gathered in the dry season of seven months.

Horses and Flies.

If motor vehicles of any and all sorts shall eventually drive horses entirely from our streets, two incidental consequences will follow of immense importance to city residents. The streets will be much cleaner. The horse is the chief offender in making our streets uncleanly. Without horses the roadway would be at least as clean as the sidewalk. In Hongkong, where horses are unknown, the streets are said to be as clean as the path of a well-kept pleasure ground. The absence of the horse makes it possible to maintain a high standard of cleanliness on the highway without effort. If house sweepings, ashes and droppings from carts are kept from defiling these horseless streets there is no reason why they should not remain immaculate.

A more important gain than the cleanliness that horseless conditions create is the suppression of the house fly, as its favorite and prolific breeding place, horse manure, is banished with the horse. Venice, which is necessarily horseless, is almost altogether flyless. Flies are an annoyance, but they are much worse than that. They are the purveyors and disseminators of disease to an extent that was never appreciated until quite recently—[Philadelphia Press.

Effect of Drugs.

There is no drug that can be taken into the system regularly without working harm. Every drug has a secondary effect as well as a primary one. The immediate effect is all a man thinks of when he takes it; but the secondary effect follows just as inevitably. It is of an entirely different nature and it is always bad. For example, the secondary effect of most of the coal-tar headache powders is to reduce the number of red corpuscles in the blood, whose business it is to carry oxygen to all parts of the body. —[World's Work.

THE INNOCENT BYSTANDER.

Pa Says so Himself.

My pa he laughs about the trusts,
An' says it wouldn't be no trick
To choke each one until it busts—
An' he could do it, just as slick!
Why, my pa knows the very way
To make the poor folks all get rich
In something like a half a day
An' run the rich folks to the ditch—
He says so!

My pa he says the Russian Czar
Don't understand what czarring is.
He'd give those anarchists a jar
If Russia's golden throne was his.
Why, if the Czar would like to know
The way to make folks mind the law
There ain't nobody else could show
Just how to do it, like my pa.
He says so!

Last night he talked to ma and me
About the way they ought to do
To set poor little Cuby free—
'Twas midnight, 'most, when he got through.
And when ma spoke of Mister Taft,
Why, pa, he leaned back with a shout
An' laughed an' laughed an' laughed an' laughed!
My pa could help poor Cuby out.
He says so!

If pa had been George Washington
The revolution 'd not have been
Half started till he'd had it done—
He knew the quickest way to win.
An' Lincoln, too—if people knew
What my pa knows of his mistakes!
Why, pa 'd a'rushed that whole war through
In thirty days, without no breaks.
He says so!

My pa he could have built the ark
When Noah did, an' twice as good—
He 'd started at high-water mark
An' let the flood float him his wood.
Why, sometimes, when he tells us what
The world should do, we're awful glad
The world don't know what sense he's got.
The world ought to be bossed by dad.
He says so!

An Auto Ad.

We point with pride to the fact that our 1906 model has broken all records by a wide margin. Mr. Schorchan Hittem, with one of our regular road machines, has paid in fines for fast driving the sum of $1265 in the past three months. This is $465 better than the record of any other machine. Mr. Schorchan Hittem's itemized expense account for surgical fees and hospital bills of victims will be sent on application. It demonstrates conclusively that our machine maintains a bigger and better average than any other in the world today.

Business Dishonesty.

"How's business?" we ask of our friend who makes genuine maple syrup from stewed corn cobs.

"It would be good," he frowns, "if it were not for the unmitigated rascals one has to deal with."

"Somebody beaten you out of his bill?"

"Worse than that. A conscientious scoundrel sold me a load of corn cobs and got his money for them—and now I find that half of them are imitation corn cobs!"—[Wilbur D. Nesbit.

The Easier Part.

There is a gate which bars my way;
Beyond it lies a garden fair;
I pause before it day by day,
And long to pluck the flowers there.

With envy in my heart I see
Good men and sinners hurry past
The portal that is barred to me
And doubtless shall be till the last.

A thousand pathways there converge,
And all who pass the gate are glad,
But never may a man emerge
Who is not sorely bowed and sad.

Among the many paths are chance,
And faith and hope and worthiness;
The gate that bars is circumstance,
The flowery garden is success.

Oh, oft I think my lot is hard,
Since I must stand outside the pale;
But better to be always barred
Than to have won and then to fail.

Song.

A bouquet for my love who loves me not!
What shall I gather? Rich dark roses set
In thorns, ah me, like love; or lilies fair,
Tall bloodless lily blooms; or violets wet
And sweet with night's dews; or carnations rare?
And yet—
White poppy buds are best, that teach one to forget.
A song for my dear love who loves me not!
Sing, blackbird, thrilling in yon leafy brake;
Coo, cushat, coo; chant, thrush, thy sweetest strain;
Thou nightingale with passionate throbbings wake
Pain in her heart, who heeds not of my pain,
And make
Her pity him who dies for her sweet sake.

Waning.

The summer wanes on hill and dale,
And all the fields are turning pale,
While swift across the autumn sky
Wild birds in arrows wheel and fly.

The plover and the timid quail
Are piping in the russet vale
Where silken thistles float and sail
In airy, fairy splendor by—
The summer wanes.

Afar we hear the steady flail
That tells the harvest's joyous tale,
Of wheat, of barley and of rye
For wintry weather, by and by,
Our comfort when harsh winds assail—
The summer wanes.

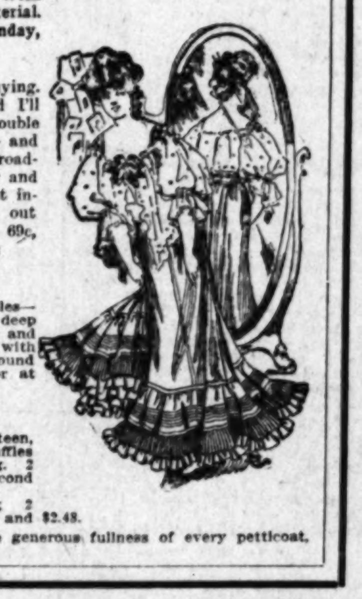
Two styles to choose from at this price. With deep accordion flounces and plenty of material. All lengths. Black only. Second floor, Monday, 45c.

HOW DID IT HAPPEN?

The magnetism of Broadway quantity buying. "The price is $——. Buy —— many and I'll make it $——," said the petticoat man. "Double the quantity, bring the price down to $—— and I'll close," our buyer shot back. It's the Broadway way. The number surprised the dealer and he's used to big turns. No matter—the first installment of the petticoats is here—and out Monday at Broadway prices. First 45c, next 69c, and so on. Remember, second floor. Hints:



Petticoats 69c

Of good material. Black with white stripes on 10 inch flounce. Accordeon pleated flounce. 69c—an unusual value, second floor.

Petticoats 75c

Made of very fine sateen with 12-inch flounce, trimmed with 2 ruffles—edged with hemstitching — good 98c values; second floor, at 75c.

Petticoats 98c

Seven distinct styles—of fine sateen, with deep full flounces, ruffling and shirring. Others with stitched straps around flounce. Second floor at 98c.

Petticoats at $1.25

Made of splendid sateen, 18 inch flounce. Ruffles of accordeon pleating. 2 other styles; second floor.

4 styles at $1.48; 2 styles each at $1.98 and $2.48.

NOTE—The quality of material used, and the generous fullness of every petticoat, we emphasize especially.

White India Linon

20c Value 10c Yd.

HURRY! our department manager says. A limited quantity—and so generally wanted that what we have will melt away like snow under the noonday sun. Our regular 20c white India linon, 10c yard. Monday, third floor, long as it lasts.

We're aiming at one of the biggest selling days we've ever had—with some of the biggest values we ever offered.

The third floor will be a center of activity. Note these other values:

10c Organdie at 2c

Just two colors, green and yellow. 30 inches wide. There will be quick selling of every piece, Monday, third floor, at 2c yard.

15c Figured Lawn 5c

Fine figured swisses and lawns. Light and dark grounds, also plain colors in checks and stripes. 15c value, third floor, Monday, 5c yard.

25c Mousseline de Soie 8⅓c

Half silk—splendid evening shades, softly pretty for evening wear. Made to be good value at 25c. Monday, third floor, 8 1-3c yard.

Black and White Prints 4c

St. Regis fast black calicoes—striped and figured in white. Staple at 6 1-4c. Monday, third floor, 4c yard, while they last.

12½c Printed Challies 9c

Just one case—butterfly, Persian and floral designs—to make prettiest kimonos. Monday, third floor, 9c yard, while they last.

12½c Figured Sateen 8c

500 yards—fancy figured sateens. Third floor, Monday, 8c yard.

12½c Dress Ginghams 7c

In pink only. A limited quantity Monday. Third floor, 7c yard.

15c Half Wool Albatross 9c

A 15c value—pretty shades. Monday, third floor, 9c yard.

Embroidered Robes at Half

Think of it—embroidered robes, enough in them for a whole dress to sell Monday at exactly half price; aisle 2. They're handsomely embroidered in white, well worked figures and designs. This means $30.00 robes will sell for $15.00. And others in the same proportion. It's an opportunity from the embroidery department; aisle 2.

19c Veiling 10c Yard

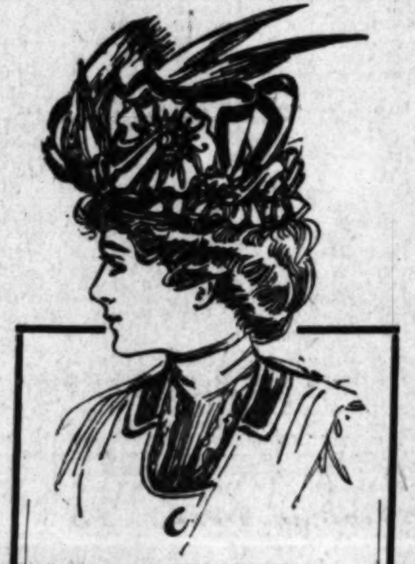
Chiffon veiling in a big assortment of colors and combinations. It's a firm weave, 18 inches wide, some with wide hem and colored stitching. They're filling the popular want now for drapes and automobile veils. It's a similar lot of those veilings that created a stir a few weeks ago. Regular 19c values Monday, aisle 1, 10c.

30c Ribbon 25c

It's an all silk soft finished taffeta ribbon in black only. 1 1-4 inches wide. A splendid ribbon and for hat trimmings or for hair bows. It's as staple as wheat at 30c, just for Monday in aisle 1, 25c.

EMBROIDERED CHIFFON 59c. Worth in the regular way $1.25 to $1.48; embroidered in different colors in black and white; 18 inches wide. Monday, in aisle 1, 59c.

20c BLACK VELVET RIBBON, 10c YD. 90c BOLT.



Trimmed Hats

New Models at $5.00 and $8.98

The millinery department will be forward Monday with a splendid new line of trimmed hats, exact copies of imported models, hats with a distinctive style touch, turbans, picture hats, dress and semi-dress styles. About 250, all told. To be out at two prices Monday at $5.00 and $8.98. They're about an average third under exclusive stores' prices.

$2.48 Sailors $1.48

The new Vista Tilley sailor for misses' street wear. They are neatly trimmed with quills. We have them in all colors, to begin with. A real $2.48 value, for a flyer Monday on the second floor, while they last, each, $1.48.

10c Muslin at 5c yd.

For an Hour—8 to 9 A. M.

Just 700 yards of cambric muslin—36 inches wide. A regular 10c muslin in the piece; short lengths—in all 700 yards; Monday, 5c yd. Third floor. No more than 10 yards to a customer. 8 to 9 a.m.

19c Muslin Corset Covers 12½c

It's but one of a series of splendid savings from the muslin underwear department Monday. Corset covers of fine muslin, tight fitting styles, trimmed with plain band around neck and arms. Splendid 19c ones at 12½c. Second floor.

DRAWERS 33c.

They're made of good material; have wide ruffle trimmed with several rows of tucks and wide hemstitched hem; others lace trimmed; 39c and 49c regularly. Monday, second floor, each, 33c.

$1.25 GOWNS 98c.

They are made of good muslin, cut very full, high and V shaped neck, trimmed with deep yoke of Val. lace or embroidery beading. $1.25 gowns Monday, second floor, 98c.

CORSET COVERS 49c.

They are daintily trimmed with deep yokes of lace and baby ribbon; the kind that are cut very full in front. Usual values at 59c, Monday, second floor, 49c.

$1.25 SKIRTS 89c.

Muslin skirts with deep flounce trimmed with torchon lace edge and cluster of tucks; some with embroidery; many of them worth $1.25. Second floor, each, 89c.

98c GOWNS ....69c $1.00 SKIRTS ....75c 39c DRAWERS 35c

50c, 75c and $1.00 Gloves at 25c

Kid Gloves, Silk Gloves, Lisle Gloves

It's going to be a great day at the Broadway Monday. It can't help but be when values like these are out. Think of it—25c for gloves, silk gloves, kid gloves, lisle gloves. It's the final clean up of all lines from the Goetz Glove Co. stock.

It's the Broadway way of doing things.

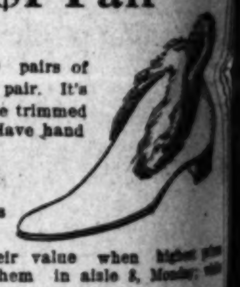
The kid gloves are mostly blacks, the silk and lisle gloves are in white and colors only, and they're mostly small sizes. At this price we can't accept telephone or mail orders. Now hurry to aisle 2 Monday. They will be on all day while quantities last. Your choice 25c pair.

10c and 15c Handkerchiefs 5c

Women's handkerchiefs. A clean-up of short lines of fine linen hemstitched handkerchiefs worth to 15c; also a lot of initial handkerchiefs, swiss embroidered. There are several hundred dozen in this lot. No telephone or mail orders on these. All day while quantities last, in aisle 3, Monday, 5c each.

350 Pairs Trimmed Juliets $1 Pair

Regular $1.75 and $2.00 Values



More stirring news from the shoe department. Secured an even 350 pairs of women's warm Juliets at a price that enables us to sell them at $1.00 a pair. It's a varied assortment; all of them are warm lined; a good many of them are trimmed with the best quality of seal fur, just like the illustration on the right. Have hand turned soles; find vici kid and undressed kid vamps.

A good many of them are made with colored velvet tops and steel bead trimming or silk bows to match.

There'll be all sizes to begin with. They're just the sort of shoes women will want now for cool mornings and evenings.

It's a most timely opportunity to secure them at about half their value when higher prices are prevailing. Another demonstration of Broadway methods. Find them in aisle 8, Monday, while they last, $1.00.

Men's New $10 Suits $7.50

Here's a broad, liberal offer from the men's clothing store Monday. Choose from any of our men's $10.00 new fall and winter suits, and pay $7.50 Monday.

This offer gains added importance when you think of what a $10.00 price means in our suit department. It means that you pay $7.50 for suits that are the equal of most $12.50 suits about town.

They're made of all wool tweeds and cheviots, also fancy worsteds, single and double breasted styles. All sizes, 34 to 44 chest measure. Remember, it's our $10.00 line for $7.50 just for Monday. Second floor.

$2.50 for Odd Coats

Worth $7.50

Men's odd coats, accumulations from vigorous selling of the past. Some are lined, others partly lined. They are made of wool tweeds and cheviots, good colors and patterns, all sizes, too. Second floor, Monday, each, $2.50.

Men's Suits $12.00

Regular $17.50 Ones

Look in one of our south windows and see one of these fine suits. You would pay $20.00, and they wouldn't fit any better or have a bit more style. Single or double breasted coats, with or without vents. A $17.50 line at $12.00 Monday, second floor.

$27.50 Wilton Velvet Rugs $21.50

Handsome Wilton velvet and Axminster rugs, room size 9x12; rich oriental designs and floral patterns. There is a large assortment to choose from. Think what a carpet would cost you to cover a room of this size, and think of the regular price of these rugs—$27.50; Monday they're $21.50 on the third floor.

$5.00 PORTIERES $3.98 PAIR.

A large assortment of tapestry portieres, 50 inches wide and 3 yards long; also portieres of armures in pretty shades of red and green; new fresh stock, styles to suit everyone; regular $5.00 values, Monday, third floor, pair $3.98.

$2.00 BLANKETS $1.48.

Large 12-4 cotton blankets, extra size and extra weight, pretty borders, shell stitched ends, comfortable blankets, regular $2.00 ones, Monday, third floor, pair $1.48.

$1.25 CURTAINS 85c

Arabian lace curtains made from heavy net, various style borders, scrolls, patterns and Grecian designs. $1.25 curtains for 85c Monday, third floor.

15c CRETONNES 9c

Pretty cretonnes in light or dark colors, floral patterns and oriental designs, light and dark colors, suitable for draperies of all kinds. 15c value, Monday, 3rd floor, yard 9c.

Shoppings Bags 95c

$1.48 and $1.75 ones

Here's news for women to make buying eager Monday. Shopping bags of extra quality leather in carriage and envelope shapes, the kind with riveted and leather covered frames, some lined with leather, others with moire silk, shopping bags with all the latest fittings, and are worth in a regular way $1.48 to $1.75. It's a great Monday special in the leather goods department, aisle 3, each 95c.

Men's Watches $9

$12.50 and $14.00 values

Men's watches with 20-year gold filled case, hunting and open face style, plain or engraved. Fitted with Elgin and Waltham movements. Watches that are fully guaranteed in every way. Priced in the regular way they'd be $12.50 and $14.00. Monday in aisle 3, each, $9.00.

Women's Watches $20.00

The kind with 14-carat solid gold case that will stand plenty of wear and service. They're fitted with Elgin or Waltham movements, fully guaranteed. We consider them a good value at $25.00. We're making a leader of them in aisle 3 Monday.

5 Solid Carloads of Enamelware

TO SELL AT TINWARE PRICES

Five carloads of enamelware—it's a mighty big lot, and there are few retail houses that could swing a deal of this size. Broadway buying prestige, and our great selling outlet, enable us to handle it.

We print herewith a facsimile letter from the wholesale auctioneers concerned in the deal. It tells the story in a nutshell. The entire shipment is here now, ready to start a big sale Monday and to continue all week.

It means buying high grade enamelware, single and double coated, at about the same price you are in the habit of paying for tinware—yes, and some at even less. A cleanup of several large factories. It's going to be a great enamelware week at the Broadway. You can judge the savings by a few items we quote. If you've a kitchen need of any sort, don't fail to be here. Sale starts Monday in the basement.

MINER'S INCHES FLOW OF WATER.

Practical Method of Ascertaining Quantity Delivered Through Weir to Ditch—A Table of Discharge for Twenty-Four Inch Weir Up to Two Hundred Inches.

BY ALLEN KELLY.

REQUESTS have been received from a number of readers of The Times, who are users of water for irrigation, for information that will enable them to ascertain accurately the quantity of water, measured in miner's inches, delivered to them in their ditches. The miner's inch is the common unit of measurement in California. It is the quantity of water that passes through an opening one inch square under a head of four inches. The United States Reclamation Service treats one cubic foot of water per second as the equivalent of fifty miner's inches.

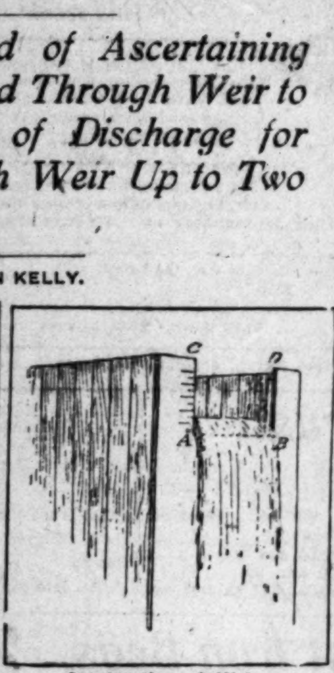
If an irrigator has means of ascertaining accurately the volume of water in cubic feet delivered to his ditch in a given time, it is easy to reduce that to miner's inches, but in general practice it is not feasible to measure the volume without going into complicated calculations and taking into account many modifying conditions.

Having some skill in mathematics, and means of measuring accurately the "head" of water, one may ascertain the flow through a weir by this formula: Multiply the width of the opening through which the water passes by 3.33, and multiply that product by the square root of the cube of the head in feet. The result will be the discharge in cubic feet per second, and that multiplied by 50 will give the miner's inches.

But the farmer usually is unable to avail himself of that method, and desires to know a simple means of ascertaining quickly whether or not he is receiving approximately the quantity of water to which he is entitled. There is no "rule of thumb" by which the flow of water can be measured at a glance, but with the aid of certain tables and an accurately constructed weir, the process may be simplified.

The first thing necessary is a proper weir, which may be readily constructed in the box to which water is usually delivered at the head of a farmer's ditch. The box should be large enough to receive the inflow and allow the water to become still before passing through the weir. For convenience of calculation, let the width of the weir be twenty-four inches; the height may be anything sufficient to take care of the flow. The diagram shows the construction of a weir.

The edges of the weir opening should be of thin metal, plates of which may be fastened on the inside of the box to form the crest and vertical sides of the weir. The length AB must be accurate, and the sides AC, BD must be truly vertical. Graduations in hundredths of a foot are to be marked with precision on the side AC as indicated, or on a scale rod inside the box. The purpose of the graduations is to show the head or height of water above the crest of the weir AB, and that must be taken at the top of the curve of water flowing over the crest, which will be inside the box.



Construction of Weir.

Having this device, it is easy to apply a "weir table," which may be obtained from almost any pump manufacturer or large dealer in well machinery. Some concerns print such tables in their catalogues for the convenience of customers. Any standard work on hydraulics contains weir tables.

The following table, adapted to a twenty-four-inch weir and showing flow in cubic second feet and in miner's inches, will be sufficient for ordinary use, but it would be well for the irrigator to employ an engineer to mark the graduations on his weir. The engineer could readily make the graduations show directly the flow in miner's inches.

If the irrigator is entitled to twenty-five miner's inches of water, and desires only to know whether or not he is getting that quantity, a mark on the vertical side of the weir at a height of two and an eighth inches will show him. If he is entitled to fifty inches, the mark should be at a height of three and three-eighths inches. A flow of 100 miner's inches will be indicated by a mark at the height of five and three-eighths, as near as may be. By making use of the table given, the weir can be marked for any flow up to 200 inches.

Where the irrigator has facilities for measuring in gallons the volume of water delivered to his ditch or pipe, the process of ascertaining the flow in miner's inches is quite simple. A miner's inch is equivalent to a discharge of nine gallons a minute, or 12,960 gallons in twenty-four hours. By turning the whole flow into barrels, or other receptacles of known capacity in gallons, for exactly sixty seconds, and then dividing the number of gallons by 9, the number of miner's inches delivered is ascertained.

STORIES OF GREAT MEN.

They Say and Do Things That Have a Humorous Side as Other Men Do.

When Andrew Jackson was President a poor widow who kept a boarding house, found it impossible to collect her board bill from a government official, went to the White House and told the President about it.

Jackson said to her, "He'll give you a note for it, won't he?"

She said: "Yes."

"Then,' said Jackson, "get his note and come back and see me again."

She had no difficulty in getting the note, and, carrying it to the White House, the President took it and wrote on its back, "Andrew Jackson," then told her to put it in a bank for collection.

When the government official was notified that his note was in the bank for collection he laughed at the idea, but when he was told that it was indorsed by Andrew Jackson he got the money mighty quickly and paid it, and a few days afterward he was notified that has services were no longer wanted.

Up to Him.

It is said that Chairman Sherman, of the Republican Campaign Committee, was recently approached by a somewhat unimportant Ohio politician, who, though formerly a Republican, has of late years voted the State Democratic ticket.

It appeared from the man's conversation that he had seen the error of his way, and was now once more prepared to vote and work for the party which he had left. At the same time he hinted that he would like a job at campaign headquarters.

"I'm sorry," Mr. Sherman is reported to have replied, "that I shall have to disappoint you. Glad to see you back; but in these days the wise prodigal brings along his own calf."—[Harper's Weekly.

CITY OF LONDON'S NEW LORD MAYOR.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Sept. 29.—Having set tight as an Alderman for twenty-five years and filled the office of Sheriff for one term, Sir William Purdie Treloar today went through the solemn farce of being elected Lord Mayor of the city of London. Time was—some two hundred or more years ago—when the Lord Mayors were really elected by the citizens. But the Aldermen—they are elected for life—took counsel among themselves and decided that a position so exalted as that of Lord Mayor should not be thrown open to outsiders and made dependent on popular favor. By some hocus-pocus they fixed things up so that every Alderman, if he live long enough, is assured of becoming a Lord Mayor, just as a man who goes to a barber's shop to get shaved and finds a lot of customers ahead is certain that he will be "next" if he only waits long enough. When the last Lord Mayor was elected Sir William was "next," and now it is his turn to take the civic chair.

SIR WILLIAM TRELOAR,
London's new Lord Mayor.

The system pleases the Aldermen and does not make much difference to anybody else. The office of Lord Mayor has long been shorn of its once great powers and has become a mere figurehead billet, though it is invested with more fictitious dignity than any other post in England. As Lord Mayor, Sir William will have to eat a prodigious number of official dinners, spend twice of thrice his salary of $50,000 in entertaining, wear gorgeous robes, ride in a most uncomfortable and wonderful old coach, and go through a lot of fussy ceremonies just as they were carried out hundreds of years ago. If he should introduce anything in the shape of a modern innovation it would cause no end of a fuss.

It illustrates the irony of fate that the man who is compelled to play this role—an Alderman who shirks the Lord Mayor job when his turn comes round is subjected to a heavy fine—has nothing of the old fogey about him. Sir William is a thoroughly up-to-date man and one of the most jovial fellows living. He makes a rattling speech, has written a book or two, and is an inveterate clubman. He pioneered the adoption of the ballot act in the city, fought for and won the opening of the Guildhall Art Gallery on Sunday afternoons and has uniformly waged the battle of healthy common sense, activity and progress against the antiquated conservatism of which the office of Lord Mayor of the city of London is a monumental survival. For some years past he has been president of the National Sunday League, which is guilty of the sacrilege of striving to make Sunday a day of rational recreation as well as of rest and prayer. But his pet hobby is poor children, especially those who are crippled and are thus doubly handicapped in life's struggle. For these afflicted little ones he is always doing something and enlisting others in the work.

Perhaps it is his own superb physique which makes him feel such tenderness for them. He is the biggest member of the Aldermanic body. He stands six feet, four in his socks, and when he was knighted by Queen Victoria, Her Majesty was visibly impressed by his height. Afterward a lord-in-waiting approached and obtained for his royal mistress the exact measurement of this son of Anak. An amusing story, by the way, is told of this same knighting. Sir William's wife, who, unfortunately, died not long ago, was traveling to Bournemouth. It is supposed that she became Lady Treloar somewhere about Basingstoke, that being the moment when her husband was "having it on the shoulder" at Windsor. At any rate, when she arrived at Bournemouth, there was a telegram awaiting her: "Operation successfully performed, both doing well"—the allusion in "both" being to Sir William's brother Sheriff, who was knighted with him. He is 64 years old and has made a big fortune out of carpets and mats.

Sir William will not be sworn in as Lord Mayor until November 9, when takes place that queer annual pageant, the Lord Mayor's show. There can be no doubt it would afford Sir William much more satisfaction if he could devote the money it will cost him to his pets, crippled children. But in this, as in all the other functions associated with the office, he is bound to conform to cast-iron custom. Americans should understand that what is known officially as the city of London comprises only one square mile of the metropolis, with the Bank of England as the center.

HAUNT OF DRUIDS.

A Remarkable Baptism Conducted at an Ancient Druidical Place of Worship.

A remarkable christening has recently taken place in a remote part of Derbyshire, Harborough Hill, in the western portion of the county, said to have been a haunt of the Druids, and apparently used both for worship and as a place of burial.

Some years ago a number of human skulls, which had been compactly buried there in some distant century, were unearthed at the summit of this lofty ridge, which commands a view over six counties, terminating in the peak of Snowdon, the latter being easily visible on a clear day. The hill bristles with fantastic dolomite crags, some of which were, it is supposed, shaped by the Druids for ceremonial purposes.

A big block of limestone has been carved into a capacious chair; another rock with a flat top, appears to have been used as an altar, and an adjacent monolith, in which a semicircular bowl has been scooped out, looks like a rude font. It was with water from this ancient rock bowl that the child—the daughter of a farmer in the district—was lately christened. The little girl, three months old, was carried up to this wild, bleak spot, accompanied by numerous relatives, including, of course, the necessary godfather and godmother, and there, with the wind howling among the crags, ... was administered by a lay ...

not to be supposed that and "attachés," as they are ir- inferior in mental capacity to their breth- other careers.

They are the product and the victims of a bad system, which consists in setting two men to do the work of one, both being underpaid in consequence.

Hundreds of them turn an honest penny in and out of office hours. This worthy paterfamilias has no sooner reached his little home in the suburbs than he develops into an accountant or a copyist. That correct ministerial functionary (who would suspect it?) rises at 4 a.m. and is an inspector at the Central Market—Les Halles—until 7 a.m. Another sits in the box office of a theater and acts as "controleur" and so on.

The general public knows, of course, very little of the servants of the republic, who are popularly supposed—to judge from caricatures—to sit slumbering all day long amid piles of papers. How different is the reality! The state administrations are hives where the arts, physical culture and intellectual games flourish. Civil servants are often artists of real talent. If you could peep behind the closed doors or this or that ministry you would often see a painter hard at work on a canvas, while a friend is preparing the frame. In another room a dramatist will be reading his latest piece to a select audience of his colleagues. In another two "chansonniers," poet and musician, will be interpreting the next song or valse for a Montmartre café concert, and all Paris, the midinettes especially, will be humming it in a few days.

Certain "bureaux" of the Ministry of Finance are decorated with beautiful mural paintings, the work of functionaries. This Ministry, in spite of the columns of dry figures in which its members are supposed to be immersed, furnished the most formidable literary and artistic competitors for the prizes offered by various great dailies.

Beautiful crayon drawings of mythological subjects adorn the walls of the Education Department at the Hotel de Ville. The Prefecture of Police is famous for its chess players. At the Ministries of Commerce, Public Works and the Colonies there are excellent accountants (sub rosa) and even commercial travellers who manage to be absent the greater part of the year from their ministerial duties. In an important municipal office, four incorrigible card players have had the audacity to post up a notice "private" on the door of one of the rooms, in order that they may remain undisturbed. Life under such conditions is evidently tolerable. Indeed, there is on record the case of a functionary who came into a comfortable fortune at the death of a relative and forthwith asked and obtained leave of absence sine die. A year afterwards, one fine morning, he turned up at his office. His astonished colleagues asked him the reason of his return. "Well, you know, I was bored to death. I did not know how to fill up my time. The fact is, this is the only place where you can enjoy yourself." And he stayed.

No wonder, then, that M. Clemenceau's circular spread consternation among the staff of the Ministry of Interior. Loud protestations were raised against the arbitrary methods of this "Republican" minister who, as the opposition papers gloatingly pointed out, was preventing the "braves fonctionnaires" from earning their daily bread. But M. Clemenceau held firm. "When I am at my office," he said, "it is not too much to require the ministerial staff to be at their posts. Seven hours' work is not excessive at a time when the eight-hour day is demanded. The gentlemen who are reported absent from duty will take the consequences."

The utmost that the Minister could be induced to concede was that the afternoon hours should be from 2 to 6 instead of from 3 to 7.

In order to insure that the new regulation was being compiled with, presence sheets were handed round from time to time, each official being required to append his signature.

It was then that astonishing abuses came to light. It was discovered that one functionary had never set foot in the Ministry except to draw his salary. He had been earning 9000 francs a year ($1800) as an inspector of the Pari mutuel (the only form of public betting allowed by law) and, of course, had no time to devote to his ministerial duties. He was promptly dismissed and accepted his misfortune without a murmur. Another truant only escaped a similar fate by proving that his chief had begged him to stay away, "as there was nothing for him to do."

That M. Clemenceau is not insensible to the humorous side of the situation is apparent from a little incident which happend the other day. The terrible minister suddenly walked into one of the offices and surprised an attaché fast asleep.

The culprit's colleagues hastened to rouse him to consciousness, when M. Clemenceau waved them back with the words: "Don't wake him; he might go away."

Even when the Minister was at Carlsbad taking the waters, he did not forget his circular. He sent a cipher telegram to the ministry one day ordering the presence sheets to be passed round. Not a functionary was absent. Days off for burying grand-aunts and christening newborn infants have become regretted memories of the past.

M. Clemenceau's reforming zeal has extended even to the prisons. His first visit was not encouraging. The porter of St. Lazare prison in the Rue du Faubourg St. Denis opened the gate one morning to a little old gentleman. The following dialogue took place:

"What do you want?"

"I wish to visit the establishment."

"Have you the Prefect's permission?"

"No. I am the Minister of the Interior. Go and call the Governor."

The porter stood aghast. Finally he stammered, "Monsieur le directeur has gone out, Monsiuer le Ministre."

"Well, then, call the chief warder."

Again came the stammering reply that the chief warder was out also.

The same was the case with the sister superior and finally M. Clemenceau interviewed the clerk. For weeks the Governor, chief warder and sister superior hardly ventured outside the prison gates for fear of another surprise visit from the terrible minister. It is impossible to crowd into the limits of an article the sensational doings of M. Clemenceau during the short period he has held the portfolio of the interior.

It began with Currieres. The awful mining catastrophe, by which over a thousand lives were sacrificed, occurred as will be remembered, in March, almost immediately after the formation of the Sarrien ministry. Between sixty and seventy thousand miners under the influence of revolutionary agitators struck work and for a time the situation was extremely grave. M. Clemenceau repaired post haste to Lens, the headquarters of the Basly and Broutchoux syndicates, the latter being openly revolutionary. The Minister first of all interviewed the Baslyites, whose leader is the Mayor and parliamentary representative of Lens, and then, to the utter dismay of prefect, mayor, police and all officialdom, announced his intention of interviewing the Broutchoutists. A minister in the revolutionary court. Never had such a thing been heard of. What if an anarchist outrage were committed? What if his excellency were seized and held hostage. Nothing daunted, the little man, in bowler and lounge suit, and unattended, walked into the Broutchoutists' den, heedless of scowling, suspicious glances, and announced his intention of addresing the miners assembled in the hall.

"Bonjour, citoyens." "Bonjour, citoyen ministre."

And then, when silence had been obtained, M. Clemenceau told the miners that he had come to inquire into their case and exhorted them to be calm and avoid disorder, promising them that if there were no disorder, no force would be used.

"And what will you do, citizen," cried a miner, "if there is disorder?"

"In that case," was the bold, unhesitating reply, "the government will enforce order and protect the mines, but I promise you that you shall not see a single soldier. They shall be brought into the district by night and posted within the works, and if there is no disorder not a single pantalon rouge (red trousers) shall be seen in the streets."

It was a perilous game to play, but the miners were visibly overawed by the Minister's undaunted attitude, and he was cheered as he left the hall. M. Clemenceau kept his word. Thousands of troops were brought into the northern departments by night and posted about the mines. Unfortunately there was disorder, the military were frequently seen in the streets of Lens, and throughout the mining districts, and M. Clemenceau was severely criticized by his opponents for parleying with revolutionaries.

The echoes of Courrieres had scarce died away when all France was thrown into a panic by the approach of May day. It was firmly believed that the country was on the eve of a terrible Socialist and anarchist upheaval. Here again the energy of the Minister of the Interior was apparent. Fifty thousand troops preserved order in Paris alone, and the good citizens who had laid in stores of ham, sausage and biscuit against a siege were none the worse for their fright except that they had to eat cold victuals for a fortnight.

Clemenceau's right hand man at the Ministry of the Interior is M. Albert Sarraut, the under secretary, and when, a while ago, M. Sarraut fought a duel with M. Pugliesi-Conti, the Liberal deputy, his famous chief acted as his second. For a Frenchman, indeed, M. Clemenceau's energy is quite abnormal. There is something distinctively American about it. Perhaps that is due to the fact that he spent four years in America. When he was only 19 he was thrown into prison for shouting "Viva la Republique" at a medical students' meeting. He was kept three months in jail for this, and the experience left an incredible impression on his powerful and rebellious character. As soon as he was released, he made tracks for the land of the free.

He might have spent the rest of his days there and perhaps by this time have been a United States Senator, but for the Franco-German War and the break-up of the empire. These events brought back to Paris from many a distant corner of the earth the men who had fought the empire in its days of glory and omnipotence. They caused Clemenceau to pack up his portmanteau and bid a life-long farewell to America. Once back in the capital, he abandoned medicine—he is a full-fledged doctor—for journalism and politics. He has an intellect as keen as a razor, a will as hard as the granite cliffs of his own native La Vendee. To these qualities he unites dauntless courage, moral and intellectual no less than physical.

For nigh forty years he has been battling in French politics—with voice and pen, sword and pistol—and yet it is only within the last six months he has had the opportunity of revealing some of his greatest qualities to the world. His enemies say that he is ill and old—he is on the shady side of sixty-five, and, therefore, in a hurry. If that is so, the republic would be all the better for a few more "invalids" spurred on by age and debility.

GREEN OLIVES DENOUNCED.

But the Ripe, Pickled Olives of California Are a Most Nutritious Food.

A smashing blow at the prestige of the big, green olives which are imported from Spain and paid for and eaten by gourmets in America has been delivered by Prof. F. T. Bioletti, the viticultural expert of the State University, in a bulletin issued by him, dealing with the question of olive pickling in California.

Persons who have been in the habit of devouring the fancy variety of imported olive, green and acidulous, are informed by Prof. Bioletti that the aforesaid olive is absolutely indigestible. Such olives are as valuable, says Prof. Bioletti, as unripe peaches or apples, and no more.

In the same breath Prof. Bioletti sounds the praises of ripe pickled California olives. Discussing the matter, he says:

"Pickled ripe olives constitute an extremely nutritious and digestible form of food. They contain a large amount of oil, carbohydrates and some nitrogenous matter, and in some countries replace meat to a certain extent.

"Pickled green olives, such as those imported from Spain, are, on the contrary, indigestible and contain much less nutriment. They are made from unripe fruit and are therefore, as far as their use as food is concerned, in no way superior to unripe apples or peaches. They are simply a relish and to be used in very limited quantities in the same way as pickled walnuts or cucumbers. A meal of bread and ripe olives, on the other hand, is not only palatable, but nutritious and sustaining, and the amount eaten is to be limited only by the same considerations as that of any other good, wholesome food."

Backing up Prof. Bioletti's statement is an analysis made by Prof. M. E. Jaffa, the noted food expert of the university, which analysis showed that ripe pickled olives of the Mission variety in California have twice the nutriment contained in the Queen olives imported from Spain.

The Czar as an Athlete.

The Czar is below the medium height and, although he does not look it he is something of an athlete, says a writer in Cassell's Saturday Journal. In a walk he can easily outdistance the average man. Pedestrianism is, in fact, the exercise that appeals to him most. He can go miles and miles without requiring a rest, but nowadays he indulges in but few rambles. He does not fear death for himself, but he believes that God intended him to rule, and, therefore he avoids unnecessary risks. The tales that are circulated periodically to the effect that he trembles for his safety throughout the livelong day are as untrue as they are absurd.

Nicholas II is also a fair oar. When he was over in this country some years ago he patronized the Thames frequently, going down to a certain boathouse unattended and hiring a single-sculler by the hour. Now and again he cycles. He finds no pleasure in pomp and ceremony, and were he free to consult his own wishes he would cheerfully vacate the throne tomorrow.

One-Legged Mountaineer.

A passion for climbing Fuji Yama, Japan's highest mountain of 13,000 feet, seems to have seized all kinds of Japanese people.

In addition to the 9-year-old girl who is about to try to make the ascent alone, a man who lost his right leg in the war, and now has an artificial one presented by the Emperor, intends ascending the mountain on horseback, which is said to be impossible, says the Kobe Herald.

He has already been up on his present assortment of legs.

WILD YARNS CALLED IN.

"Harper's Weekly" Apologizes for Slanders.

American Interests in Mexico Voice Protest.

Investigation Discloses Malicious Ignorance.

BY EDWARD C. BUTLER.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

MEXICO CITY, Oct. 10.—The amende honorable offered by Harper's Weekly in its October issue in refutation of the misleading articles published by that journal concerning Mexico, comes better late than never. Harper's Weekly of August 25 published an article by Broughton Brandenburg, describing political and labor conditions in this country, and predicting in connection therewith all sorts of trouble, even to the extent of driving the Americans out of Mexico.

Mr. Brandenburg was here last year and traveled over the country somewhat extensively, picking up information about the Mexican peon and his part in the labor policy of Mexico. His work was sensational and reached its culmination in the article published in the old-time and generally steady Harper's Weekly. The apology to be printed by the Weekly will set forth that many complaints had been received from governmental authorities and from Americans having large interests in Mexico, to the effect that the impression made by the publication in the issue of August 25 was wrongful and harmful; that investigation had satisfied the editors of Harper's Weekly that there was good cause for these expressions of dissatisfaction.

It will add: "Sporadic outbreaks are not uncommon in any large mining communities, but none have developed in Northern Mexico of such magnitude as to warrant in any sense the assertion contained in the article referred to. Nor is there the slightest indication of inability on the part of the Mexican government to maintain order and safeguard lives and property. We regret exceedingly that the exaggeration should have found a place in the columns of Harper's Weekly."

This apology by the great New York journal will certainly do Mexico good, but the pity is that room should have been given in the first place to the sensational productions of Mr. Brandenburg. The American papers that started and carried on these misleading and mischievous statements, should have borne in mind that Mexico has not had a revolution for thirty years except the insignificant affair by Neri in Guerrero State eight or ten years ago, an affair which was snuffed out in a week. Therefore, there was really no warrant for the article written in the New York paper under the caption of "The War Peril on the Mexican Border." The opening words of the article: "The long list of outrages, anti-American riots, assassinations of Americans in Mexico and demonstrations connived in by secret anti-American societies," displayed, to start with, an ignorance on the part of the author which actually bordered on the malicious.

Americans in Mexico who behave themselves and have shown a decent regard for the laws and customs of the country, have been well treated by the Mexicans and the Mexican government. They have been supported in their rights and have not suffered from assassinations or outrages more than is common among the mining sections of the United States. There was no pitched battle at the copper camps of Cananea, and no heavy loss of life, and the American troops at Fort Huachuca were not rushed into Mexico. The effort of the revolutionary junta at St. Louis, Mo., was the nearest approach to a revolution in the entire episode, and that was on paper fanned with hot air.

All this was brought about by anti-Mexican feeling, not anti-American; the petty prejudices of political soreheads who lived in the United States and under the protecting sweep of the the wide-winged American eagle squeaked out their "protests." There was mischief in these miserable methods and that mischief was the creating of an unrestful and distrustful mental atmosphere among both the Americans and the Mexicans, who should rather have been drawn to each other by ties of harmony. Among the lower class of Mexicans, ideas were thus fathered and fostered that they never held before. Hence the value of any declaimer made by American papers, to offset the mischief.

As a matter of fact the troubles at Cananea were local and not anti-American, and were easily settled by the Mexican officials without the aid of American troops or officials. The more recent disturbance at Acayucan, on the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, and at Jimenez in the state of Coahuila, was not directed against the Americans, in either case, but was absolutely local in character and scope. At Acayucan the question involved was one of lands owned by the Indians concerning which there was some dispute. The local authorities arrested the promoters of the disturbance and the affair has been satisfactorily arranged, nor did any inconvenience result to the Tehuantepec Railroad. Not an American was disturbed or even threatened. The Jimenez incident was a brush between customhouse guards and some smugglers, a short and sharp squirmish such as might be found described in Boccaccio. Some of the smugglers escaped into American territory and others were caught by the Mexican guards under Gen. Juvencio Robles, a very active officer. Thirty hours after the affair occurred at Jimenez, the band had been entirely dispersed. Not an American was disturbed or even threatened.

Even on September 16, when, according to the American newspapers, Americans would be assaulted and insulted throughout Mexico, the leading Americans in Guanajuato attended a bull fight and were actually cheered by Mexicans; if any American had become intoxicated that day and offered to create any disturbance, his own countrymen in that mining city intended to arrest him and take him to the police station. But none of those things happened and as far as can be learned from all the corners of the country, Mexico had the quietest "sixteenth of September" in all its history.

Revolutions are no longer possible in Mexico. They were incidental to days long agone. Revolutions are consequent to financial disturbances, radical party conflicts, crises in social or civic affairs and occasionally such movements are justified by circumstances for the betterment of the country as led to the revolutionary campaign waged by Gen. Diaz prior to 1847. These roots are now lacking in Mexico; hence the impossibility of any revolutionary plant. On the contrary, instead of the weeds of waste and want, the country rejoices in the plentitude of progressive growth. Car wheels, rumbling machinery, belted engines, are the only revolutions now possible in Mexico. Some old-timers still recall the days of revolution, but they are sunk to a whisper, days of terrible suspense, days of restlessness, that live only along the dim pages of history. The arms of today are ploughshears wrought from useless swords. The school house instead of the fortress; the mill and factory instead of the arsenal; the church instead of the hospital, such are the conditions in Mexico today. Without causes for revolution, means or revolution, leaders in revolution, that noxious midnight of the past is no longer possible in this fair republic. On the other hand the government possesses elements that enable it to crush the least suggestion of revolution in a few hours. The trouble at Acayucan was disposed of and crushed out with fifty soldiers; as a matter of fact the government was able to place a force of 5000 men on the spot within thirty hours. The vast web of wires controlled by the Federal Government Telegraph Company, amounting probably to 90,000 or 100,000 kilometres, reaches every corner of the country; every city and town of any importance is in close nervous touch with that system, and the 15,000 kilometres of railroads make tributary to the City of Mexico, closely so, all but the Pacific slope, and that will be within hand-touch in two years at the most.

The scheme of the Pan-American Railway, being built in Southern Mexico by Californians, is of great importance, locally as well as from an international and intercontinental point of view. Being a feeder to the Tehuantepec Railway, it will make outlets to traffic from Central Mexico and from Central America, whose products will find open highway to the markets of the world on both sides of the continent. Locally the scheme will open up the states of Oaxaca and Chiapas as never before.

Nature has been prodigal in her gifts to that section of the country. All that has been needed is cheap and rapid transportation to bring out the best possibilities of Southern Mexico. Probably in no other portion of the globe, not even excepting spicy Ceylon, is a better grade of coffee raised than in the state of Chiapas. In the Tapachula district the shipments of coffee now reach 300,000 sacks per year. The plant grows there without being shaded, which is a great benefit and at much less expense than in any other part of the country.

Large forests of mahogany and Spanish cedar and other hard woods are to be found in Chiapas, and the Pan-American Railway can feed them as precious freight to the Tehuantepec Railway and the outlying ports of the state, and thus supply the woods to the New York and San Francisco markets. The United States consumes annually about 75,000 carloads of bananas, and in scarcely any portion of the world can better fruit be found than in Chiapas and in Oaxaca. Rubber, rice, sugar, corn, henequen, vanilla, and other choice staples are to be found in commercial quantities in those two, among the most favored states of the republic. For cattle raising there is no better locality on the American continent. A new world was placed by Columbus at the feet of Ferdinand and Isabella; a new world of exceptional beauty and wealth is now being brought by California enterprise and being placed at the expectant touch of the race, by the discovery and development of Southern Mexico.

The Southern Pacific extension being built from Guaymas to Guadalajara, also an enterprise footed by California, is busy looking up not only the mineral resources of the country to be traversed, but also the agricultural and horticultural possibilities, thus to strengthen its own resources. The company has had an agricultural expert, Nicholas Wychgel, formerly connected with the United States Department of Agriculture, traveling through those sections of Sinaloa and Tepic bordering the survey, making careful surveys as to soil, product, etc.

Some of the best tobacco in the world is raised in Tepic, and with easy, and equitable transportation, such as will be afforded by the Southern Pacific, this important staple will find better access to the markets of the world. Proportionately all other tropical productions are to be found in abundance in that western section of the country, all awaiting the stimulus of quick transportation.

Epes Randolph, president of the Cananea, Rio Yaqui and Pacific Railroad, and in charge of the extensions of the Southern Pacific in this country, is pushing conclusions with the government for the acceptance of the lines surveyed through from Guaymas to Guadalajara. The maps of the proposed line have been in the hands of the government for some time. The route as proposed touches the principal points along the west coast as far south as Guadalajara. Work is to be rushed from both ends of the line. Under its concession the company is empowered to construct a branch line every 100 kilometres. When the entire system is completed a few years hence, that section will be honeycombed with railroad connections, awakening the sleeping prospects of the western coast of Mexico.

The Financial Opportunity of a Lifetime

To Get Into Money-Making Manufacturing Business on the Ground Floor

The Contract for Erection of Permanent Factory at Dolgeville Has Been Let to Mr. Earl F. Low, a Prominent Los Angeles Contractor and Builder, and Construction Will Start in a Few Days.

Put Your Money to Work

Let us put your money to work for you. It is the only way you will ever get ahead in this world. No man or woman in the world ever got rich unless he put every cent he could rake and scrape together into some kind of business where the money worked for him. We want to do that for you. We have a business that is safe, honest, sure and without speculation. It is a business that has been in operation for some time past and has proven an immense success.

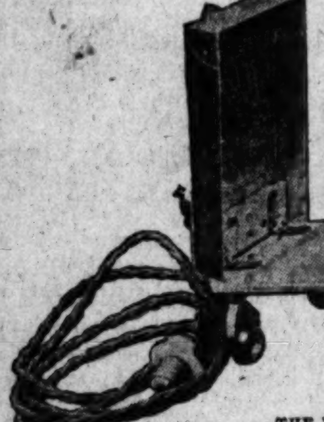
What We Have

The company owns all the patents.

We have exclusive control of the patents for the United States and Canada.

We have an established market and a demand that reaches to every one of the homes and places of business in America that uses electricity.

We have a factory established in the old Murray Harris organ factory at 657-659 San Fernando street, which has been leased for temporary use, where we are now manufacturing these goods, pending the erection of the necessary buildings at Dolgeville, which is to be our permanent location.



THE ELECTRIC TOASTER
Toasts Both Sides of Bread at Once.

Our Temporary Factory

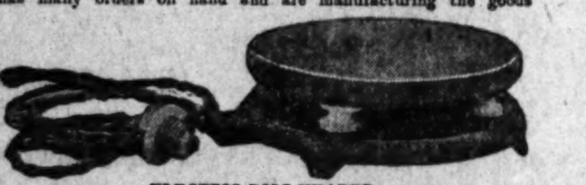
We are now manufacturing these good to fill orders on hand at our temporary factory. The orders are ahead of our present facilities, but more machinery has been ordered and will be placed as rapidly as possible.

The Southern Pacific Railway are now putting in their sidetrack on this property for the handling of freight to and from the factory, and the Pacific Electric have their sidetrack surveyed and staked out.

In the Dolgeville buildings arrangements have been made for plenty of air and light, and the grounds not occupied by buildings, sidings, etc., will be made as attractive as possible through plants, trees, lawns and shrubbery, the idea being to have the employees work among the pleasant and attractive surroundings.

Established Business

Remember that you are not going into something unknown. These goods have an established market. The company now has many orders on hand and are manufacturing the goods to supply the demand. The orders from Southern California alone are enough to keep the factory busy for some time to come, and these goods are made at an enormous profit.



ELECTRIC DISC-HEATER
Cooks Anything Requiring a Flat Surface.

Several years were spent by the inventor in perfecting these goods. That stage has been passed. It took some time to overcome the difficulties of manufacture and to establish a trade.

What We Make

The Electric Heating and Manufacturing Company was organized for the purpose of doing a general manufacturing business in electric heating and cooking appliances. Hitherto there have been a number of devices on the market for heating and cooking by electricity, but the amount of current consumed as well as the cost of the appliances, has prevented a general introduction of this otherwise perfect system.

Mr. George I. Leonard has secured four patents, Nos. 768,764, 760,075, 760,076, 753,716, and has others pending. Under his method of construction the expense has been greatly reduced and these appliances are now placed within the reach of every one using electricity.

Illustrations are herewith given of a few of the appliances which this company manufactures. One of the primary objects of the company, and one which will eventually develop into an immense and most profitable business, is the equipment of large apartment houses, hotels and private homes with modern electric power plants, thus enabling them to generate their own electricity at a cost so low that the total expense for all the lighting heating and cooking will be no greater than the present cost of lighting alone.

Something to Remember

The Electric Heating and Manufacturing Company has acquired all the heating and cooking appliances controlled by Mr. Leonard, the rights, titles and interests to the factory manufacturing these goods, which has heretofore been located at Pasadena.

This plant has been removed to Los Angeles, where the company, as before stated, has a factory at 657-659 San Fernando street.

The Contract Has Been Let for Our Permanent Factory

The contract for the erection of the permanent factory at Dolgeville has been let to Mr. Earl F. Low, a prominent Los Angeles builder and contractor, and construction of this brick factory will start in a few days. The Dolgeville property on which the factory will be located consists of three acres recently purchased for that purpose.

REFUTACION DE MENTIRAS.

DISCULPA HONORABLE OFRECIDA A MEXICO.

Se Les Denunciaron Como Puras Mentiras Articulos Maliciosos Escritos por Broughton Brandenburg, Bien Conocido en Mexico—No Habia Razon ni Lugar.

MEXICO (D. F.) 10 de Octubre.—La disculpa ofrecida a Mexicó de parte del periodico neoyorkimo, Harper's Weekly, en su numero de Octubre corriente, refutando los articulos acerca de México ya publicados, mejor viene tarde que temprano. Desafortunadamente, el Weekly de Agosto 26 proximo pasado publico articulos escritos por el Sr. Broughton Brandenburg, tocante de las condiciones politicas y sociales en el pais, y pronosticando condiciones tristisimas para la republica, ademas el destierro de los Americans ya radicados aqui.

Vino a México el año pasado el Sr. Brandenburg, é hizo varios viajes a las diferentes secciones del pais, recojiendo informes acerca del peon Mexicano y su participo en la politica industrial y economica. Era un escritor sensacional. Elcolmo de sus escritos lo alcanzo al publicar en el Harper's Weekly los articulos referidos. La disculpa que publicara el Weekly en este mes indica que se habian recibido muchas quejas de las autoridades y de los Americanos radicados ya en Mexico y con intereses en el pais. Al efecto todos declaraban que la impresion hecha por la publicacion de agosto 25 era bien injuriosa; que segun la investigacion habida los editores del Weekly quedaban satisfechos de que no habia razon ni lugar para tales quejas. Añadira Harper's Weekly: "No es extraño que haya asaltos en los grandes centros mineros, pero no han tenido lugar en Mexico ningun trastorno como se indico, de manera que se encuentran mal fundadas las aseveraciones referidas. Ni háy la menor incapacidad de parte del Gobierno Mexicano para conservar la orden y protejer las vidas ylas propiedades. Sentimos sobremanera que tal especie haya sido publicado en el Weekly."

Aprovechara mucho a Mexico la disculpa benerosa del periodico Amecicano, pero es una lastima que haya el periodico en primer lugar hecho tal publicacion. Los periodicos Americanos que despues dieron cabida a las opiniones desautorizadas del Sr. Brandenburg, debieron haber pensado lo que es la verdad, que Mexico no ha tenido una revolucion en treinta años, con excepcion de la escaramuza insignificante de Neri en el Estado de Guerrero, hace ocho o diez años, la que fué sofocada en una semana. De manera que resulto enteramente desautorizada la declaracion del periodico norte-americano bajo el encabezado de "El Peligro de Guerra Sobre la Frantera Mexicana." Las primeras palabras del articulo: "La lista larga de atentados, los levantamientos contra los Americanos, los asesinatos de Americanos en Mexico y las demonstraciones favorecidas por las sociedades anti-Americanos," manifestaron una ignorancia de parte de su autor que era a la vez maliciosa.

Los Americanos en el pais que se porten bien y demuestren respeto decente para las leyes y las costumbres Mexicanas, siempre han sido bien tratados por los Mexicanos y por el Gobierno. Han sido respetados sus derechos y el conjunto de asesinatos y de atentados no sobrepasa lo comun entre los distritos mineros de los Estados Unidos. No hubo batalla en el campo minero de Cananea con perdida considerable de vidas, ni fueron lanzados al territorio Mexicano las tropas Americanas de Fort Huachuca. E. proceder de la Junta Revolucionaria de Saint Louis, Missouri, fué la unica aproximacion a una revolucion en conexion con todo el episodio, y aun aquel incidente fué insignificante.

No fué anti-Americano el movimiento, sino anti-Mexicano, porque el animo de la Junta Mexicana en Saint Louis era contra su propio pais. Refugiados bajo las alas enormes del aguila Americano, aquellos antipatrioticos emitieron su débiles protestas, quien sabe contra qué. Malsanos eran sus conceptos, pues fomentaron el descontento entre los Americanos y los Mexicanos, que antes debian haber sido atraidos los unos a los otros por los vinculos mas amistosos. Entre la clase baja de los mismos Mexicanos fueron engendradas ideas antes desconocidas por ellos. De ahi el valor de la disculpa ya ofrecida por Harper's Weekly.

Los incidentes en Cananea eran mas bien locales y no anti-Americanos. Se conciliaron los elementos por los mismos funcionarios Mexicanos sin la necesidad de la intervencion Americana. Los atentados mas recientes en Acapuca en el Istmo de Tehuantepec y en Jimenez, en el Estado de Coahuila, fueron dirigidos, no contra los Americanos, en ambos casos, pero si, era absolutamente local en su caracter y su influencia. En la poblacion de Acayuca, situado en una parte muy pintoresco del Istmo, era una cuestion de deslinde de terrenos que sembraba entre los indios la semilla de la discordia. Las autoridades locales prontamente arrestarona las personas que promovian los trastornos, entre ellos unos tintorillos y la ceustion fué arreglada pacificamante.

No hubo ningun contratiempo resultante al Ferrocarril de Tehuantepec. Ningun Americano fué amagado, ni aun amenazado. El incidente en Jimenez consistia en una escaramuza entre algunos contrabandistas y los guardias fiscales, incidente que se repite frecuentemente en las fronteras Mexico-Americanas. Algunos de los malhechores escaparon a los Estados Unidos, y otros fueron capturados por los guardias bajo el mando del Gen. Juvencio Robles. Era un oficial muy activo. A raiz de sus operaciones, dentro de treinta horas despues del atentado en Jimenez, el grupo fué disipado. Ningun Americano fué amagado, ni aun amenazado. Aun en el dio Diez y Seis de Septiembre, fecha profética segun algunos periodicos Americanos, cuando a los paisanos suyos residentes en este pais se daria la oportunidad de desterrarse de México o sufrir el peso mortifero de una agitacion anti-extranjera, los Norte-Americanos en la ciudad miuera de Guanajuato asistieron a la Plaza de Toros. Los Mexicanos les aplaudieron en lugar de amagarlos. Si algun Americano en Guanajuato hubiera resultado borracho aquel dia, sus propios paisanos, lo hubieran llevado a la Comisaria, para obviar de su parte excusa alguna para un demonstracion hostil contra los extranjeros. Pero no resulto tal incidente, y segun todas las noticias habidas, en todas partes del pais el Dia Onomastica de México fue mas pacifica que nunca, una de las mas pacificas en la historia patria.

VALE RHINOCEROUS.

Not a Single Specimen of This Ugly Beast in the Market of the World.

The rhinoceros market is cornered. Not a single specimen of this ugliest of ugly beasts is to be had in the open markets of the world. Zoölogical collecters and circus owners the world over are unable to secure one, for the world's supply is apparently run out. In consequence the price of this homely beast is enormous.

There are known to be two in this country. One, an old chap, tottering with age, and screwed up with rheumatism, is in the Central Park, New York, zoo, and the other, a youngster about four years old, and a black African, is in the possession of Ringling Brothers.

According to Pearl Souder, a wild animal authority in the employ of the Ringlings, the sun of the "rhino" is fast setting. Not only is he an exceptionally rare article in captivity, but he has become so scarce in the wild state as to be already regarded as among the semi-extinct animals.

Several varieties of rhinoceros are extinct. Among these are the white rhinoceros of Africa. The square-mouth rhinoceros is so rare as to be considered practically extinct, and the black African variety, regarded not so many years ago as the most common, has almost entirely disappeared.

The rhinoceros has always been a problem to keepers of animals, for,

Men who know him say the passion for justice is the finest quality in the manhood of Philander Chase Knox. He heard about the boy, gave battle and got him $8000. It is said in Pittsburgh that he put more steam and interest into the case than in any other he ever tried.

During twenty-six unbroken years at the bar, Senator Knox earned as large fees, perhaps, as any lawyer in America engaged in private practice. In the main his clients were men and corporations. He went into McKinley's Cabinet in April, 1901. At the age of forty-eight, therefore, he was rich enough and generous enough, employing no better or broader word, to step away from the noisy and greedy jostle of the money-makers and give himself to something else.

Possibly a gauge of his revenues might have been found in the manner of his living. He bought a splendid house in this city and then, yielding to his joy in blooded live stock, country air, and pastoral scenes and to his appetite for real butter, pure milk, and fresh eggs, purchased one of the best farms in the United States. He couldn't have done all that on eight thousand dollars a year. When he took up public matters he broke off every business relation as a lawyer. His name was scratched from the sign on the door and struck from the ledgers within the office. It is common talk with men in his profession that he threw away considerably more than a month when he surrendered to McKinley and consented to become Attorney-General in his Cabinet. He says nothing, being dumb in his own sense of propriety, but what must be in his mind when he reads in some of the yellow magazines that he is grouped among the ambushed and sordid enemies of his country?

The library in the Washington home where I talked with him—a magnificent room, wide as the house itself, and filled with the odors of books, roses, leather, and new-burned tobacco. If he were to stop, fold his arms and look gloomy there in the middle of the floor, as he comes toward me, he would be a replica in flesh and bones of Napoleon. Rarely is there grace in masculine movements, but Senator Knox has it. He is elegant in manner, apparel and conversation. But there is quite another picture. You see this tranquil and kindly man in cap and gloves driving a pair of fleet trotters. Then the placid brown eyes give back the flash of iron-shod hoofs. Again, you see him on the skirmish line of a lawsuit or in the bloody trenches of a trial, and his face, round and unwrinkled as youth, tells of war and pursuit.

Many questions were in my mind, but first of all I wanted a personal story. How did this man succeed? But his spirit was reluctant. So I touched him at a point where much of his affection is centered to bend his mood to my purpose. "You have a farm at Valley Forge," I said.

"Yes, and I have been told that it is one of the most beautiful farms in the country. For more than a century it was owned by men whose tastes could indulge them in that way of pleasure and luxury. The trees alone are worth all that I paid for it. From youth up my plan of life included a home in the country. I looked at farms in Virginia, West Virginia, New York, Maryland, and Pennsylvania, and then found just what I wanted within an hour's ride of Philadelphia. I have about 300 acres, five houses, a swimming pool, running streams, shady walks, fine trees, and views that are an eternal and ever new delight to those who are fond of scenery."

"Did you live on a farm in your youth?"

"I was born and brought up in [illegible] Brownsville, on the Monongahela River, south of Pittsburgh. My father was a banker."

"So you were the son of a rich man?"

"Far from it, I am thankful to say. Up to the time of the Civil War my father never received more than $800 a year as cashier of the Brownsville Bank. After the war his salary was never greater than $1750 a year. There were twelve children in our family, I being the eleventh, but my father, an educated man himself, sent all of us to school and kept us there. I was graduated from Mount Union College, near Alliance, Ohio, in 1872, when I was nineteen years of age."

"What influenced you to study law?"

"I can't remember the time when I didn't intend to be a lawyer. I grew up with that purpose, and started to college with the law in mind."

"Were you compelled to help pay your way into an education?"

HON. PHILANDER CHASE KNOX.

"While attending college I got ahead of my classes, and at my father's suggestion went into a printing office for a year. He had learned the printer's trade, and believed if I did so, I would know how to spell and punctuate, and would have some rudimentary and practical knowledge about composition. I got a place on the Brownsville Clipper, a weekly paper scarcely larger than a handkerchief. I learned to set type, to write the news of the town, as well as rural editorials, and to pull the old Washington hand press. I did everything from keeping the books to sweeping the floor and washing the rollers. Only one other experience of my life was more useful to me than the year I spent on the Clipper. I am sure I could go into a printing office today and set type."

"Where did you read law?"

"In Pittsburgh, with H. B. Swope, one of the most successful and eminent men at the bar of Western Pennsylvania. After I graduated from college I obtained a clerkship in the Brownsville Bank. My father had died, and what property he left went to my mother. It was necessary for me to go to work. I remained in the bank a year, received $700 and saved $600, which was enough to pay my way into my profession. I studied and lived on $25 a month for two years. I sought a place in the bank to earn money, but, better than money, I entered into the most valuable experience of my life. I learned how to meet business men, all about bookkeeping and commercial paper, and how and why notes and drafts go to protest. After I began to practice law I never had to call on a bookkeeper to explain entries, trial balances, or the technical details of his accounts to me. I could study a set of books and understand them. Every young lawyer can't be a clerk in a bank, but he should obtain a thorough knowledge of the underlying principles of business and of bookkeeping. The more he knows about such things the better."

"Is there any advantage with the boy who is poor?"

"Yes, but it is hard to make him believe that he has been favored by circumstances. I am well pleased that I had to work and that I narrowly missed being the son of a rich man. My grandfather, a Scotch-Irish Episcopalian, joined the Methodist society within his own denomination. Coming to this country, he was sent into Western Pennsylvania, Eastern Ohio and Virginia to preach. He rode circuit until he was eighty years old, exhorting and doing much good. The first Methodist church in Pittsburgh was built with funds which he collected. I am told he even did some of the work of construction with his own hands. He was an economical and prudent man, and in course of time saved a little money. There was a farm across the river from Pittsburgh and some village lots in Ohio. My grandfather bought the lots, and they are about as valuable today, I suppose, as they were then. The city of Allegheny was built on the farm. I have often thought that my grandfather left me a better legacy than he imagined. I am satisfied that it was well I learned the printer's trade, that my expenses at college were no more than $350 a year, and that I earned the money with which to study law."

"When did you become Andrew Carnegie's attorney?"

"I never was his personal lawyer. I had known Henry C. Frick from boyhood and through him was made attorney for the Carnegie Steel Company."

"Is there business for all young lawyers who come into the profession each year?"

"If they are worthy, yes. My observation may be unlike that of others because I lived in one of the greatest workshops in the world. In Pittsburgh there have been plenty of opportunities for good men of all trades and professions. I think it must be so elsewhere. A lawyer need not be a genius; indeed, it is not necessary for him to be brilliant. But he is obliged to be industrious and to like his calling. The law is in the books. He is compelled to go there to find it; that means work. The law found, he must know how to apply it."

"But isn't that genius?"

"I should call it common sense. In my own experience, we are always looking for reliable, capable men and boys. I have seen boys made clerks, then helped along as students, and finally given places as assistants in our office; but they were good boys, who had to be told only once how to do a thing and who reached a point where they could and did anticipate our wants.

"When a strange young lawyer came to us as an assistant I called him in and gave him the rules of the office. I would tell him to ingratiate himself into the confidence and esteem of our clients. 'Act,' I would say, 'just as if you expected to remain here a year or two, and then go away and take all of our business with you.' That requirement was sound all around. It was good for the young man, good for our clients, and good for us. 'Furthermore,' I would add, 'act as if you knew more law than any man in the office.' Thus, I got relief from pressure and small matters. If one of our assistants would hesitate and say, 'I am not sure about that; we'll go in and see Mr. Knox,' and kept it up, he lost his job. When I took the office of Attorney-General I found that the demand for trustworthy and competent men was as great in Washington as it had been in Pittsburgh."

"A lawyer in private practice, you suddenly change the whole way of your life and entered public office. What impressed you most in your new relations?"

"I am glad to answer that question. That which impressed me more than anything else was the zeal, integrity, industry, and unselfishness of all our public officials, high and low; judges, members of Congress, and clerks."

"But the Senate is much censured these days?"

"I am now a Senator and don't feel qualified to discuss that body, but the Senate is always liable to do things which are not popular. That is its constitutional function—to stand between the people, when they are unwise or hasty, and their own interests. In the Senate the nation 'stops, looks and listens.'"

"You are not afraid of Socialism?"

"Not at all. The government was built on a rock, and the storms and thunders of those who seek to move it or tear it down will come to nothing. I have boundless faith in the good sense and patriotism of the American people. After a question has been fully and intelligently argued they will decide wisely. Safe as we are, however, we must meet all dangers and fight them. It will not do to trust to the blowing out of the storm. Whenever attacked and wherever attacked, our institutions must be promptly and vigorously defended. Socialism should be answered and so should every other evil doctrine. Crooked thinking is not confined to any one class in America. So wisdom should be alert and energetic, as it is easier to control a rivulet than a river."

"You declined to go on the Supreme bench of the United States, and might have been a member of McKinley's first Cabinet. Had you any special reason for not accepting public office in 1897?"

"Well," Senator Knox replied with a smile, "I hadn't bought my farm at that time you know, and I thought I had better be forehanded against the day when I did buy it. Speaking now as an agriculturist, and I have no other business, I want to say that I fully indorse my earlier judgment."

Hydrophobia from Scratch.

It is an erroneous notion that hydrophobia appears only in consequence of biting, or more rarely in consequence of licking surface wounds. There is also a third and easy mode of contamination—by scratching. Dr. Remlinger of the Institute of Bacteriology, Constantinople, has just published several observations that establish the existence of such an origin of the hydrophobic infection. This origin is easily explained. A certain number of animals (the dog and the cat in particular) have, in the normal state, a habit of licking their paws. It has been proved that the saliva of rabid animals is virulent severel days before the appearance of the first symptoms of hydrophobia. When the disease is declared, a new factor intervenes. The rabid animal scatters on the ground saliva that, especially if it be chained up or confined in a close place, soils its paws and its claws. On the other hand, the scratch lays bare numerous nervous fibres upon which the poison is very easily sown. Every person scratched by an animal rabid or suspected of being so should be inoculated by the Pasteur method with as little delay as possible.

Rocky on Botany.

Senator Dolliver of Iowa is credited with knowing a good many things, but as a friend said of him once, "he is rocky on botany." This fact came to light when he was stumping the State with Senator Clapp. At a Swedish settlement some one handed up a splendid bunch of dahlias to the platform. Mr. Dolliver turned to Clapp and whispered: "What are these flowers, anyhow?" "American Beauties," replied the other instantly. Dolliver was not altogether sure even then, so he made no special reference to the flowers, suspecting that Clapp did not know any more about botany then he did. It was fortunate that he was thus careful, for the dahlia is almost a sacred flower among the Swedes.

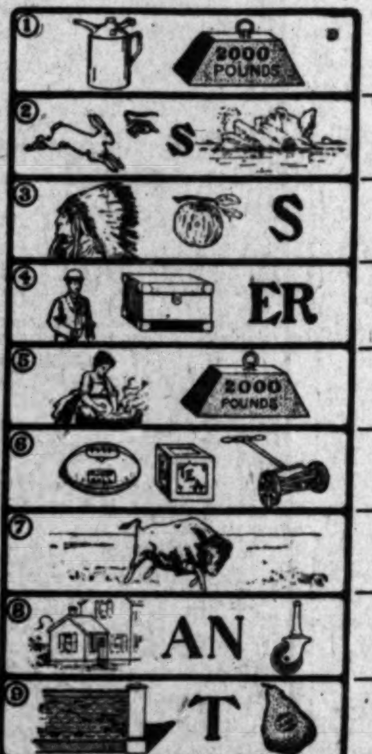
Before answering this advertisement, if there is the least doubt in your mind as to the genuineness of the same, we want you to write to the persons whose names we publish here. Surely, this is a very honorable record for a magazine publisher to have, and we are proud of it.



Names of Cities

Now, for the particulars of our offer. In this advertisement, we publish 9 rebus pictures, each one spelling the name of a city located in the United States. Can you name them correctly? If you can, fill in the slip and send it to us, together with a fifty word article on the city No. 1. We will give $300 in cash to the party whose list is absolutely correct and whose article is best, in the estimation of the committee; for the next best answer $150 in cash; for the next best answer $75 in cash; for the next best answer $50 in cash; for the next best answer $25 in cash; for the ten next best answers $10 in cash each; for the ten next best answers $5 in cash each; for the fifty next best answers $2 in cash each; for the 100 next best answers $1 in cash each, and every one naming four or more of these cities correctly will receive a beautiful photo engraving of that magnificent frontier scene (by R. Farrington Elwell) entitled "The Overland Stage," which created such a furore when it appeared in the Brown Book, November, 1902. This handsome picture shows a band of Indians attacking the Overland Stage, and is a masterpiece. It is a photo on heavy plate paper suitable for framing, size 11x14. Someone is going to win these prizes, and it may be you; anyway, it does not cost you any money to try it.

These rebus pictures are not as easy as they appear, and it will take a great deal of brain work to solve the nine cities correctly. Everyone will have an equal chance. In the event of a tie, in each case, the prize will be divided.

We are noted for our munificent prizes, and while everyone cannot possibly win the largest prizes, everyone has the same opportunity. The matter is taken entirely out of our hands by the committee. They are given quarters by themselves so that they will not be hampered by any interference or any of our clerks in the impartial selection of the winners. Surely, nothing could be fairer.

Remember, you have an opportunity to win and secure from us, without any monetary expense or any other condition whatsoever on your part, any of the above mentioned prizes: There is positively no deception. We believe we are the only publishing firm in the world who have given away the largest cash prizes in contests arranged by a single firm; therefore, don't throw this advertisement aside and say, "Oh, pshaw! I have answered puzzles before and received nothing for it," for, if you do, you will regret it. Some one will win these priezs, and it may be you; anyway, there is no expense on your part—we don't want any money or exact any agreement or promise whatever from you, and, surely the prizes are worth trying for. I wish we had space to publish the many nice things which our contestants and committee say about the fair manner in which all our prizes have been awarded. I can assure you that they are very flattering, but nothing more than the truth, for we don't want anyone to say anything but what is absolutely true concerning the dealings which they have with us.

Candidly, do you know of any firm who have made such liberal offers in such a fair manner? Of course you have no assurance except our word that we are financially able to carry out the promises which we have made. If you have the least doubt, look us up, and you will find that we have lived up to every promise we have made, and we have thousands upon thousands of letters from prize winners on file at our office. We are a responsible company, and we number among our stockholders, bank presidents, bank cashiers, lawyers, doctors, army officers, merchants, and prominent people in every station of life, and our reputation for fair dealing is such that we cannot afford to have a single dissatisfied contestant. Our sole object in giving away such princely prizes is to lead our competitors, and we will leave no stone unturned to accomplish, by honest methods only, our object.

Every one in this contest will receive honest treatment, and you will have the same opportunity whether you live in California, Canada or Massachusetts—distance positively makes no difference, providing you live in the United States or Canada; persons living outside of this territory will not be permitted to compete for these prizes. No officer or employee of this company nor any one connected directly or indirectly with them will be permitted to compete; therefore, send your answer to us at once. This competition is open to every person in the United States and Canada. You need not be a subscriber to compete. Address us this way—

JUVENILE BOOKS.

Fable-Allegory.

TWO-LEGS. By Carl Ewald. Translated from the Danish by Alexander Teixeira de Mattos. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. (Price, $1.25.)

"It was once upon a time, many, many years ago.

"And it was in warm lands, where the sun shines stronger than here, and the rain falls closer, and all animals and all plants thrive better, because the winter does not stunt their growth.

"The forest was full of life and noise.

"The flies buzzed, the sparrow ate the flies and the hawk ate the sparrow. The bees crept into the flowers in search of honey, the lion roared and the birds sang, the brook rippled and the grass grew. The trees stood and rustled, with their roots sucked sap from the earth. The flowers were radiant and flagrant.

"Suddenly it became wonderfully still.

"It was as though all held their breaths at once, and listened and stared. The rustling of the trees ceased. The violet woke from her dreams and looked up in wonder. The lion raised his head and stood with one paw unlifted. The stag stopped grazing, the eagle rested high in the air on his wings, the little mouse ran out of his hole and pricked up his ears.

"There came two through the forest who were different from the others, two whom no one had ever seen before.

"They walked erect. Their foreheads were high; their eyes steady. They went hand in hand, and looked around them as though they did not know where they were.

"These were Two-legs and his wife; thus came they into the forest. And all the animals wondered over them and discussed them. They were uncertain whether thy should admit the newcomers as neighbors, or destroy them; but the two walked the earth so proudly and fearlessly that even the lion thought they must possess some secret power, even though in both teeth and claws they appeared weak; so he skulked in he distance, and got out of their way. Moreover, although some of the animals had a premonition of evil, Two-legs and his wife lived upon fruits and seemed harmless when unmolested, so it was finally decided to let them alone.

"But by and by the two new animals began to drive the others out of the fruit trees, and when fruit was scarce, tried fish, and drove the otter out of the river. Then a child Two-legs was born, and when it rained and the little one cried with the cold, Mrs. Two-legs envied the sheep their warm coat, and Two-legs, getting a new and original idea after much pondering, killed the sheep with a stone and took its hide to wrap about the child. But in skinning the sheep, Two-legs and his wife used their teeth, and the taste of flesh so delighted them that they went on killing, and became a menace to all the other animals. Also, they later caught the sheep and the ox, and the horse, and kept them prisoners, and made friends with the dog, whom they set to guard their new servants, and, finding the grass failed them sometimes, when wanted for their animals, they settled down in one spot and gathered seed and sowed it. And they fenced in their fields from the other animals, and built shelters for their own animals and themselves. Then the forest animals again took counsel how they should kill the family of Two-legs; but they found that these creatures had grown too strong and clever for them."

Thus, in fable-allegory form, Carl Ewald tells the story of mankind, with much of the old fable writers' charm of combined simplicity, wit and fancy. The story closes with a scene, "many, many years after," in a large modern village. It is fair time, and among other sights a lion, sick, mangy and broken-spirited, is exhibited in a dirty cage by a loud-voiced showman. A tiny lapdog, covered with an embroidered rug, is shut into the room with the King of Beasts, who taunts him with his degeneration, and laughs at that of the descendants of Two-legs. "For he was lithe and slender, and fair to look upon; he was an animal. But these people here! One can hardly see a morsel of their bodies, they are so wrapped up. Two-legs could bound through the forest and climb trees; these people here can scarcely stir hand or foot. He was a fighter; and it's really amusing to watch the terror in these fellows' eyes when I get up and move to the bars, or when I roar. They shake like aspen leaves, though they know that I am only a wretched prisoner."

The book is one to fascinate the child of imagination, but it ought hardly to be classed among the books for children, since it possesses a literary value of style and content that rank it among books interesting to all ages.

Travel.

IN EASTERN WONDERLANDS. By Charlotte Chaffee Gibson. Little, Brown & Co., Boston.

This is an account of a trip through the Orient made by three children, who begin with Japan and close with Egypt, taking in between these China, Ceylon, India and the Red Sea. The story of the journey is entertainingly told, in a style suited to girls and boys of 10 to 15.

A HUNT ON SNOW SHOES. By Edward S. Ellis. The John C. Winston Company, Philadelphia.

Two boys, Clarence and Sydney Landon, skating up the Kennebec, are pursued by wolves; escape at first by speed and dodging; are finally overtaken, and in great danger through an accident to the skate of one; are saved by the intervention of a great bear, who becomes a greater menace to them than the wolves; are finally rescued through the timely arrival of a French-Canadian hunter, whom they are come to visit with intent of a moose hunt. The moose hunt takes place with new perils to life and limb, and the boys meet with a more remarkable adventure than that of the wolves, for they are carried off by a wild man called by all people of the forest The Great Moose, and, escaping from him, they fall into the hands of a band of desperadoes. They are rescued, and the wild man, a maniac, recovers his reason through a blow. The book is a bit sensational, it will be seen, and resorts to some good old sensational devices. There are others not yet noted—the cave behind the waterfall, for instance, taking the center of the stage, toward the end of the book, as the headquarters of the robber band. However, the tale is well told from the boy's viewpoint, and will, no doubt, find him an appreciative reader.

Capital and Labor.

PELHAM AND HIS FRIENDS. By Allen French. Little, Brown & Co., Boston.

Allen French's plot is quite as stirring and adventurous as that of Mr. Ellis, with the added advantage that it is far more probable in its main features, although it, also, has some improbable elements.

The story is that of the young son of a mill owner and the son of a mill operative who are friends. The scene is a small village, where fair treatment on the part of employer and su- [illegible] have secured content- [illegible] is destroyed by entrance [illegible] ntent, who brings about this crisis the boy of the people proves his efficiency. Abused by his supposed father and threatened with withdrawal from school and employment in the mill, he has been given, at this point, a letter left for such an emergency by the wife of the man he calls father, on her death-bed. It tells him that he is of unknown parentage, and not even adopted. He takes refuge with an old dyer, who teaches him the trade; and this, during the strike, he plies so skillfully that the mill is enabled to keep on running through his aid. His foster father, the dyer, turns out in the end to be indeed his father—the event taxing the older reader's credulity a little, though it perhaps will not trouble the imaginative mind of youth. The story as a whole is a good piece of work, teaching, moreover, excellent lessons in real manliness—in self-dependence, honesty and fairness.

A Girl's Story.

ROBERTA AND HER BROTHERS. By Alice Ward Bailey. Little, Brown & Co., Boston.

"Roberta and Her Brothers" is a vast improvement over Alice Ward Bailey's "Sage Brush Parson." It is an exceptionally well written story of a very real and natural yet an unusual girl, who lives an ordinary, every-day life in an uncommon and fine way. In fact, she is troubled with the "vice of altruism." No better or more interesting book for girls has appeared this season. It can be heartily recommended as a Christmas book.

For Younger Readers.

THE POND IN THE MARSHY MEADOW. By Anne Helena Woodruff. The Saalfield Publishing Company, Akron, O. (Price, $1.50.)

Just an ordinary pond in an ordinary marshy meadow it was, to all appearances; but every child knows that all the fees and elves and nixies and pixies in elfenland may haunt the borders and the depths of such pond. Something like this was the case with the pond of the story, at any rate; and then, besides, there was Mrs. Bullfrog and Bobby Bullfrog, Mr. Snapping Turtle, the family of Water Spiders, the wonderful contortionist Eels, and many other interesting acquaintances that the Boy and the Girl made at about the same time that they made each other's acquaintance by means of the pond. The story is prettily told and artistically illustrated, making one of the most attractive of the gift books that have appeared up to the present.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.

A Curious Compilation.

HISTORIA AMORIS. By Edgar Saltus. Mitchell Kennerley, New York. (Price, $1.50.)

Edgar Saltus has amused himself by collecting out of history some of the most famous episodes of love, and these he has compiled into a book, with some preliminary notes and some general study of the history of love of which these episodes marked the steps. The study is interesting, in parts brilliant. The opening is characteristic: "The first thing created was light," says Mr. Saltus. "Then life came, then death. In between was fear. But not love. Love was absent. In Eden there was none. Adam and Eve emerged there adult. The phases of the delicate fever which others in paradise since experienced, left them unaffected. Instead of the reluctances and attractions, the hesitancies and aspirations, the preliminary and common conflagrations which are the beginnings, as they are the sacraments, of love, abruptly they were one. They were married before they were mated.

"The union, entirely allegoric—a Persian conceit—differed, otherwise, only in the poetry of the accessories from that which elsewhere actually occurred.

"Primitive man was necessarily speechless, probably simian, and certainly hideous. Women, if possible, more hideous still, were joined to him momentarily and immediately forgot. Ultimately, into the desolate poverty of the rudimentary brain there crept a novelty. The novelty was an idea. Women were detained, kept in lairs, made to serve there. Further novelties ensuing, creatures that had learned from birds to talk passed from animality. Subsequent progress originated in a theory that they were clearly entitled to whatever was not taken away from them. From that theory all institutions proceed, primarily that of family.

"In the beginning of things, woman was common property. With individual ownership came the necessity of defense. Man defended woman against even herself. He beat her, stoned her, killed her. From the massacre of myriads constancy resulted. With it came the home; a hut in the forest, a fort on a hill, in the desert a tent, yet, wherever situated, surrounded by foes."

Then Mr. Saltus sketches the status of women in Babylon and the early East, in Judea, in Greece, in Rome, in Europe of the Middle ages; and he closes the book with a chapter on "The Law of Attraction," with much quoting of Schopenhauer (who was a bachelor, by the way.)

One notable feature of the book is the quoting of the song of Solomon in a form based on Renan's as a love poem. Mr. Saltus has also gathered much interesting material from many sources under one cover, yet his book does not dip very deep into the life of either Greece or Rome, and his particular citations from the Middle Ages, though they are famous examples (that of Heloise and Abelard, for instance) are not more typical than many others. To do Mr. Saltus justice, however, he writes well of the customs of chivalry, of Dante, and Petrarch, and Boccaccio, of Diane de Poitiers and other famous lovers and loved. If he has not gone very deep, he has chosen some good illustrations and made interesting what he has given us.

FICTION.

Conan Doyle.

SIR NIGEL. By A. Conan Doyle. McClure, Phillips & Co., New York. (Price, $1.50.)

A new historic romance by Sir A. Conan Doyle is one of the leading books of the season. The scene is laid in England in the reign of Edward II, and from the historic viewpoint the work is well done. As a romance, too, the story will rank well, also, although it cannot take its place among the great works of historic fiction. Indeed, just why Sir Conan Doyle should elect to regard this type of fiction as his province, readers will still wonder; he is so eminently well equipped for writing tales of quite another sort—for instance, modern imaginative romance in which pathological types make sensational and stirring plots; something, say, on the order of his "Firm of Girdlestone," written with the author's now more matured and finished literary powers.

However, he has preferred historic fiction, and there is no doubt that he does well in this field. "Sir Nigel" is a tale of rapid action, of chivalry and gentle faith and true and noble love. The hero, whose name lends title to the book, is the young son of an old house fallen on evil fortunes and left without wealth, only a few old retainers still clinging to the service of the young master. The neighboring monastery has eaten up some of his patrimony, and the monks harbor little affection for the high-spirited youth. One of the best scenes in the book is the opening adventure, in which Nigel rescues the affrighted fathers from an angry stallion and receives a present of the animal by the malicious friars, who hope that he will be dashed to pieces by it. Instead, he proves himself its master, and gains a noble servant. Honored, shortly after, by a visit from his king, he engages for active service and rides forth as knight errant, swearing to do three deeds at arms that shall prove him worthy his armor and the gentle lady that he loves. He falls on some stirring adventures and acquits himself in a manner befitting his lineage.

The book is finely illustrated by The Kinneys. One suspects, however, that Sir Conan Doyle did not have chance of reading the proof, as one finds evident printer's errors in the use of archaic English—as, for instance, where the term "high enterprise" has evidently been substituted for "high emprise"—and in a few other similar cases.

Mining Camp Tale.

BOB HAMPTON OF PLACER. By Randall Parrish. A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago. (Price, $1.50.)

This is a fairly good mining camp story, sensational, and not of a high grade of literary workmanship, but full of action and no doubt likely to interest those who like the book of episode without being unduly critical as to probability or style. The best thing in the book is the opening incident, in which the hero rescues a girl out of the midst of an attacking band of Indians, by climbing an apparently unscalable cliff with her in the night. The fight leaves her without relatives, and he entrusts her to the care of others, as he is adjudged unworthy of being her guardian and accepts the judgment. However, he later abandons his own trade of gambler, after having won a fortune in a single game; and in subsequent events he proves his worthiness to the girl's satisfaction and turns out one who she is by blood in duty bound to love. The book does not equal Mr. Parrish's best earlier work.

—o—

Again the Working Woman.

RING IN THE NEW. By Richard Whiteing. The Century Company, New York. (Price, $1.50.)

This is one of the many attempts to picture new conditions of city life with the business woman as its center—an English picture, this time. The writer is a man of middle age, either not very much in sympathy with the new woman whose entry he rings, or with no deep insight into conditions. The story is not well put together and in attempting realism, falls into photographic methods that are a little vulgar as well as superficial.

HUMOR.

Sewell Ford.

SHORTY M'CABE. By Sewell Ford. Mitchell Kennerley, New York. (Price, $1.50.)

Sewell Ford has given us one of the best pieces of recent humor in "Shorty McCabe." Shorty, the genial ex-prize fighter, is a delight from the beginning to the end of the book—entirely a gentleman in the best sense of the word, clean, brave, chivalrous, not sentimental, yet with sentiment enough in the right conditions, moreover, keen and quick of thought, and gifted with a power of picturesque self-expression, equaled only by Henry Wallace Phillips's Red Saunders and George Horace Lorimer's merchant.

"Shorty" tells his own story and charms in the telling, even as does Red. He has been knocked out fairly and does not deny the fact, neither does he care to exhibit himself on the stage; so he takes to training "comers," incidentally to training a few others who take a fancy to him, and thus he falls in with a number of wealthy young patrons with whom he sees adventures of all kinds, the interest of which is greatly enhanced by his relation of them. There is nothing in the book, for instance, more entertaining than the opening chapter, the ex-pugilist's story of how he spent a night in the country where the quiet was so great that every noise in the town disturbed him, and how he became so interested in a discussion on the next street, as to the date of Hen Dorset's tragic death, that he arose and followed the disputants, who dressed and went out to get evidence on the subject. In the end, the whole village turned out to help settle the question, with various resultant adventures. This story reminds one more of Mark Twain than anything by another than the great humorist himself that the writer of this review can recall. The method and the character of the humor are Mr. Clemens's own, though the picturesque vocabulary belongs to Mr. Ford. The other stories of the book are equally good along a somewhat different line. Every man who keeps a humorous library for use in dark days ought to add this book to it.

In Convenient Form.

THE PETS. By Henry Wallace Phillips. McClure, Phillips & Co., New York. (Price, 50 cents.)

Nothing that Henry Wallace Phillips has written has been received with more heartfelt hilarity than his story of Red Saunders's pets—the wild cat, the bull snake and the hawk—and of the little encounter they had with the Englishman's dog. This characteristic story, with the original illustrations, McClure, Phillips & Co. issue under separate linen cover for the holidays. Nothing could make a better gift for an invalid or a man troubled with the blues; and this story also belongs in every complete library of first-class humor.

Modern Children.

THE PETTISON TWINS. By Marion McClure, Phillips & Co., New York. ($1.50.)

Those who have made the acquaintance of the Pettison Twins through the medium of the magazine in which they made their début, will be glad to see their adventures collected into a volume. Except for "The Madness of Phillip" and a few other of the stories by the same author, this is the best humorous study of the modern child that has been written, and particularly amusing and gratifying to the observer of some of the misapplications of modern ideas of child training. Poor little Rex and Regina are reared with unflinching determination on the Daily Morning Orange, the Daily Nap, in the fear of Microbes and according to each new rule prescribed by the Home Messenger—but not with any display of unseemly, doting affection; and the sympathizing reader will delight in their innocent transgressions and naughty rebellions. The volume is illustrated by Fanny Cory.

PEOPLE AND THINGS LITERARY.

In spite of the multiplicity of books on German history and politics, it would be difficult to name any single volume which gives a comprehensive account of the German Empire as it now is and its present political, social and economic tendencies. Such is the aim indicated by Dr. Burt Estes Howard in his book on "The German Empire," just published by the Macmillan Company. Dr. Howard has been for many years a close student of German life and character, and his book is the outcome of direct observation and careful investigation of original sources.

The story that gives its title to Jack London's recently issued volume, "Moon-Face," recalls one of the most remarkable coincidences in recent literary history. Mr. London himself tells the story in these words: "Some years ago, while I was in England, a story of mine ('Moon-Face,') was published in the San Francisco Argonaut. In The Century of the same date was published a story by Frank Norris. While these two stories were quite different in manner of treatment, they were patently the same in foundation and motive. At once the newspapers paralleled our stories. The explanation was simple: Norris and I had read the same newspaper account, and proceeded to exploit it. But the fun did not stop there. Somebody dug up a Black Cat, published a year previous, in which was a similar story by another man who used the same foundation and motive. Then Chicago hustled around and resurrected a story that had been published some months before the Black Cat story, and that was the same in foundation and motive. Of course, all these different writers had chanced upon the same newspaper article."

Frederic Harrison, the distinguished English philosopher and historian, whose "Memories and Thoughts" is just out, lacks only a few days of being 75 years old. For more than fifty years Harrison has been the friend of nearly every distinguished leader of English thought, and has been associated with every important philosophical and scientific movement of the period. No one living has a richer fund of reminiscence, and his mature judgment on the men and things with which he has been associated cannot fail to be stimulating and suggestive.

In his forthcoming "Reminiscences of Henry Irving," Bram Stoker, who was for many years the actor's friend and manager, tells an amusing story of a dubious compliment the actor once received in Belfast. The occasion was a dinner party, and it is charitable to suppose that the Irish gentleman who uttered it was a trifle befuddled by the good cheer. In descanting on the many virtues of the guest of the evening, he mentioned the excellence of his moral nature and rectitude of his private life in these terms: "Mr. Irving, sir, is a gentleman what leads a life of unbroken blemish."

Sewell Ford, whose brilliant stories of Cedarton folks will be soon published under the title of "Trugate of Mogador," has spent many years in active newspaper work, as reporter and editor, in Boston, Baltimore and New York. For some time he has been a member of the editorial staff of the American Press Association. During the past four or five years he has written much short fiction for the magazines. Mr. Ford was born in South Levant, Me., but he has lived little in the Pine Tree State. His early school days were spent in Cheboygan, Mich., an inconspicuous lumber town on the Straits of Mackinac. They ended when he finished a four years' Latin course at the High School in Haverhill, Mass.

No more stalwart and vigorous American patriot has ever lived than the author of "The Man Without a Country." With Dr. Hale the discovery of a lack in anything pertaining to his native land is the beginning of an effort to supply the want. This militant patriotism was undoubtedly his prime motive in writing his "Tarry at Home Travels," which has just appeared. Dr. Hale has noticed the plenitude of books of travel in Europe and Asia, and the dearth of good works of the kind about our own country. In his "Tarry at Home Travels" he urges his readers to discover America, and conducts them in his delightful informal fashion to some famous historic spots, chiefly in New England and in and about Washington. The book is illustrated with many photographs and reproductions of old prints and engravings.

NEW MAGAZINES.

The American Civil War will be treated in the Century during 1907 in three short serials. Ellis Paxson Oberholtzer, Ph.D., author of "Robert Morris, Patriot and Financier," etc., will tell "How the Civil War Was Financed;" Gen. O. O. Howard, the only surviving commander of a separate army during the Civil War, has written for the Century his personal recollections of some of the leading men of those days; and there will be an account of "Lincoln in the Telegraph Office," by an operator in the War Department telegraph office, where Lincoln spent many hours daily during the anxious hours of the Civil War.

The Popular Science Monthly for October opens with an article by President David Starr Jordan of Stanford University, entitled "The Earthquake Rift of 1906." This is one of the most authoritative studies that has been made of the causes of the recent California earthquake, and has the advantage of being written in the clear and interesting way that may always be expected from President Jordan. The article is very extensively illustrated. The second of a series of articles by M. Poincaré, probably the greatest of mathematicians now living, treats the measurement of time. Prof. E. O. Sisson, of the University of Washington, gives an account of the extent to which Francis Bacon anticipated the modern university. Prof. Edwin W. Bowen of Randolph-Macon College, writes on differences in the English language as used in Great Britain and here, a subject that is timely, in view of the widespread discussion of changes in spelling. Dr. J. Madison Taylor of Philadelphia discusses the attitude of the parents, teachers and physicians toward boys who are difficult to manage. Dr. R. M. Ogden, of the University of Tennessee, describes the conditions of genius from a psychological point of view. Dr. Mary Mills Patrick, president of the Girls' College at Constantinople, contributes an article entitled "The Birth of the Idea of Spirit in Greek Thought." Prof. Vernon L. Kellogg, of Stanford University, explains in an illustrated article the scientific aspects of Luther Burbank's work. There are shorter articles on the effects of immigration on homicide, on the British Medical Association and the University of Toronto, and on the national pure food law.

In an article on "Commercial Panics, Past and Future," in the October Atlantic, Alexander D. Noyes makes the point that the actual germs of a panic are to be looked for in certain of the conditions that attend a wave of prosperity. If this is true, then there is an especial timeliness in making such an an inquiry—just now; and since the author is financial editor of the Evening Post—"the financial man's newspaper"—there is some reason to believe that he knows whereof he speaks. At all events, his article is sure to attract the attention of intelligent business men everywhere. Mr. Noyes shows exactly what the steps are which in the past have led up to financial crises like those of '57, '73 and '93, and then he brings out the parallel—and it is a startling one. He does not make prophecies; but he utters a warning Whether or not panics can be prevented, it is at least certain that precautions may and should be taken which will greatly lessen their severity.

As every one knows, however, not long since, the fair Camille left the Vaudeville for a space and soon afterward promised to marry the eldest son of Lord Aberdare, and so, considering the amount of attention the thing attracted, it is not surprising that when the "Gibson girl" returned to the "Belle of Mayfair" the management of the Vaudeville advertised her reappearance far and wide.

They gave her a new song to sing, too, besides putting her name on the bills in fat black type, and all of a sudden the public learned that these various attentions to a lesser member of the cast of "The Belle" had put its star's nose badly out of joint. Now, moreover, Miss May has left the Vaudeville altogether, while Charles Frohman, standing by his star, has withdrawn from his association with the Gattis, who run the theater, and generally there has been the dickens to pay over the whole affair.

Now, however, for the sequel, which is infinitely more dramatic than the original episode, and, incidentally no end of a feather in the cap of the astute managers of the deserted Vaudeville. In fact, these gentlemen look like scoring hugely over the whole affair, for not to mention that their playhouse is now being packed to its full capacity to see Camille Clifford—thanks to the additional boom thus given this actress—the management has just brought off a real master stroke by engaging Phyllis Dare to play the star part recently relinquished in dudgeon by the indignant Edna May.

And who is Phyllis Dare? Well, she is the young woman of 16 whose appearance (while not perhaps in the best of taste) is perhaps more calculated to pack a London theater than that of any other English player, for her name and fame it was that were most directly concerned in one of the most sensational libel suits which have been brought in England in the course of the last twenty-five years. Perhaps it is needless to add that the case in question is that which was recently brought by Seymour Hicks against a defamer who called himself Dare, and who posed as a brother of the two famous sisters, Zena and Phyllis, and if so, it will be needless likewise to particularize as to the heartles allegations which were made against the pretty child who lately appeared at the Vaudeville as the youthful heroine of "The Catch of the Season."

As readers will already have learned, the allegations were proved to have not a shadow of foundation and if there is any one who is sure of a warmer ovation from a London theater audience than Hicks got when he made his reappearance in "The Beauty of Bath," the other night, it is pretty Phyllis Dare, who, during the time that her name was being dragged in the mud, was at school in Belgium finishing the education which was interrupted by her brief career before the London footlights.

From school, however, the Vaudeville management has tempted Phyllis and in about a week's time she is to take over the part in "The Belle of Mayfair" lately filled by Edna May, and meanwhile Camille Clifford's part in that attraction is being considerably strengthened, and other measures being taken to boom the tuneful musical show. And meanwhile what of Edna May, who has surrendered a salary of (she says) $1000 a week for the sake of spiting some one else's pretty face? Well, Miss May, who is now at Brighton, is to be starred again, pretty soon, by the loyal Mr. Frohman in another musical play which will be called "Nellie Neale" and presumably will continue her successful career in the metropolis. All things considered, however, one rather suspects that if Edna had it to do all over again, she wouldn't, little having come of her "ructions" except additional advertising and general eclat for her fair Gibsonian rival, and what is apparently going to be the chance of a lifetime for plucky little Phyllis Dare.

A Romance of the Desert.

STORY OF A HOOSIER YOUTH WHO BRAVED FEARFUL ODDS AND BECAME A MILLIONAIRE.

By Ira E. Bennett.

TWIN FALLS (Idaho) Oct. 10.—Let those who believe that the sagebrush desert is void of romance and the castellated gorges of the Snake River mere monuments of death learn the story of Perrine, the Hoosier of Blue Lakes. Let them contemplate the struggle of one man with nature and gather from his conquest the lesson of the winning of the West.

Ira B. Perrine is now in his early forties. He is slight, wiry, blue-eyed, reticent and modest, but always polite to the stranger. He is famed from Ogden to Portland for his optimism. "Nil desperandum" is his rule of life, and nothing delights him more than a wrestle with brute nature. He was born in Lebanon, Ind., and came west before he was 18. He drifted into Idaho, and one of his first jobs was that of chambermaid in a livery stable in a new mining camp. He cleaned up around the stable one day and set fire to the refuse. While he was at lunch the fire was communicated to the stable, and from the stable to the town. In an hour the town was off the map and Perrine was in the grip of a Vigilance Committee, which made prompt arrangements to hang him. A friend appeared who told how tidy the lad had been about the stable, and how even older men might have made such a slight mistake as to set fire to a town. The miners were charmed with the lawyer's eloquence and untied the rope that bound Perrine. His rescuer is now a millionaire, living in Salt Lake City.

Perrine tried prospecting, and failed. He went against railroading, and fortune did not smile. He floated around at various jobs, but made no headway. Finally, in company with an old prospector who had made money in the Boise placers before they petered out, he struck out across the desert for the Snake River Cañon, below Shoshone Falls. They arrived at the lip of the cañon, and beheld below them, smiling under the sky, two blue lakes in a pocket of the gorge that rose 500 feet upward to where they stood.

DID NOT FIND TRAIL.

Perrine and his partner prospected along the edge of the precipice for a trail. They did not find any. Below them ran the Snake River, with a fringe of green along its banks, and the old prospector thought he saw a fortune in its sands. Perrine was captivated by the blue lakes, and decided on the instant to locate them for his home.

The cliffs lined the cañon of the Snake for miles. Above them was Shoshone Falls, roaring like Niagara. Below them stretched an endless desert. There was nothing to do but to lower themselves and their plunder over the cliffs. They rigged up a tackle, and Perrine dropped, as if out of the heavens, into the gorge. The old miner sent down pine boards for a sluice box, grub and their extra clothing. They turned their burros loose. The old argonaut slid down the rope. Another descent was made in the same way, to a spot where the drift rock had made a sliding bank. Thus they reached the banks of the river. The old miner went down the river, with his boards which cost him $5 each, and disappeared. Perrine, catching his extra grub and clothing wrote out location notices and stuck them upon the rocks. He claimed everything in sight. Then began his twenty-years' struggle.

The warmth of the valley adjoining the river, protected as it was by the giant wall of the cañon, the abundance of water, and the character of the soil, convinced Perrine that he could make a success of fruit-growing. What did it matter to him that there was nobody within reach to buy his fruit? What did he care for the little obstacle of cliffs? He swam the river and explored the face of the cañon wall. Making his way upward upon drift rock, he gained a place 300 feet above the river. There a two-foot ledge jutted out, skirting the face of the cliff for a mile. He walked along, literally among the eagles, with death below and solitude all around. The ledge ended at a little break which was partially filled with drift. Up this he climbed, and found himself upon the plateau. Before him stretched the desert, covered with sage brush. Walking a hundred feet away from the rim of the cañon, he turned back, and it was as completetly obscured as if it had never been. His gaze leaped across it to the desert upon the other side, and but for the distant thunder of Shoshone Falls, far upstream, he might have imagined that he had merely dreamed of precipices and foaming waters.

DRIVER THOUGHT HIM CRAZY.

Perrine was headed for Boise City, with the object of recording his land entry and buying seed. Boise City was away to the northward, a week's journey on foot. He did not have money enough to buy a seat in the stage. Gaining the stage road, he begged the driver to take him to Boise, promising to pay his fare when his ship came in. The driver refused. Perrine stood there, a stripling, almost in tears, and made another plea. He told of his ambition to start an orchard in the cañon.

"Well, get in," said the driver. "Any kid with as crazy a notion as that is dangerous to society. You can't be at large. Hop in, and I'll give you a lift to the insane asylum."

"Thanks," replied Perrine. "This is the only time I'll ask for a lift. I'll buy this stage one of these days, and ride in it whenever I please."

A few years later Perrine hunted up this stage coach, purchased it, and installed it on his ranch, where it is now. It would be a long story to tell of Perrine's failures in many directions. But he never failed in faith. He saw in his mind's eye a fortune, a little Garden of Eden, set between sheltering walls of lava, watered with ice-cold springs and a roaring river. He planted peach and apple trees, dug ditches, built a reservoir, opened a canal from a spring which drained the blue lakes above his farm, and did everything that Adam must have done. He was alone as Adam, and more, for no Eve was there.

Within a year or two the fruit ripened. It was then that Perrine blazed a trail along the cliffs, up which he led a single horse packed with fruit in baskets. Once, up among the eagles, his horse lurched against the cliff, struck the basket against the rocks, and found itself clutching the trail with its front feet, its hindquarters dangling above destruction. Perrine struggled to recover the animal, but it fell with a scream and was dashed to pieces on the rocks.

SHUT IN FROM WORLD.

Perrine carried his fruit out in this manner for several years, finding a market for it in villages across thirty miles of sagebrush desert. As his orchard grew larger he began to employ help, until, in picking time, he had sixty hands at work. At odd times he turned the boys to road work and with infinite labor a wagon road was blasted along the edge of the cliffs up to the rim of the cañon. It is a splendid piece of road, and will last forever. On the western rim he constructed a similar road. At the upper end of each road he placed a gate. With these gates locked he was shut in from intrusion from the world, for the great falls guarded one entrance and a roaring torrent in the lower gorge guarded the other. With the roads closed, the only way to reach Perrine ranch was in the primeval fashion adopted by its discoverer—a drop over the cliffs, at the risk of life.

In due time the little Hoosier hermit took a wife—an Idaho birl, who thought nothing of the solitude of the great cañon and the roar of the torrent. Two children were born to them, a boy and a girl. The boy died two years ago. The girl, 13 years old, is the charm of the home. She has adopted a big trout who lords it over his tribesmen in the ice-cold pool formed by the spring near the house. This big trout comes up for food and permits his little mistress to rub his sides and tickle his fins. He is a little shy with strangers, but when a morsel of food drops in the water his hunger overcomes his bashfulness and the celerity with which he darts in ahead of the ducks and gobbles the food is a wonder to behold.

NATURE IS INDULGENT.

Nature is especially indulgent with Blue Lake's ranch. The sun smiles down perpetually, the soil is the accumulation of ages of erosion, the keen winds of winter are warded off by the cliffs. In consequence, fruits of all kinds ripen to perfection there and gather a sweetness that has made them famous. Perrine sent an exhibit to Paris and was awarded the gold medal. He exhibited at the Buffalo Exposition and captured another gold medal. He was heard from at the Trans-Mississippi Exposition at Omaha and another medal was added to his collection. Finally, in St. Louis in 1904 he won the gold medal against the world for fine fruits. He shows these medals with modest pride to the few strangers who stumble upon his ranch, and then fills their buckboard with samples of the peaches that have become known throughout the world.

For nearly twenty years Perrine's nearest neighbors were thirty-five miles distant, across a waterless sagebrush plain. Now the breakers of immigration are dashing within sound sound of Shoshone Falls. Twin Falls, Idaho, a two-year-old city, with 3500 population, with a railroad and a big stone hotel, two newspapers, and so on, lies on the plain five miles from Perrine's place. The sagebrush about the town has been displaced by green alfalfa fields and orchards. Houses dot the desert in all directions, and irrigation ditches, full of water, traverse the plain. The raw land, with a water right, sells for $25.50. It is barely cleared and planted to alfalfa or fruits before it jumps to $100 and $200 an acre. The town is beginning to send out hay, fruit, butter and farm products generally. Sugar beets are being planted, and a factory is about to be erected. The desert is disappearing before the very eyes of the visitor. Th Oregon Short Line built a branch road into the country, and is planning to change its route so that Twin Falls will be on the main line. Two or three other towns have sprung up on the desert, all of them as ambitious as Chicago.

PLENTY OF ELECTRIC POWER.

Electric power to the extent of 20,000 horse power has been developed at Shoshone Falls, and poles and wires are being strung along Snake River and into Twin Falls. In a few weeks the town will be lighted and operated by Shoshone Falls. An electric railroad fourteen miles in length is being constructed, connecting the towns of Twin Falls and Buell.

The irrigation system which has worked such wonders on the desert has its beginning at Milner dam on the Snake River, about eight miles above Twin Falls, which in turn is a few miles above Shoshone Falls. Two small islands in a rocky gorge furnish an admirable dam site. The main canal leading from the dam carries 1000 second-feet of water, and smaller canals distribute the supply in all directions. Two years ago not an acre was under cultivation. Now 40,000 acres are producing crops, and next year nearly 100,000 acres will be cultivated. The Milner dam diverts sufficient water to irrigate over 200,000 acres, and the land lies there ready for the water, in a compact body.

Thirty-five miles above Milner dam, at Minidoka, the United States government has built a dam a mile long, raising the height of the water forty-seven feet and providing for the irrigation of another body of 130,000 acres. Every acre of this land has been entered upon by homesteaders under the reclamation act. The sagebrush desert is dotted for miles with little cabins. The dam will be completed this month. The canals are a little behind hand, but it is expected that water will be turned in early next year, sufficient to irrigate 60,000 acres. The settlers are mostly from the Middle West and from the higher-priced irrigated lands in Washington, California, and Utah. Few men in the East have ever heard of Minidoka, and fewer still have the enterprise of these Westerners, who are quick to grasp the chance to make a comfortable fortune.

WHERE SETTLERS PROFIT.

The Minidoka "project" is expected to be a great success, both from the government's and the settler's point of view. It will cost, completed, $2,540,000. This includes the cost of maintenance for ten years when, under the law, the system will be turned over to the settlers, who will have paid for their lands and the system which makes them productive. This land will have cost the settlers $26 an acre, and long before the government has been paid its last installment the settlers will be on homes worth from $100 an acre upward. Three towns have been started on the Minidoka tract, all of them on the Oregon Short Line. They will have electric lights, trolleys, and all other modern conveniences. The Minidoka dam will develop 11,000 horse power, which the government is authorized by act of Congress to utilize for the benefit of the project or to lease to private parties.

While the settlers have been waiting for the completion of the system they have been employed by the Reclamation Service in building lateral canals. A man earns $2.50 a day and his team earns another $2.50. Some of the settlers will have enough money to begin fruit growing, although they came to Minidoka with bare hands. It was a poor man's chance, while it lasted. Not an acre is left open to settlement. Here, as upon all other irrigation works projected by the government, the settler is far ahead of Uncle Sam. The land hunger of the American is never appeased. Here and there, in the heart of the sagebrush, are cleared places where settlers raise crops of grain even without irrigation. The Minidoka system will irrigate land sufficient to sustain a population of 75,000.

Three hundred miles above Minidoka in Wyoming, in the Jackson's Hole country, the Reclamation Service is building a dam across the outlet of Jackson's Lake. This will make a reservoir storing a million acre-feet of water—that is, enough water to cover a million acres one foot in depth. Some of this water will be sold for irrigation down along the river, and the rest of it will be conducted down the river to Minidoka dam, for use in the low stages of the river. The government engineers calculate that with this storage there will never be a time when the settlers, either on the Minidoka or the Twin Falls system, will be short of water.

Work on the Jackson's Lake dam has been held up temporarily by a gentleman named Sheffield, who stands with a rifle and dares the engineers to come on. He is a squatter, who make a little money piloting parties through the Wyoming hunting grounds. Uncle Sam is not disposed to be too harsh upon Brother Sheffield, and is taking steps to push him out of the way without calling out the armed forces of the nation and the several States. For the time being, however, he is lord of all he surveys.

Peril of Speed.

Mayor McClellan of New York was dining with a number of Americans in London. The talk turned to high speed and its perils—the perilous high speed of motor cars, express trains and the like.

Mayor McClellan smiled and said: "There is undoubtedly always something dangerous about speed. When I was a student at Princeton there was a middle-aged cook, a simple-minded woman with a good deal of money saved, who suddenly got herself engaged to a horse jockey. I saw the cook standing looking out of her kitchen window with a dazed expression one morning, and I said to her:

" 'What is the matter, Hannah?'

" 'Why, sir,' she said, 'with my husband that is to be, everything goes with such lightnin' speed that it's confusin'. Day before yesterday we got acquainted, yesterday we was engaged, and today I find that he already owes me $85.—[Buffalo Enquirer.

I have been treated by Dr. Schiffman for years. I have tried all his different methods, and can say unhesitatingly no dentist or physician has ever operated with such success or skill. In extracting my teeth he did it without any pain to me. It is a great pleasure to me to recommend him and his method of treatment.
MILO M. POTTER,
Prop. Van Nuys Hotel and Hotel Potter, Santa Barbara.

Ten years ago a reputable dentist of Virginia told me that a certain molar tooth could not be satisfactorily saved, and that it would probably not be of service for one year. It has not only served me for ten years, as Dr. Schiffman saved and crowned it, and comparatively speaking, without pain. I sing his praise.

On account of some unfortunate experience I had in the extraction of my teeth, I became a great coward in this respect. Today Dr. Schiffman extracted one of my very refractory teeth without causing me one particle of pain. D. K. TRASK,

Several years ago Dr. Schiffman did some crown work for me which has proved entirely satisfactory. The work was done painlessly and with great skill. It gives me great pleasure to recommend him.

VERY BEST

FLEXIBLE RUBBER DENTAL PLATES Have many advantages over the old thick, cumbersome, ordinary rubber plates and even over gold plates, being much lighter and thinner. These plates are flexible, only a trifle thicker than heavy writing paper, fit closer and adhere better to the roof of the mouth. Particles of food and small seeds cannot get under them. They will last longer, are stronger than any others, and will not break, as they will give first, being flexible. Dr. Schiffman's own process, and made only by us.

OUR GUARANTEE IS GOOD.

We refer you to the Merchants' National Bank as to our reliability and responsibility.

No boys or students to experiment on you. With us you are not experimenting. We have stood a 14-years' test in Los Angeles.

There is no Need of Paying High Prices

FOR Fine Dental Work. Our modern methods enable us to do the very best dental work of all kinds without pain at prices within the reach of all.

Dr. Schiffman extracted eight teeth for me without a particle of pain, and afterward made me a full upper flexible plate, which fits me perfectly.
I have given them a good test, as it has been a year and a half since they were made. I gladly recommend the doctor to all who are in need of dental service.

JUVENILE BOOKS.

Fable-Allegory.

TWO-LEGS. By Carl Ewald. Translated from the Danish by Alexander Teixeira de Mattos. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. (Price, $1.25.)

"It was once upon a time, many, many years ago.

"And it was in warm lands, where the sun shines stronger than here, and the rain falls closer, and all animals and all plants thrive better, because the winter does not stunt their growth.

"The forest was full of life and noise.

"The flies buzzed, the sparrow ate the flies and the hawk ate the sparrow. The bees crept into the flowers in search of honey, the lion roared and the birds sang, the brook rippled and the grass grew. The trees stood and rustled, with their roots sucked sap from the earth. The flowers were radiant and flagrant.

"Suddenly it became wonderfully still.

"It was as though all held their breaths at once, and listened and stared. The rustling of the trees ceased. The violet woke from her dreams and looked up in wonder. The lion raised his head and stood with one paw unlifted. The stag stopped grazing, the eagle rested high in the air on his wings, the little mouse ran out of his hole and pricked up his ears.

"There came two through the forest who were different from the others, two whom no one had ever seen before.

"They walked erect. Their foreheads were high; their eyes steady. They went hand in hand, and looked around them as though they did not know where they were.

"These were Two-legs and his wife; thus came they into the forest. And all the animals wondered over them and discussed them. They were uncertain whether thy should admit the newcomers as neighbors, or destroy them; but the two walked the earth so proudly and fearlessly that even the lion thought they must possess some secret power, even though in both teeth and claws they appeared weak; so he skulked in he distance, and got out of their way. Moreover, although some of the animals had a premonition of evil, Two-legs and his wife lived upon fruits and seemed harmless when unmolested, so it was finally decided to let them alone.

"But by and by the two new animals began to drive the others out of the fruit trees, and when fruit was scarce, tried fish, and drove the otter out of the river. Then a child Two-legs was born, and when it rained and the little one cried with the cold, Mrs. Two-legs envied the sheep their warm coat, and Two-legs, getting a new and original idea after much pondering, killed the sheep with a stone and took its hide to wrap about the child. But in skinning the sheep, Two-legs and his wife used their teeth, and the taste of flesh so delighted them that they went on killing, and became a menace to all the other animals. Also, they later caught the sheep and the ox, and the horse, and kept them prisoners, and made friends with the dog, whom they set to guard their new servants, and, finding the grass failed them sometimes, when wanted for their animals, they settled down in one spot and gathered seed and sowed it. And they fenced in their fields from the other animals, and built shelters for their own animals and themselves. Then the forest animals again took counsel how they should kill the family of Two-legs; but they found that these creatures had grown too strong and clever for them."

Thus, in fable-allegory form, Carl Ewald tells the story of mankind, with much of the old fable writers' charm of combined simplicity, wit and fancy. The story closes with a scene, "many, many years after," in a large modern village. It is fair time, and among other sights a lion, sick, mangy and broken-spirited, is exhibited in a dirty cage by a loud-voiced showman. A tiny lapdog, covered with an embroidered rug, is shut into the room with the King of Beasts, who taunts him with his degeneration, and laughs at that of the descendants of Two-legs. "For he was lithe and slender, and fair to look upon; he was an animal. But these people here! One can hardly see a morsel of their bodies, they are so wrapped up. Two-legs could bound through the forest and climb trees; these people here can scarcely stir hand or foot. He was a fighter; and it's really amusing to watch the terror in these fellows' eyes when I get up and move to the bars, or when I roar. They shake like aspen leaves, though they know that I am only a wretched prisoner."

The book is one to fascinate the child of imagination, but it ought hardly to be classed among the books for children, since it possesses a literary value of style and content that rank it among books interesting to all ages.

Travel.

IN EASTERN WONDERLANDS. By Charlotte Chaffee Gibson. Little, Brown & Co., Boston.

This is an account of a trip through the Orient made by three children, who begin with Japan and close with Egypt, taking in between these China, Ceylon, India and the Red Sea. The story of the journey is entertainingly told, in a style suited to girls and boys of 10 to 15.

A HUNT ON SNOW SHOES. By Edward S. Ellis. The John C. Winston Company, Philadelphia.

Two boys, Clarence and Sydney Landon, skating up the Kennebec, are pursued by wolves; escape at first by speed and dodging; are finally overtaken, and in great danger through an accident to the skate of one; are saved by the intervention of a great bear, who becomes a greater menace to them than the wolves; are finally rescued through the timely arrival of a French-Canadian hunter, whom they are come to visit with intent of a moose hunt. The moose hunt takes place with new perils to life and limb, and the boys meet with a more remarkable adventure than that of the wolves, for they are carried off by a wild man called by all people of the forest The Great Moose, and, escaping from him, they fall into the hands of a band of desperadoes. They are rescued, and the wild man, a maniac, recovers his reason through a blow. The book is a bit sensational, it will be seen, and resorts to some good old sensational devices. There are others not yet noted—the cave behind the waterfall, for instance, taking the center of the stage, toward the end of the book, as the headquarters of the robber band. However, the tale is well told from the boy's viewpoint, and will, no doubt, find him an appreciative reader.

Capital and Labor.

PELHAM AND HIS FRIENDS. By Allen French. Little, Brown & Co., Boston.

Allen French's plot is quite as stirring and adventurous as that of Mr. Ellis, with the added advantage that it is far more probable in its main features, although it, also, has some improbable elements.

The story is that of the young son of a mill owner and the son of a mill operative who are friends. The scene is a small village, where fair treatment on the part of employer and superintendent have secured contentment. This is destroyed by entrance of one malcontent, who brings about a strike. In this crisis the boy of the people proves his efficiency. Abused by his supposed father and threatened with withdrawal from school and employment in the mill, he has been given, at this point, a letter left for such an emergency by the wife of the man he calls father, on her deathbed. It tells him that he is of unknown parentage, and not even adopted. He takes refuge with an old dyer, who teaches him the trade; and this, during the strike, he plies so skillfully that the mill is enabled to keep on running through his aid. His foster father, the dyer, turns out in the end to be indeed his father—the event taxing the older reader's credulity a little, though it perhaps will not trouble the imaginative mind of youth. The story as a whole is a good piece of work, teaching, moreover, excellent lessons in real manliness—in self-dependence, honesty and fairness.

ROBERTA AND HER BROTHERS. By Alice Ward Bailey. Little, Brown & Co., Boston.

"Roberta and Her Brothers" is a vast improvement over Alice Ward Bailey's "Sage Brush Parson." It is an exceptionally well written story of a very real and natural yet an unusual girl, who lives an ordinary, every-day life in an uncommon and fine way. In fact, she is troubled with the "vice of altruism." No better or more interesting book for girls has appeared this season. It can be heartily recommended as a Christmas book.

THE POND IN THE MARSHY MEADOW. By Anne Helena Woodruff. The Saalfield Publishing Company, Akron, O. (Price, $1.50.)

Just an ordinary pond in an ordinary marshy meadow it was, to all appearances; but every child knows that all the fees and elves and nixies and pixies in elfenland may haunt the borders and the depths of such pond. Something like this was the case with the pond of the story, at any rate; and then, besides, there was Mrs. Bullfrog and Bobby Bullfrog, Mr. Snapping Turtle, the family of Water Spiders, the wonderful contortionist Eels, and many other interesting acquaintances that the Boy and the Girl made at about the same time that they made each other's acquaintance by means of the pond. The story is prettily told and artistically illustrated, making one of the most attractive of the gift books that have appeared up to the present.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.

A Curious Compilation.

HISTORIA AMORIS. By Edgar Saltus. Mitchell Kennerley, New York. (Price, $1.50.)

Edgar Saltus has amused himself by collecting out of history some of the most famous episodes of love, and these he has compiled into a book, with some preliminary notes and some general study of the history of love of which these episodes marked the steps. The study is interesting, in parts brilliant. The opening is characteristic: "The first thing created was light," says Mr. Saltus. "Then life came, then death. In between was fear. But not love. Love was absent. In Eden there was none. Adam and Eve emerged there adult. The phases of the delicate fever which others in paradise since experienced, left them unaffected. Instead of the reluctances and attractions, the hesitancies and aspirations, the preliminary and common conflagrations which are the beginnings, as they are the sacraments, of love, abruptly they were one. They were married before they were mated.

"The union, entirely allegoric—a Persian conceit—differed, otherwise, only in the poetry of the accessories from that which elsewhere actually occurred.

"Primitive man was necessarily speechless, probably simian, and certainly hideous. Women, if possible, more hideous still, were joined to him momentarily and immediately forgot. Ultimately, into the desolate poverty of the rudimentary brain there crept a novelty. The novelty was an idea. Women were detained, kept in lairs, made to serve there. Further novelties ensuing, creatures that had learned from birds to talk passed from animality. Subsequent progress originated in a theory that they were clearly entitled to whatever was not taken away from them. From that theory all institutions proceed, primarily that of family.

"In the beginning of things, woman was common property. With individual ownership came the necessity of defense. Man defended woman against even herself. He beat her, stoned her, killed her. From the massacre of myriads constancy resulted. With it came the home; a hut in the forest, a fort on a hill, in the desert a tent, yet, wherever situated, surrounded by foes."

Then Mr. Saltus sketches the status of women in Babylon and the early East, in Judea, in Greece, in Rome, in Europe of the Middle ages; and he closes the book with a chapter on "The Law of Attraction," with much quoting of Schopenhauer (who was a bachelor, by the way.)

One notable feature of the book is the quoting of the song of Solomon in a form based on Renan's as a love poem. Mr. Saltus has also gathered much interesting material from many sources under one cover, yet his book does not dip very deep into the life of either Greece or Rome, and his particular citations from the Middle Ages, though they are famous examples (that of Heloise and Abelard, for instance) are not more typical than many others. To do Mr. Saltus justice, however, he writes well of the customs of chivalry, of Dante, and Petrarch, and Boccaccio, of Diane de Poitiers and other famous lovers and loved. If he has not gone very deep, he has chosen some good illustrations and made interesting what he has given us.

FICTION.

Conan Doyle.

SIR NIGEL. By A. Conan Doyle. McClure, Phillips & Co., New York. (Price, $1.50.)

A new historic romance by Sir A. Conan Doyle is one of the leading books of the season. The scene is laid in England in the reign of Edward II, and from the historic viewpoint the work is well done. As a romance, too, the story will rank well, also, although it cannot take its place among the great works of historic fiction. Indeed, just why Sir Conan Doyle should elect to regard this type of fiction as his province, readers will still wonder; he is so eminently well equipped for writing tales of quite another sort—for instance, modern imaginative romance in which pathological types make sensational and stirring plots; something, say, on the order of his "Firm of Girdlestone," written with the author's now more matured and finished literary powers.

However, he has preferred historic fiction, and there is no doubt that he does well in this field. "Sir Nigel" is a tale of rapid action, of chivalry and gentle faith and true and noble love. The hero, whose name lends title to the book, is the young son of an old house fallen on evil fortunes and left without wealth, only a few old retainers still clinging to the service of the young master. The neighboring monastery has eaten up some of his patrimony, and the monks harbor little affection for the high-spirited youth. One of the best scenes in the book is the opening adventure, in which Nigel rescues the affrighted fathers from an angry stallion and receives a present of the animal by the malicious friars, who hope that he will be dashed to pieces by it. Instead, he proves himself its master, and gains a noble servant. Honored, shortly after, by a visit from his king, he engages for active service and rides forth as knight errant, swearing to do three deeds at arms that shall prove him worthy his armor and the gentle lady that he loves. He falls on some stirring adventures and acquits himself in a manner befitting his lineage.

The book is finely illustrated by The Kinneys. One suspects, however, that Sir Conan Doyle did not have chance of reading the proof, as one finds evident printer's errors in the use of archaic English—as, for instance, where the term "high enterprise" has evidently been substituted for "high emprise"—and in a few other similar cases.

Mining Camp Tale.

BOB HAMPTON OF PLACER. By Randall Parrish. A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago. (Price, $1.50.)

This is a fairly good mining camp story, sensational, and not of a high grade of literary workmanship, but full of action and no doubt likely to interest those who like the book of episode without being unduly critical as to probability or style. The best thing in the book is the opening incident, in which the hero rescues a girl out of the midst of an attacking band of Indians, by climbing an apparently unscalable cliff with her in the night. The fight leaves her without relatives, and he entrusts her to the care of others, as he is adjudged unworthy of being her guardian and accepts the judgment. However, he later abandons his own trade of gambler, after having won a fortune in a single game; and in subsequent events he proves his worthiness to the girl's satisfaction and turns out one who she is by blood in duty bound to love. The book does not equal Mr. Parrish's best earlier work.

Again the Working Woman.

RING IN THE NEW. By Richard Whiteing. The Century Company, New York. (Price, $1.50.)

This is one of the many attempts to picture new conditions of city life with the business woman as its center—an English picture, this time. The writer is a man of middle age, either not very much in sympathy with the new woman whose entry he rings, or with no deep insight into conditions. The story is not well put together and in attempting realism, falls into photographic methods that are a little vulgar as well as superficial.

HUMOR.

Sewell Ford.

SHORTY M'CABE. By Sewell Ford. Mitchell Kennerley, New York. (Price, $1.50.)

Sewell Ford has given us one of the best pieces of recent humor in "Shorty McCabe." Shorty, the genial ex-prize fighter, is a delight from the beginning to the end of the book—entirely a gentleman in the best sense of the word, clean, brave, chivalrous, not sentimental, yet with sentiment enough in the right conditions, moreover, keen and quick of thought, and gifted with a power of picturesque self-expression, equaled only by Henry Wallace Phillips's Red Saunders and George Horace Lorimer's merchant.

"Shorty" tells his own story and charms in the telling, even as does Red. He has been knocked out fairly and does not deny the fact, neither does he care to exhibit himself on the stage; so he takes to training "comers," incidentally to training a few others who take a fancy to him, and thus he falls in with a number of wealthy young patrons with whom he sees adventures of all kinds, the interest of which is greatly enhanced by his relation of them. There is nothing in the book, for instance, more entertaining than the opening chapter, the ex-pugilist's story of how he spent a night in the country where the quiet was so great that every noise in the town disturbed him, and how he became so interested in a discussion on the next street, as to the date of Hen Dorset's tragic death, that he arose and followed the disputants, who dressed and went out to get evidence on the subject. In the end, the whole village turned out to help settle the question, with various resultant adventures. This story reminds one more of Mark Twain than anything by another than the great humorist himself that the writer of this review can recall. The method and the character of the humor are Mr. Clemens's own, though the picturesque vocabulary belongs to Mr. Ford. The other stories of the book are equally good along a somewhat different line. Every man who keeps a humorous library for use in dark days ought to add this book to it.

In Convenient Form.

THE PETS. By Henry Wallace Phillips. McClure, Phillips & Co., New York. (Price, 50 cents.)

Nothing that Henry Wallace Phillips has written has been received with more heartfelt hilarity than his story of Red Saunders's pets—the wild cat, the bull snake and the hawk—and of the little encounter they had with the Englishman's dog. This characteristic story, with the original illustrations, McClure, Phillips & Co. issue under separate linen cover for the holidays. Nothing could make a better gift for an invalid or a man troubled with the blues; and this story also belongs in every complete library of first-class humor.

Modern Children.

THE PETTISON TWINS. By Marion McClure, Phillips & Co., New York. ($1.50.)

Those who have made the acquaintance of the Pettison Twins through the medium of the magazine in which they made their début, will be glad to see their adventures collected into a volume. Except for "The Madness of Phillip" and a few other of the stories by the same author, this is the best humorous study of the modern child that has been written, and particularly amusing and gratifying to the observer of some of the misapplications of modern ideas of child training. Poor little Rex and Regina are reared with unflinching determination on the Daily Morning Orange, the Daily Nap, in the fear of Microbes and according to each new rule prescribed by the Home Messenger—but not with any display of unseemly, doting affection; and the sympathizing reader will delight in their innocent transgressions and naughty rebellions. The volume is illustrated by Fanny Cory.

PEOPLE AND THINGS LITERARY.

In spite of the multiplicity of books on German history and politics, it would be difficult to name any single volume which gives a comprehensive account of the German Empire as it now is and its present political, social and economic tendencies. Such is the aim indicated by Dr. Burt Estes Howard in his book on "The German Empire," just published by the Macmillan Company. Dr. Howard has been for many years a close student of German life and character, and his book is the outcome of direct observation and careful investigation of original sources.

The story that gives its title to Jack London's recently issued volume, "Moon-Face," recalls one of the most remarkable coincidences in recent literary history. Mr. London himself tells the story in these words: "Some years ago, while I was in England, a story of mine ('Moon-Face,') was published in the San Francisco Argonaut. In The Century of the same date was published a story by Frank Norris. While these two stories were quite different in manner of treatment, they were patently the same in foundation and motive. At once the newspapers paralleled our stories. The explanation was simple: Norris and I had read the same newspaper account, and proceeded to exploit it. But the fun did not stop there. Somebody dug up a Black Cat, published a year previous, in which was a similar story by another man who used the same foundation and motive. Then Chicago hustled around and resurrected a story that had been published some months before the Black Cat story, and that was the same in foundation and motive. Of course, all these different writers had chanced upon the same newspaper article."

Frederic Harrison, the distinguished English philosopher and historian, whose "Memories and Thoughts" is just out, lacks only a few days of being 75 years old. For more than fifty years Harrison has been the friend of nearly every distinguished leader of English thought, and has been associated with every important philosophical and scientific movement of the period. No one living has a richer fund of reminiscence, and his mature judgment on the men and things with which he has been associated cannot fail to be stimulating and suggestive.

In his forthcoming "Reminiscences of Henry Irving," Bram Stoker, who was for many years the actor's friend and manager, tells an amusing story of a dubious compliment the actor once received in Belfast. The occasion was a dinner party, and it is charitable to suppose that the Irish gentleman who uttered it was a trifle befuddled by the good cheer. In descanting on the many virtues of the guest of the evening, he mentioned the excellence of his moral nature and rectitude of his private life in these terms: "Mr. Irving, sir, is a gentleman what leads a life of unbroken blemish.'"

Sewell Ford, whose brilliant stories of Cedarton folks will be soon published under the title of "Trugate of Mogador," has spent many years in active newspaper work, as reporter and editor, in Boston, Baltimore and New York. For some time he has been a member of the editorial staff of the American Press Association. During the past four or five years he has written much short fiction for the magazines. Mr. Ford was born in South Levant, Me., but he has lived little in the Pine Tree State. His early school days were spent in Cheboygan, Mich., an inconspicuous lumber town on the Straits of Mackinac. They ended when he finished a four years' Latin course at the High School in Haverhill, Mass.

No more stalwart and vigorous American patriot has ever lived than the author of "The Man Without a Country." With Dr. Hale the discovery of a lack in anything pertaining to his native land is the beginning of an effort to supply the want. This militant patriotism was undoubtedly his prime motive in writing his "Tarry at Home Travels," which has just appeared. Dr. Hale has noticed the plenitude of books of travel in Europe and Asia, and the dearth of good works of the kind about our own country. In his "Tarry at Home Travels" he urges his readers to discover America, and conducts them in his delightful informal fashion to some famous historic spots, chiefly in New England and in and about Washington. The book is illustrated with many photographs and reproductions of old prints and engravings.

NEW MAGAZINES.

The American Civil War will be treated in the Century during 1907 in three short serials. Ellis Paxson Oberholtzer, Ph.D., author of "Robert Morris, Patriot and Financier," etc., will tell "How the Civil War Was Financed;" Gen. O. O. Howard, the only surviving commander of a separate army during the Civil War, has written for the Century his personal recollections of some of the leading men of those days; and there will be an account of "Lincoln in the Telegraph Office," by an operator in the War Department telegraph office, where Lincoln spent many hours daily during the anxious hours of the Civil War.

The Popular Science Monthly for October opens with an article by President David Starr Jordan of Stanford University, entitled "The Earthquake Rift of 1906." This is one of the most authoritative studies that has been made of the causes of the recent California earthquake, and has the advantage of being written in the clear and interesting way that may always be expected from President Jordan. The article is very extensively illustrated. The second of a series of articles by M. Poincaré, probably the greatest of mathematicians now living, treats the measurement of time. Prof. E. O. Sisson, of the University of Washington, gives an account of the extent to which Francis Bacon anticipated the modern university. Prof. Edwin W. Bowen of Randolph-Macon College, writes on differences in the English language as used in Great Britain and here, a subject that is timely, in view of the widespread discussion of changes in spelling. Dr. J. Madison Taylor of Philadelphia discusses the attitude of the parents, teachers and physicians toward boys who are difficult to manage. Dr. R. M. Ogden, of the University of Tennessee, describes the conditions of genius from a psychological point of view. Dr. Mary Mills Patrick, president of the Girls' College at Constantinople, contributes an article entitled 'The Birth of the Idea of Spirit in Greek Thought." Prof. Vernon L. Kellogg, of Stanford University, explains in an illustrated article the scientific aspects of Luther Burbank's work. There are shorter articles on the effects of immigration on homicide, on the British Medical Association and the University of Toronto, and on the national pure food law.

In an article on "Commercial Panics, Past and Future," in the October Atlantic, Alexander D. Noyes makes the point that the actual germs of a panic are to be looked for in certain of the conditions that attend a wave of prosperity. If this is true, then there is an especial timeliness in making such an an inquiry—just now; and since the author is financial editor of the Evening Post—"the financial man's newspaper"—there is some reason to believe that he knows whereof he speaks. At all events, his article is sure to attract the attention of intelligent business men everywhere. Mr. Noyes shows exactly what the steps are which in the past have led up to financial crises like those of '57, '73 and '93, and then he brings out the parallel—and it is a startling one. He does not make prophecies; but he utters a warning. Whether or not panics can be prevented, it is at least certain that precautions may and should be taken which will greatly lessen their severity.

LONDON CHARMER FOLLOWS EDNA MAY.

Part in "The Belle of Mayfair" Which American Actress Threw Up in Dudgeon, Will Be Taken by Phyllis Dare.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Sept. 22.—Up to a few days ago, when she suddenly [illegible] a sensation on theatrical [illegible] generally, and on the managers of the London vaudeville in particular, [illegible] latest and by all odds most in[illegible] announcement regarding [illegible] May was one that really had [illegible] to do with the stage or the [illegible] profession at all. It was, in [illegible], wholly concerned with a new, [illegible] report said, bewildering fascin[illegible] article of apparel which the for[illegible] "Belle of New York" had just had [illegible] from designs conceived by [illegible], and which took the form of a [illegible], alluring and, it was under[illegible], outrageously expensive "cos[illegible]" or, in plain English, [illegible]

It is [illegible] that Miss May's [illegible] correct in stating that this [illegible] creation in the bathing [illegible] cost the fair actress nearly [illegible]. As it was made by [illegible] firm of court dressmakers, [illegible] that is not improbable. And [illegible] is that the dainty trifle made [illegible] hit when worn for the [illegible] time by Miss May at Cromer [illegible] during the actress's holiday [illegible] highly fashionable British seaside resort. Then, it is true, it was [illegible] in the season for this un[illegible] fascinating garment to be [illegible] to any extent, but it was generally prophesied that the summer of [illegible] would prove the American actress [illegible] in setting a new fashion so far as English feminine bathing costumes are concerned, and that, [illegible] be agreed by any one who has [illegible] these not too seductive creations, [illegible] consummation most devoutly to [illegible].

[illegible] Miss May's American admirers [illegible], I recently besought of [illegible] graph that would convey an [illegible] the fascinations of her new [illegible]" but lo, now that it [illegible] the interest which at[illegible] the actress's recent experi[illegible] a fashion maker is compara[illegible] thing of the past. It has [illegible] overshadowed completely [illegible] which Miss May has aroused [illegible] of the Atlantic by throw[illegible] part at the London Vaude[illegible] of the rash action of [illegible] managers in "featur[illegible] fair American member of [illegible]

[illegible], however, American read[illegible] already all there is [illegible] about the recent surprising [illegible] at the London "Vaude[illegible] the run of the "Belle [illegible] began there, some time [illegible] May was avowedly the [illegible] star, while Camille Clifford, the ex-Gibson girl of "The Prince of Pilsen," had the comparatively small part of a newly-made British peeress from across the "herring pond." As every one knows, however, not long since, the fair Camille left the Vaudeville for a space and soon afterward promised to marry the eldest son of Lord Aberdare, and so, considering the amount of attention the thing attracted, it is not surprising that when the "Gibson girl" r turned to the "Belle of Mayfair" the management of the Vaudeville advertised her reappearance far and wide.

They gave her a new song to sing, too, besides putting her name on the bills in fat black type, and all of a sudden the public learned that these various attentions to a lesser member of the cast of "The Belle" had put its star's nose badly out of joint. Now, moreover, Miss May has left the Vaudeville altogether, while Charles Frohman, standing by his star, has withdrawn from his association with the Gattis, who run the theater, and generally there has been the dickens to pay over the whole affair.

Now, however, for the sequel, which is infinitely more dramatic than the original episode, and, incidentally no end of a feather in the cap of the astute managers of the deserted Vaudeville. In fact, these gentlemen look like scoring hugely over the whole affair, for not to mention that their playhouse is now being packed to its full capacity to see Camille Clifford—thanks to the additional boom thus given this actress—the management has just brought off a real master stroke by engaging Phyllis Dare to play the star part recently relinquished in dudgeon by the indignant Edna May.

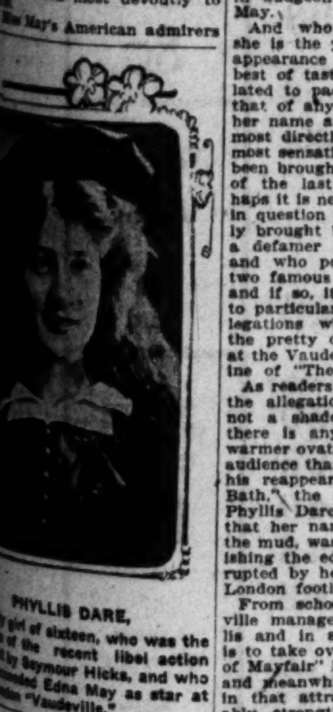
And who is Phyllis Dare? Well, she is the young woman of 16 whose appearance (while not perhaps in the best of taste) is perhaps more calculated to pack a London theater than that of any other English player, for her name and fame it was that were most directly concerned in one of the most sensational libel suits which have been brought in England in the course of the last twenty-five years. Perhaps it is needless to add that the case in question is that which was recently brought by Seymour Hicks against a defamer who called himself Dare, and who posed as a brother of the two famous sisters, Zena and Phyllis, and if so, it will be needless likewise to particularize as to the heartles allegations which were made against the pretty child who lately appeared at the Vaudeville as the youthful heroine of "The Catch of the Season."

As readers will already have learned, the allegations were proved to have not a shadow of foundation and if there is any one who is sure of a warmer ovation from a London theater audience than Hicks got when he made his reappearance in "The Beauty of Bath," the other night, it is pretty Phyllis Dare, who, during the time that her name was being dragged in the mud, was at school in Belgium finishing the education which was interrupted by her brief career before the London footlights.

From school, however, the Vaudeville management has tempted Phyllis and in about a week's time she is to take over the part in "The Belle of Mayfair" lately filled by Edna May, and meanwhile Camille Clifford's part in that attraction is being considerably strengthened, and other measures being taken to boom the tuneful musical show. And meanwhile what of Edna May, who has surrendered a salary of (she says) $1000 a week for the sake of spiting some one else's pretty face? Well, Miss May, who is now at Brighton, is to be starred again, pretty soon, by the loyal Mr. Frohman in another musical play which will be called "Nellie Neale" and presumably will continue her successful career in the metropolis. All things considered, however, one rather suspects that if Edna had it to do all over again, she wouldn't, little having come of her "ructions" except additional advertising and general eclat for her fair Gibsonian rival, and what is apparently going to be the chance of a lifetime for plucky little Phyllis Dare.

EDNA MAY,

[illegible] elaborate bathing costume which is said to have cost $100.



PHYLLIS DARE,

[illegible] girl of sixteen, who was the [illegible] of the recent libel action [illegible] by Seymour Hicks, and who [illegible] Edna May as star at London "Vaudeville."

A Romance of the Desert.

STORY OF A HOOSIER YOUTH WHO BRAVED FEARFUL ODDS AND BECAME A MILLIONAIRE.

By Ira E. Bennett.

TWIN FALLS (Idaho) Oct. 10.—Let those who believe that the sagebrush desert is void of romance and the castellated gorges of the Snake River mere monuments of death learn the story of Perrine, the Hoosier of Blue Lakes. Let them contemplate the struggle of one man with nature and gather from his conquest the lesson of the winning of the West.

Ira B. Perrine is now in his early forties. He is slight, wiry, blue-eyed, reticent and modest, but always polite to the stranger. He is famed from Ogden to Portland for his optimism. "Nil desperandum" is his rule of life, and nothing delights him more than a wrestle with brute nature. He was born in Lebanon, Ind., and came west before he was 18. He drifted into Idaho, and one of his first jobs was that of chambermaid in a livery stable in a new mining camp. He cleaned up around the stable one day and set fire to the refuse. While he was at lunch the fire was communicated to the stable, and from the stable to the town. In an hour the town was off the map and Perrine was in the grip of a Vigilance Committee, which made prompt arrangements to hang him. A friend appeared who told how tidy the lad had been about the stable, and how even older men might have made such a slight mistake as to set fire to a town. The miners were charmed with the lawyer's eloquence and untied the rope that bound Perrine. His rescuer is now a millionaire, living in Salt Lake City.

Perrine tried prospecting, and failed. He went against railroading, and fortune did not smile. He floated around at various jobs, but made no headway. Finally, in company with an old prospector who had made money in the Boise placers before they petered out, he struck out across the desert for the Snake River Cañon, below Shoshone Falls. They arrived at the lip of the cañon, and beheld below them, smiling under the sky, two blue lakes in a pocket of the gorge that rose 500 feet upward to where they stood.

DID NOT FIND TRAIL.

Perrine and his partner prospected along the edge of the precipice for a trail. They did not find any. Below them ran the Snake River, with a fringe of green along its banks, and the old prospector thought he saw a fortune in its sands. Perrine was captivated by the blue lakes, and decided on the instant to locate them for his home.

The cliffs lined the cañon of the Snake for miles. Above them was Shoshone Falls, roaring like Niagara. Below them stretched an endless desert. There was nothing to do but to lower themselves and their plunder over the cliffs. They rigged up a tackle, and Perrine dropped, as if out of the heavens, into the gorge. The old miner sent down pine boards for a sluice box, grub and their extra clothing. They turned their burros loose. The old argonaut slid down the rope. Another descent was made in the same way, to a spot where the drift rock had made a sliding bank. Thus they reached the banks of the river. The old miner went down the river, with his boards which cost him $5 each, and disappeared. Perrine, catching his extra grub and clothing wrote out location notices and stuck them upon the rocks. He claimed everything in sight. Then began his twenty-years' struggle.

The warmth of the valley adjoining the river, protected as it was by the giant wall of the cañon, the abundance of water, and the character of the soil, convinced Perrine that he could make a success of fruit-growing. What did it matter to him that there was nobody within reach to buy his fruit? What did he care for the little obstacle of cliffs? He swam the river and explored the face of the cañon wall. Making his way upward upon drift rock, he gained a place 300 feet above the river. There a two-foot ledge jutted out, skirting the face of the cliff for a mile. He walked along, literally among the eagles, with death below and solitude all around. The ledge ended at a little break which was partially filled with drift. Up this he climbed, and found himself upon the plateau. Before him stretched the desert, covered with sage brush. Walking a hundred feet away from the rim of the cañon, he turned back, and it was as completetly obscured as if it had never been. His gaze leaped across it to the desert upon the other side, and but for the distant thunder of Shoshone Falls, far upstream, he might have imagined that he had merely dreamed of precipices and foaming waters.

DRIVER THOUGHT HIM CRAZY.

Perrine was headed for Boise City, with the object of recording his land entry and buying seed. Boise City was away to the northward, a week's journey on foot. He did not have money enough to buy a seat in the stage. Gaining the stage road, he begged the driver to take him to Boise, promising to pay his fare when his ship came in. The driver refused. Perrine stood there, a stripling, almost in tears, and made another plea. He told of his ambition to start an orchard in the cañon.

"Well, get in," said the driver. "Any kid with as crazy a notion as that is dangerous to society. You can't be at large. Hop in, and I'll give you a lift to the insane asylum."

"Thanks," replied Perrine. "This is the only time I'll ask for a lift. I'll buy this stage one of these days, and ride in it whenever I please."

A few years later Perrine hunted up this stage coach, purchased it, and installed it on his ranch, where it is now. It would be a long story to tell of Perrine's failures in many directions. But he never failed in faith. He saw in his mind's eye a fortune, a little Garden of Eden, set between sheltering walls of lava, watered with ice-cold springs and a roaring river. He planted peach and apple trees, dug ditches, built a reservoir, opened a canal from a spring which drained the blue lakes above his farm, and did everything that Adam must have done. He was alone as Adam, and more, for no Eve was there.

Within a year or two the fruit ripened. It was then that Perrine blazed a trail along the cliffs, up which he led a single horse packed with fruit in baskets. Once, up among the eagles, his horse lurched against the cliff, struck the basket against the rocks, and found itself clutching the trail with its front feet, its hindquarters dangling above destruction. Perrine struggled to recover the animal, but it fell with a scream and was dashed to pieces on the rocks.

SHUT IN FROM WORLD.

Perrine carried his fruit out in this manner for several years, finding a market for it in villages across thirty miles of sagebrush desert. As his orchard grew larger he began to employ help, until, in picking time, he had sixty hands at work. At odd times he turned the boys to road work and with infinite labor a wagon road was blasted along the edge of the cliffs up to the rim of the cañon. It is a splendid piece of road, and will last forever. On the western rim he constructed a similar road. At the upper end of each road he placed a gate. With these gates locked he was shut in from intrusion from the world, for the great falls guarded one entrance and a roaring torrent in the lower gorge guarded the other. With the roads closed, the only way to reach Perrine ranch was in the primeval fashion adopted by its discoverer—a drop over the cliffs, at the risk of life.

In due time the little Hoosier hermit took a wife—an Idaho birl, who thought nothing of the solitude of the great cañon and the roar of the torrent. Two children were born to them, a boy and a girl. The boy died two years ago. The girl, 13 years old, is the charm of the home. She has adopted a big trout who lords it over his tribesmen in the ice-cold pool formed by the spring near the house. This big trout comes up for food and permits his little mistress to rub his sides and tickle his fins. He is a little shy with strangers, but when a morsel of food drops in the water his hunger overcomes his bashfulness and the celerity with which he darts in ahead of the ducks and gobbles the food is a wonder to behold.

NATURE IS INDULGENT.

Nature is especially indulgent with Blue Lake's ranch. The sun smiles down perpetually, the soil is the accumulation of ages of erosion, the keen winds of winter are warded off by the cliffs. In consequence, fruits of all kinds ripen to perfection there and gather a sweetness that has made them famous. Perrine sent an exhibit to Paris and was awarded the gold medal. He exhibited at the Buffalo Exposition and captured another gold medal. He was heard from at the Trans-Mississippi Exposition at Omaha and another medal was added to his collection. Finally, in St. Louis in 1904 he won the gold medal against the world for fine fruits. He shows these medals with modest pride to the few strangers who stumble upon his ranch, and then fills their buckboard with samples of the peaches that have become known throughout the world.

For nearly twenty years Perrine's nearest neighbors were thirty-five miles distant, across a waterless sagebrush plain. Now the breakers of immigration are dashing within sound sound of Shoshone Falls. Twin Falls, Idaho, a two-year-old city, with 3500 population, with a railroad and a big stone hotel, two newspapers, and so on, lies on the plain five miles from Perrine's place. The sagebrush about the town has been displaced by green alfalfa fields and orchards. Houses dot the desert in all directions, and irrigation ditches, full of water, traverse the plain. The raw land, with a water right, sells for $25.50. It is barely cleared and planted to alfalfa or fruits before it jumps to $100 and $200 an acre. The town is beginning to send out hay, fruit, butter and farm products generally. Sugar beets are being planted, and a factory is about to be erected. The desert is disappearing before the very eyes of the visitor. Th Oregon Short Line built a branch road into the country, and is planning to change its route so that Twin Falls will be on the main line. Two or three other towns have sprung up on the desert, all of them as ambitious as Chicago.

PLENTY OF ELECTRIC POWER.

Electric power to the extent of 20,000 horse power has been developed at Shoshone Falls, and poles and wires are being strung along Snake River and into Twin Falls. In a few weeks the town will be lighted and operated by Shoshone Falls. An electric railroad fourteen miles in length is being constructed, connecting the towns of Twin Falls and Buell.

The irrigation system which has worked such wonders on the desert has its beginning at Milner dam on the Snake River, about eight miles above Twin Falls, which in turn is a few miles above Shoshone Falls. Two small islands in a rocky gorge furnish an admirable dam site. The main canal leading from the dam carries 1000 second-feet of water, and smaller canals distribute the supply in all directions. Two years ago not an acre was under cultivation. Now 40,000 acres are producing crops, and next year nearly 100,000 acres will be cultivated. The Milner dam diverts sufficient water to irrigate over 200,000 acres, and the land lies there ready for the water, in a compact body.

Thirty-five miles above Milner dam, at Minidoka, the United States government has built a dam a mile long, raising the height of the water forty-seven feet and providing for the irrigation of another body of 130,000 acres. Every acre of this land has been entered upon by homesteaders under the reclamation act. The sagebrush desert is dotted for miles with little cabins. The dam will be completed this month. The canals are a little behind hand, but it is expected that water will be turned in early next year, sufficient to irrigate 60,000 acres. The settlers are mostly from the Middle West and from the higher-priced irrigated lands in Washington, California, and Utah. Few men in the East have ever heard of Minidoka, and fewer still have the enterprise of these Westerners, who are quick to grasp the chance to make a comfortable fortune.

WHERE SETTLERS PROFIT.

The Minidoka "project" is expected to be a great success, both from the government's and the settler's point of view. It will cost, completed, $2,540,000. This includes the cost of maintenance for ten years when, under the law, the system will be turned over to the settlers, who will have paid for their lands and the system which makes them productive. This land will have cost the settlers $26 an acre, and long before the government has been paid its last installment the settlers will be on homes worth from $100 an acre upward. Three towns have been started on the Minidoka tract, all of them on the Oregon Short Line. They will have electric lights, trolleys, and all other modern conveniences. The Minidoka dam will develop 11,000 horse power, which the government is authorized by act of Congress to utilize for the benefit of the project or to lease to private parties.

While the settlers have been waiting for the completion of the system they have been employed by the Reclamation Service in building lateral canals. A man earns $2.50 a day and his team earns another $2.50. Some of the settlers will have enough money to begin fruit growing, although they came to Minidoka with bare hands. It was a poor man's chance, while it lasted. Not an acre is left open to settlement. Here, as upon all other irrigation works projected by the government, the settler is far ahead of Uncle Sam. The land hunger of the American is never appeased. Here and there, in the heart of the sagebrush, are cleared places where settlers raise crops of grain even without irrigation. The Minidoka system will irrigate land sufficient to sustain a population of 75,000.

Three hundred miles above Minidoka in Wyoming, in the Jackson's Hole country, the Reclamation Service is building a dam across the outlet of Jackson's Lake. This will make a reservoir storing a million acre-feet of water—that is, enough water to cover a million acres one foot in depth. Some of this water will be sold for irrigation down along the river, and the rest of it will be conducted down the river to Minidoka dam, for use in the low stages of the river. The government engineers calculate that with this storage there will never be a time when the settlers, either on the Minidoka or the Twin Falls system, will be short of water.

Work on the Jackson's Lake dam has been held up temporarily by a gentleman named Sheffield, who stands with a rifle and dares the engineers to come on. He is a squatter, who make a little money piloting parties through the Wyoming hunting grounds. Uncle Sam is not disposed to be too harsh upon Brother Sheffield, and is taking steps to push him out of the way without calling out the armed forces of the nation and the several States. For the time being, however, he is lord of all he surveys.

Peril of Speed.

Mayor McClellan of New York was dining with a number of Americans in London. The talk turned to high speed and its perils—the perilous high speed of motor cars, express trains and the like.

Mayor McClellan smiled and said: "There is undoubtedly always something dangerous about speed. When I was a student at Princeton there was a middle-aged cook, a simple-minded woman with a good deal of money saved, who suddenly got herself engaged to a horse jockey. I saw the cook standing looking out of her kitchen window with a dazed expression one morning, and I said to her:

"'What is the matter, Hannah?'

"'Why, sir,' she said, 'with my husband that is to be, everything goes with such lightnin' speed that it's confusin'. Day before yesterday we got acquainted, yesterday we was engaged, and today I find that he already owes me $85.—[Buffalo Enquirer.

G. A. THIELE, 529 So. Main Street.

I have been treated by Dr. Schiffman for years. I have tried all his different methods, and can say unhesitatingly no dentist or physician has ever operated with such success or skill. In extracting my teeth he did it without any pain to me. It is a great pleasure to me to recommend him and his method of treatment.
MILO M. POTTER,
Prop. Van Nuys Hotel and Hotel Potter, Santa Barbara.

Ten years ago a reputable dentist of Virginia told me that a certain molar tooth could not be satisfactorily saved, and that it would probably not be of service for one year. It has not only served me for ten years, as Dr. Schiffman saved and crowned it, and comparatively speaking, without pain. I sing his praise.
OWEN M. ANDREWS,
Pastor M. E. Church, South, corner Sixth and Mateo sts.

On account of some unfortunate experience I had in the extraction of my teeth, I became a great coward in this respect. Today Dr. Schiffman extracted one of my very refractory teeth without causing me one particle of pain. D. K. TRASK,
Judge Superior Court, Los Angeles.

Several years ago Dr. Schiffman did some crown work for me which has proved entirely satisfactory. The work was done painlessly and with great skill. It gives me great pleasure to recommend him.
IRVING R. SMITH,
L. A. Times.

Dr. Schiffman has done a large amount of bridge and plate work for me, which was done in a very satisfactory manner.
A. J. BRADISH,
Chief of L. A. Detectives.

VERY BEST

FLEXIBLE RUBBER DENTAL PLATES Have many advantages over the old thick, cumbersome, ordinary rubber plates and even over gold plates, being much lighter and thinner. These plates are flexible, only a trifle thicker than heavy writing paper, fit closer and adhere better to the roof of the mouth. Particles of food and small seeds cannot get under them. They will last longer, are stronger than any others, and will not break, as they will give first, being flexible. Dr. Schiffman's own process, and made only by us.

OUR GUARANTEE IS GOOD.

We refer you to the Merchants' National Bank as to our reliability and responsibility.

No boys or students to experiment on you. With us you are not experimenting. We have stood a 14-years' test in Los Angeles.

There is no Need of Paying High Prices

FOR Fine Dental Work. Our modern methods enable us to do the very best dental work of all kinds without pain at prices within the reach of all.

Dr. Schiffman extracted eight teeth for me without a particle of pain, and afterward made me a full upper flexible plate, which fits me perfectly.

I have given them a good test, as it has been a year and a half since they were made. I gladly recommend the doctor to all who are in need of dental service.
MRS. EMMA BIRKLE,
420 S. Moline avenue.

Dr. Schiffman's hours at the chair are now 9 to 5, and he can be consulted personally any time during those hours.

ALL our work is guaranteed to be the very best. None better can be had anywhere, no matter how much you pay.

BASEMENT.

THE OPEN SHOP—San Francisco Crimes Due to Blight of Unionism on City.

CURRENT COMMENT.

SAN FRANCISCO is passing through a saturnalia of crime. Robberies, murders, assaults and other violations of the law are of daily and nightly occurrence. On Tuesday, October 9, the Chronicle printed a list of fifty-five hold-ups, robberies and murders that have been committed in San Francisco since August 1. The succeeding twenty-four hours added five more to the list, making a total of sixty violent crimes up to Wednesday morning. Besides these serious crimes, there were hundreds of minor crimes, a great number of which were never reported to the police.

At last the people of San Francisco are becoming aroused to the dangerous and disgraceful state of affairs, and are demanding immediate and radical action on the part of the police authorities to check the tide of crime. A strong disposition is manifest to place the responsibility upon Chief of Police Dinan, and to require his dismissal. Dinan is undoubtedly much to blame, but it is unjust to shoulder off upon him the entire responsibility. The principal blame should be placed higher up. Schmitz, the labor-union Mayor, his venal police commissioners, and Abe Ruef, who directs the operations of the machine, are in a large degree responsible for the unusual prevalence of crime in San Francisco. Schmitz has surrounded himself with a lot of grafting and incompetent officials. Policemen have been encouraged in neglecting their duty. It is a sort of unwritten law in San Francisco that union violators of the law shall not be arrested, or, if arrested, that they shall go free. Without much doubt, many of the crimes that have been committed in San Francisco, within the past few months, were committed by union thugs, who have escaped arrest and punishment because the city is under union-labor government. A movement has been started for the formation of a "committee of safety," and the situation seems to be about ripe for such action, or for any action by reputable, public-spirited citizens which will free the city from its incubus of crime. This will not be fully accomplished while the Ruef-Schmitz régime continues; but if the people of San Francisco will arouse themselves to the dangers of the situation, they can easily cast off the bondage of this disreputable and destructive "system," which causes the people to be robbed in more ways than one.

There is no longer any doubt about the fact that the Government Printing Office is an open shop. Sam Gompers may like it or he may not like it, and Jim Lynch's peons may kick all they please. The release of the government printery from union rule is an accomplished fact. A printer need not belong to a union as a qualification for holding a job in the big shop. In enforcing this order of the President, given in the Miller case, Public Printer Stillings is doing neither more nor less than his duty.

The President's order was right, beyond all successful denial. The rule ought to have been made and enforced years ago. The Government Printing Office does not belong to the Typographical union. It belongs to the government of the United States—to the people of the entire country. One man has as good a right to employment in it as another, provided he is competent to perform the labor required. Mr. Stillings stated the whole case in concise form when he said, in a recent interview:

"Private concerns may enter into agreements with their employés upon any terms which seem fit to both sides. The government cannot do this. It cannot recognize a union any more than it can recognize a church or a political party. The new efficiency record system will go into effect in the Government Printing Office on Monday, and thereafter each employé will stand or fall by that record, and by that alone. No religious or political faith or membership or non-membership in a labor union will help or hinder. A man will have to be up to a certain standard in his work or be reduced or get out. There is no other way."

Goaded into a fight, against their will, by the unreasonable demands of their striking employés, the mill owners of Alameda county have declared war on the would-be dictators, and propose to fight the matter out until one side or the other is forced to capitulate. The Oakland Enquirer says that "the battle will not only involve the interests of the mills, but of all trades in the county." The mill workers demanded an increase of 25 per cent. in the wage schedule, and the adoption by Oakland mill owners of any scale finally reached in San Francisco. The employers offered an advance of 12½ per cent., which the strikers refused. There is no present prospect of a settlement, and the contest may be indefinitely prolonged. This strike will help to retard the rebuilding of San Francisco, which at the present rate of progress, will not be accomplished in less than twenty to thirty years.

The Kansas City Journal utters an important truth, in succinct form, when it declares that "organized labor has no more powerful enemies than some of its friends, and has no better friends than some against which it foolishly arrays itself." The blindest person in the world is the one who will not see.

Wrangling Chicago Unions.

Mill hands of the Kinzie Manufacturing Company, No. 200 North Union street, struck the other day, temporarily crippling the business of the company. The cause of the strike was the jurisdictional wrangle of the carpenters and woodworkers' unions, the latter seeking to prevent the carpenters from getting control of mill work. Forty members of the woodworkers' union walked out when the firm insisted on employing ten former members of that organization, who lately joined a secession movement and allied themselves with the carpenters.

Pickets from one union were placed about the factory to stop men from the other labor organization seeking their places. Police were called upon to protect the property of the company and prevent violence upon the part of the opposing forces of unionism.

George A. Stoeckel, president of the Kinzie Manufacturing Company, which makes store and office fixtures, said today that he was at a loss to know what to do to prevent the strike.

"Recently some of my employés, ten in number, joined the corpenters' union, leaving the woodworkers' organization, with which I had a contract," said Mr. Stoeckel. "The woodworkers demanded that I discharge the seceders. I did so with the understanding that the woodworkers would supply their own members to fill the places of those discharged. This they failed to do and then I rehired the ten whom I had discharged. Therein, it seems, I invited a strike, for now all of the men who had remained loyal to the woodworkers have walked out and the only ones left at the bench are the ten carpenter members."

The strike is the first of many that are promised as a result of the struggle between the carpenters' and woodworkers' unions. The carpenters, for their part, have started hostilities by ordering their members not to work anywhere in the country for the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company.

In the building industry there is a clash over jurisdiction among union officials that gives rise to strikes and ties up work sometimes for months. The latest example of this is in a strike of all building-trades mechanics that has been ordered on buildings in course of construction at Prairie avenue and Thirty-ninth street because the hod carriers employed are not affiliated with the organization controlled by Herman Lilion. Sixty steamfitters are on strike at the new Marshall Field building and the Commercial National Bank building because plumbers were allowed to instal pipes for the vacuum cleaning system.—[Chicago News.

From Jack Cade to Willie Hearst.

From the day of Jack Cade to Hearst, there has never been a time when a bald appeal to the lowest and most ignorant mob of any country to take property from those who have it and give it to those who are too lazy to work for it could not obtain a very considerable hearing. Stripped of all extraneous matter, such is the radical movement in New York. Hearst himself and his personality amount to nothing. He has enormous private means, and it so happens that he has been enabled to do much to crystallize the Jack Cade idea in modern times. We have now reached the stage in our development when it is well that the issue, if there be any so base and unpatriotic as to appeal to the discontented and greedy, should be fought out, and in the great State of New York, with its thousands of ignorant people grouped in large cities, the battle will be fought on a gigantic scale.—[Philadelphia Ledger.

UNMASKING OF UNIONISM.

Once Masqueraded in Guise of Philanthropy.

Ministers and Public Deceived by Gold Brick.

Hypocrisy Made Clear in the Light of Truth.

Samuel Hanneford, editor of the Western Architect and Builder, writing of trades-unionism prior to and since 1903, says:

Before 1903 scarcely a newspaper in the land would headline a news item regarding the acts of unionism, in accordance with the actual facts of the occurrence. They would hardly believe the incidents true, and did not wish to. Their sympathies were most decidedly with the cause of labor, for they held the mistaken idea that unionism stood for labor.

The general public felt the same and were willing that labor should be favored. The ministers of the several religious denominations were moved with the same impulse, and hoped that the masses could be reached spiritually by taking sides with labor, and with this idea in view, went so far as to pass resolutions at their denominational meetings that were absolutely unmanly and half apologetic for their murderous crimes, and which must have caused some eminent members of "inner circles" to laugh in their sleeves as they read them. In fact, for a time it seemed as though ministers of the gospel were actually falling over each other in their intense desire to place themselves on record as friends of labor.

These, like others, mistook unionism for the cause of labor.

It was not altogether an unnatural mistake. The leaders of unionism had for years paraded themselves as representatives of labor, standing for the brotherhood of men, and as those who were toilers for the uplift and betterment of the workingman.

Indeed, the general public made the same mistake, and placed their confidence in the blatant claims and professions of unionism, instead of applying the test suggested by the real friend of labor, and who truly loved all men, "By their fruits ye shall know them." Thus we see that the sympathizing press, the occupants of the pulpits, and philanthropic men and women everywhere were deceived into the belief that here, at last, was an agency and power that would rebuke wrong and would restrain the oppression of capital and the greed of employers, for the leaders of this reforming agency had filled all minds with the story that all employers were capitalists, and that all capitalists were grinding the faces of the poor and growing rich through oppression; and that trusts, combines, etc., were agencies through whose methods the wealthy men had gained their wealth.

But in 1903 these deceived well-wishers were awakened to the truth, and realized that these specious leaders of laboring men stood only for about 12 per cent. of those who worked for a living, and that these men had begotten and stood for an organization that was the most selfish, iron-bound trust in the country, an organization that was oath-bound to a degree that placed its demands before the duty and claim of patriotism, before the church, before the home and ties of family and of friendship—that stood not for labor, or for laboring men in common, but only for a selfish minority. The members of their organization, a mere handful of the actual workers of the country, and so selfish and overbearing in their claims and actions as to lay down the dictum that no man should work for himself, his wife and children, unless he belonged to their organization and became as one of them, and forbore his manhood, and the right to think and act according to the rulings of his individual judgment and in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience.

The public also awakened to the fact that this organization, this oath-bound trust and monopoly, had been again and again instrumental in all kinds of violence, of arson, of personal abuse, of brutal assaults by hired assassins of their predetermined victims; also of dynamiting property, of bringing about conditions that jeopardized the lives of scores of workingmen, merely because they preferred being freemen rather than members of a body of men whose trail is marked with blood and strewed with the wrecks of property and the ashes of burnings, from the shores of the Atlantic to the waves of the Pacific, and who have capped the climax of their infamy with the crime of denying the young men of the country the opportunity of entering the vocation of their choice in life, by shutting them out of the opportunities of learning the trades and thus shutting them out of well-paid employments and thrusting them down to menial and ill-paid labor.

Never before in the history of the world has vile hypocrisy so successfully posed as virtue, of self-styled friends of the workingman so cruelly combined to keep them poor; and all because the 12 per cent of organized labor had determined to keep the best paid employments for themselves.

But what an awakening came to the country in 1903! When the Anthracite Coal Commission published their findings there came a great light. This oath-bound organization was brought out into the open and there has remained, and its daily doings, its violence, its false pretenses are now made plain, for the facts of its everyday life are recorded. We are begining to know the truth. It is true we read less of their claims to virtue and of their professions and self-laudation, but vastly more of their deeds, and men read, and men think. The words of the coal commission find an echo in the hearts of the people, for it expresses the fundamental belief of the present day and generation. In fact, it strikes anew the chords of freedom and personal liberty.

In their report they say:

"Our language is the language of a free people, and fails to furnish any form of speech by which the right of a citizen to work when he pleases, for whom he pleases, and on what terms he pleases can be successfully denied."

These words state the underlying instinct of the people, and this universal appreciation of the importance of individual liberty can never be reversed. It is utterly vain for unionism to kick against the pricks of freedom and of facts. This country was born into liberty in 1776; was born anew at Gettysburg in 1863, and these pangs of freedom's travail can never be forgotten, for the time will never come when it shall be thought to be in vain, and that which was then won will never again be lost.

THE BRITISH UNEMPLOYED.

Some Serious Problems Which Now Confront and Puzzle British Statesmen.

No speech of the recent session of Parliament attracted more attention, and none has had more effect than that of John Burns, president of the Local Government Board, on the problem of reducing the numbers of the unemployed in Great Britian, says the Boston Transcript. It is true that that speech was in anything but a sanguine tone. Its candor is illustrated in its most general conclusion, to wit, that a large proportion, the majority, indeed, of the unemployed are practically unemployable. They inherit the seeds of their undoing in morals and character, or the lack of it. They are added to almost hopelessly by the practice of setting boys to work at an early age at odd jobs, at casual days' labor, at small tasks of clerking and errand-running, until the time has passed for them to acquire any trade or useful and methodical occupation at which employment can be generally commanded. Attention has thus been turned sharply to the discussion of the national school system, and to the expediency of instituting some effective teaching of trades and advanced handicraft in universal demand. Physical culture and medical inspection in the schools are to be insisted on as part of the system. This leads on to the provision of breakfast and other meals for the little victims of parental neglect or cruelty; and this again to the protection of the infant and adolescent future citizens from the demands on their labor by their thriftless or unscrupulous elders. It is found that at least 50,000 children of tender age are working more than twenty hours a week in addition to their twenty-seven hours in school. The London County Council has issued new regulations designed to break up the street and shop working of school children out of school hours.

All this new effort may have some perceptible effects ten and twenty years hence, but does not touch the present load of misery weighing upon the conscience of the better elements of society. The statisticians of the Local Government Board show that the addition of a hundred thousand to the pauper roll has been one of the sequelae of the South African War. The total is just under a million, with a remarkable increase about one-third in the last generation, the number of insane paupers has doubled. Of the million of paupers over sixty thousand are children. It is coming to be generally agreed that the workhouse system is broken down; that it costs more to take care of helpless and destitute old age in the almshouses than it would under a system of old-age pensions. Some methods must be discovered for the treatment of unemployment less demoralizing to the recipient of society's dole, and less wasteful of its human material. Tentative essays are under way in a number of directions already, chiefly in the plans for bringing upon the agricultural lands the surplus city population.

To this end a beginning has actually been made of the breaking up of the agricultural lands belonging to the crown, with an estate of 916 acres in Cambridgeshire. This is being cut up into five-acre ten-acre and twenty-acre farms and let to tenants through local organizations in sympathetic relations with the new Minister of Agriculture, Lord Carrington. The Lincolnshire Small Holdings Association has for example already let 700 acres in small holdings and has over two thousand separate applications on its books. It is hoped also through voluntary local organizations of this kind that some eight thousand to ten thousand acres of the 70,000 acres belonging to the crown will be let loose for some well-considered plan of afforestation employing labor otherwise unused. Besides this the London County Council, in taking over its latest acquisition in the way of tramways (the North Metropolitan Tramways Company,) applies to the employés the Council's standard conditions of labor—that is to say, by the shortening of the hours required of the men, 385 more will have to be employed on this one of the County Council systems, and this without under-employing or pampering the men, as they work ten hours a day six days in the week. An extension of normal regular work like this is expected to avoid the demoralizing effects of outright "relief" work. General Booth in one of his latest outgivings declared himself in favor of multiplying tramways to suburban cottage-districts, with a free season ticket to the holder of each cottage thrown in, as one means of distributing an overcrowded city into its suburbs.

Unions Learning Slowly.

Labor unions are gradually learning that there is no surer way of alienating public sympthy than by unreasoning and tyrannical uses of their power. They long ago learned that public sympathy is essential to the success of the labor movement, and there has been an unquestioned advance in the official methods by which the unions seek to gain their ends.

There are still hotbeds of thuggery, where the "wrecking crew" is depended upon to secure what the popular sense of justice does not accord, but this method seems to be getting into disfavor among unions as a whole. Out of it all it is to be hoped there will soon come a time when no man's right to organize and secure the betterment of his condition by peaceful and legitimate means will be denied and when no man's inherent and inalienable right to work shall be gainsaid. There is no more sense in a condition whereby only members of a certain union shall lay the bricks and do the carpenter work on a building than there would be in requiring all stonemasons employed on the building to be Methodists and all carpenters Knights of Pythias.

The days of union domination by force and terrorism are passing away and the condition of the laboring man and the skilled workman is constantly improving. However, the situation is not yet ideal by any means, any more than other sociological conditions are all that might be desired. But the trend of events is steadily toward reason and justice, the recognition of the underlying principle of the open shop, where those who see fit to organize for mutual betterment and those who do not see fit to so organize may work side by side, the rights of each respected and the privileges of none denied.—[Kansas City Journal.

The Labor Trust Conspiracy.

The little junta of Gompers's federationists is narrow and proscriptive. Gompers himself is a man of very little ability and of no influence of any sort aside from that which his brief authority as head of his order gives him for the moment. But, to the extent of that sway, his influence as a marplot is as vicious as that which was exerted by immeasurably bigger conspirators. The American people are hostile to all sorts of conspiracies to array classes or callings against each other. The workers who are outside of the Federation of Labor outnumber those who are in that organization fifteen to one, and many who are in the organization will refuse to do Gompers's bidding.—[St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Railroads Need Laborers.

Scarcity of labor is now as much of a problem for railroads generally as it has been during the last summer for contractors engaged on actual or prospective new construction. Men are needed particularly for the care of trackage. The dearth of labor has been strongly emphasized in a single instance, where a proposed line improvement to cost $1,000,000 and to be begun Jan. 1, cannot be figured on for time of completion because of uncertainty as to labor.

The situation is reported serious. Laborers are going where they can get the highest wages. Some roads are taking laborers away from manufacturing concerns and the latter in several cases are returning the compliment.—[N. Y. Commercial.

UTTER ROTTENNESS OF SCHMITZ-RUEF REGIME.

IT is time that something be done to govern this city and save it from the lawbreaker and the criminal. The reign of lawlessness and crime, the corruption of political leaders, and the low state of public opinion are matters which should appeal with tremendous power to the minds of all citizens who have an interest in the welfare of this city, says the San Francisco Bulletin.

It is known upon good authority that there are men on the police force who have criminal records, whose pictures have been in the rogues' gallery. They are appointed by Abraham Ruef and Eugene E. Schmitz.

It is known that burglaries have been committed by policemen in uniform, all of which raises the suspicion in the mind of the public that the relation between the police department and the criminal classes is close.

It is known, to the sorrow of at least seventy homes, that the United Railroads are violating laws and killing people on the streets for the privilege of which in the neighborhood of $200,000 was paid not into the people's treasury, but into the hands of the administration. This was for the overhead trolley and other privileges, but it is asking too much of a Supervisor whose pockets are bulging with United Railroad bribe money to interfere with this reign of death on our streets.

It is known that voting machines can be "fixed," and it is generally believed that Abe Ruef will "fix" them and vote the city in November according to his will.

It is a matter of public knowledge that he has controlled all three parties to the extent of placing two jail-delivering Police Judges on all three tickets. Their names are Conlan and Mogan.

It is further known that Chief of Police Dinan threatened to take away the license from a saloon-keeper if he didn't turn his strength with delegates against Judge Lawlor, and that he delivered four votes and kept his saloon. Dinan should be removed from office for this.

There isn't a law on the statute books that is being observed by Ruef criminals. If one of them commits a crime a nod from Ruef to one of his jail-delivering Police Judges will set him free.

In the midst of these ruins Ruef is planning to take out of the City Treasury the sum of $10,500,000 and hand it over to Will Tevis for an inadequate water supply, subtracting, some say three millions, others say more, for bribing the Supervisors and others, stuffing the registers and "fixing" the machines so that a "popular vote" would make it legal.

THE LABOR TRUST AND UNCLE SAM.

THE organization of the postal clerks of the United States into a trade union, as a part of the American Federation of Labor, has been much commented upon, from various points of view, and the question has been raised whether it is not a violation of law. The question may, perhaps, be answered in the negative, provided the new union does not use its organization for the extortion of higher salaries from the government or some similar purpose. It may, however, legitimately be asked what object there is in such an organization of the postal clerks, unless they are to work in harmony with the rest of "organized labor," using the same means to gain the same ends, and there certainly is a strong suggestion of extraordinary complications which might occur if this "unionizing" of the public services were carried to its logical extreme.

Let us suppose this new union respects the President's order and refrains from striking or otherwise agitating for increase of pay—though in such abnegation it would be foregoing a right which all its fellow unions claim and exercise. It still might go on strike for shorter hours, or to get rid of some clerks who preferred not to join it. In such case the whole postal service of the country might be "help up." Or, suppose the union should refuse to handle non-union mail matter, and should require every letter to be written with union pen and ink on union paper, if not, indeed, by a union hand, and be stamped with a union label? That would be no more extreme than the attitude taken by other unions in other matters.

Again, let us suppose the union system to be more generally extended throughout the public service, as it might logically be, for if postal clerks have a right to become "organized," all other government employés would certainly seem to have the same right. Are the various departments of governmental administration to discriminate among the citizens of the republic according to their membership or non-membership in unions? Are unionist customs inspectors to be more lenient with the goods of a fellow unionist than with those of a non-unionist? Are only unionist farmers to receive free seeds and get weather bulletins? If, as many unionists demand, all the railroads were to be owned and operated by the State, should the unionist employé refuse to let non-unionists ride in the cars? If the army and navy were unionized, would they refuse to fight any but non-unionist foes? Are the police and marshals to refuse to arrest unionist criminals?

Some of these speculations may now seem entirely visionary and fantastic. Yet there can be little question that a unionizing of the public services generally would before long have one of two effects. Either it would reduce unionism to a mere name, without power or benefit, through a prohibition or a failure of public service unions to exercise the privileges and methods of those in private industries, or it would cause a grave disturbance of the public service and raise pretty acutely the question whether the country was freely governed for and by the whole people or for and by the unions.—[New York Tribune.

SAN FRANCISCO'S CRIMSON RECORD.

THERE is a reign of terror in this city and an uprising of the people against the rotten police management which is responsible for the outrageous conditions, says the San Francisco Chronicle of October 10. In the little more than two months since the first day of August the records show fifty-one felonies of sufficient magnitude to get prominent display in the press, of which nine were murders committed in the course of robbery, twenty-five were robberies with violence, of which the victims did not die, and ten were burglaries. There have been many felonious assaults on women for robbery or other purposes which the victims have not made public. The city is infested with known criminals who do not work, but are well supplied with money. Brutal robberies occur in broad daylight and in crowded streets. Villainous faces are everywhere in evidence. Neither man nor woman feels safe out of doors after dark. They hardly feel safe at their own firesides. The police force has proved itself utterly powerless either to prevent crime or detect criminals. And yet the faces and forms of the patrolmen show intelligence, vigor and power adequate to any emergency. That a few of them are corrupt is doubtless true, but the force as a whole is an agency which, if properly led and directed, is capable of making the city as safe as a country village. The personal bravery of the men has never been found wanting in any emergency which they have had to face.

For the conditions which prevail in this city the responsibility must rest where the authority and power to prevent them rest—in those who are installed in the "upper office." We do not care to go farther than that at this time. It would not be difficult to fix individual responsibility. We do not charge the directors of the police force with encouraging assaults, robberies and murders. We do charge them with forming part of a corrupt "system" which ignores law and decency, connives with and protects certain forms of vice, and creates conditions which attract criminals of all classes by the opportunities offered and the demoralization of a [illegible] force which knows its leaders [illegible] corrupt and the familiar associates [illegible] law-breakers. No single patrolman could mend matters if he tried. [illegible] police force under proper discipline and properly led, and with the backing of police judges who do not [illegible] their places to the criminal vote [illegible] make San Francisco as safe as [illegible] other city. There must be a [illegible] In former years the people of [illegible] city have shown that they would [illegible] patiently stand still and be [illegible] and their acts received the moral [illegible] dorsement of mankind. We do [illegible] wish to see a repetition of [illegible] scenes, but we know that present [illegible] ditions are not to be endured by [illegible] virile community.

Mr. Roosevelt's Duty.

A public duty confronts Mr. Roosevelt which we trust neither the [illegible] igencies of a Congressional campaign nor his preoccupation with [illegible] reform will hinder him from [illegible] ing at once. In defiance of his [illegible] issued three years ago, representatives of postal clerks of various [illegible] the country assembled in Chicago [illegible] organized a "National Federation [illegible] Postoffice Clerks." This is a [illegible] union, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and if the organization is permitted to [illegible] Samuel Gompers, president of the [illegible] tional Federation, will [illegible] the spokesman of the postal clerks [illegible] to him they will look for [illegible]

It is intolerable that the postal service of the country should be [illegible] to the caprices and [illegible] Samuel Gompers or any other [illegible] leader. The postal clerks have [illegible] casion to organize a union. They [illegible] under the protection of the [illegible] ice regulations, and of the [illegible] statutes. Their compensation [illegible] not by the union scale, but by [illegible] Congress. Their affiliation [illegible] ized labor would be destructive [illegible] cipline, detrimental to the [illegible] ice, and would breed a [illegible] gard of law and of the [illegible] convenience of the people.

Mr. Roosevelt cannot [illegible] flagrant disobedience of [illegible] order.—[New York Times.

How We Cure

Weak Puny Men

There is one thing that we notice in all our patients—the [illegible] They have wasted it in some manner, usually by foolishness. [illegible] they have lost. We know that we can give it back, so we know [illegible] every weak, puny man who will follow our advice.

With our new improved belt, the result of many years of study, we [illegible] any case of weakness.

Or We Will Forfeit $1000 in Gold

This is no idle boast. We talk straight from the shoulder, and back up every thing we say.

With some poor men, who have spent every cent they have earned [illegible] who have promised everything, it is not enough for us to say: [illegible] Others have said that and have not cured them. Now we want to [illegible] that we can and will, if our advice is followed. We are doing it every day.

Mr. John Kiessner, Humboldt, Nev., writes us: "I want to [illegible] Belt has done me great good. It is the best thing I ever tried, [illegible] bless you for it. I now feel as if I was only 25 years old."

It makes a man feel young. Youth is health, vigor, courage, ambition, [illegible] joy and happiness.

Give us a man broken down from dissipation, hard work or worry, [illegible] cause which has sapped his vitality. Let him follow our advice [illegible] and we will make him as vigorous in every respect as any man of [illegible]

We will not promise to make a Hercules of a man who was never [illegible] nature to be strong and sturdy. Even that man we can make better [illegible] but the man who has been strong and has lost his strength, we can make [illegible] as he ever was.

We can give back to any man what he has lost by violation of the laws of Nature. We can stop all drains upon his vitality in ten days.

We explain how we do this in our book for men, which we will send free, on request. Every man who would like to reach the highest physical [illegible] should read it.

A man who is nervous, whose brain and body are weak, who sleeps badly, awakes more tired than when he went to bed, who is easily discouraged, [illegible] to brood over imaginary troubles, who has lost ambition and energy [illegible] problems, lacks the animal electricity which the Dr. McLaughlin Electric Belt supplies.

The whole force of vitality in your body is dependent upon your animal electricity. When you lose that by draining the system in any manner our Belt will replace it, and will cure you.

122 N. 20th Ave., Los Angeles, Cal.

Dr. M. D. McLaughlin Co.: Dear Sirs—I want to say [illegible] that I purchased of you a month ago, that it has done all [illegible] I am highly pleased with the result. I can truthfully say that it [illegible] more and quicker than I expected. Yours respectfully, [illegible]

Letters like that tell a story which means a great deal [illegible] a beacon light to a man who has become discouraged from [illegible] get such letters every day.

Our Belt has a wonderful influence upon tired, weak nerves. [illegible] invigorates them, and stirs up a great force of energy in a man. [illegible] We make the best electric body appliances in the world, having [illegible] years to perfecting it. Our cures after everything else has failed are our best arguments.

Free Electric Suspensory for Weak Men

This suspensory is constructed so as to carry the current to the [illegible] the seat of all weakness. It is free with the Belts for men.

Mr. John Gately, Long Valley, Cal., writes: "Your Belt has done [illegible] rheumatism and stomach trouble to such an extent that I can now [illegible] work in peace. I have gained thirty pounds in weight and am [illegible]

Give us a man with pains in his back, a dull ache in his [illegible] "come-and-go" pains in the shoulders, chest and side, Sciatica in his [illegible] Rheumatism or any ache or pain, and our Belt will pour the oil of [illegible] ing body and drive out every sign of pain. No pain can exist where our Belt is worn.

Mr. E. B. Miller, of Compton avenue, Los Angeles, Cal., writes: [illegible] your high-grade Belt for two months for lame back, rheumatism [illegible] nerves, and am now a well man. I have gained over six pounds in [illegible] as strong and hearty as I ever did."

They come every day from everywhere. There is not a town or [illegible] country which has not cures by Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt.

Now, what does this mean to you, dear reader? If you are not what you ought to be, can you ask any better proof to make you try it? [illegible] is as simple, as easy to use, as sure to cure and as cheap as Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt? We have not seen one. You must try it. In justice to [illegible] those who look to you for their future happiness, try it now. [illegible] Such a matter ought not to be delayed.

It is as good for women as for men. Worn while you sleep, it causes no trouble. You feel the gentle, glowing heat from it constantly, but no sting or burn, as in old-style Belts. We take other Belts in exchange.

Send for our beautiful book, full of the things which a man [illegible] he wants to be a strong man. We send it, sealed, free. Cut out this ad and send it to us.

The Newport News Shipyard.

[illegible] PLANT THAT RIVALS ANY OTHER SIMILAR ENTERPRISE IN THE WORLD.

By Waldon Fawcett.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

ONE of the industrial marvels of the United States and one of which the nation has good reason to be proud is the monster steel [illegible] building establishment founded [by] the late Collis P. Huntington and [now] the sole property of the heirs of [the] great railroad builder. The plant of the Newport News Shipbuilding [and] Dry Dock Company, the largest [ship]building industry on the Western [Hemi]sphere, if not in the world, is [locat]ed at Newport News, Va., on [Hampton] Roads—the waters whereon [naval] warfare was revolutionized [some] four decades ago by the famous [duel] between the first two armor[illegible], the Monitor and Merrimac.

[illegible] shipyard, which represents an [illegible] of more than $15,000,000, [illegible] an area of nearly one hundred [illegible] acres and has a water [illegible] of half a mile. Its arrangement has been the result of a care[illegible] plan to have all the [illegible] a ship from its inception to [illegible], absolutely progressive. [illegible] material enters at one place and [illegible] handled moves steadily forward to its final destination without [illegible] of steps being necessary.

[illegible] shops are so grouped as to [illegible] this time and labor-saving [illegible]. The buildings, most of which [illegible] structures, and which cover [illegible], are connected by a web [illegible] tracks, so that material [illegible] is handled by the company's [illegible] may be transferred from [illegible] ship under construction with [illegible] expenditure of time and [illegible].

[illegible] track connects the big vessel [illegible] plant with the main lines of [illegible] tapping this territory, [illegible] carloads of steel plates, angle [illegible] and castings are, upon arrival, [illegible] directly to the most convenient [illegible] of the yard where they are [illegible] by steam and electric cranes. [illegible] the perfection of this system [illegible] most instances a casting can [illegible] from a car and deposited near [illegible] which is to perform the ini[illegible] of machining it. Steam, [illegible] and compressed air are all [illegible] extensively in the Newport [illegible].

THE POWER PLANT.

[illegible] of eight huge boilers [illegible] at a pressure of 120 pounds [illegible] steam whereas the electric [illegible] an output of about 2270 [illegible] and this current is dis[illegible] through one main switch[illegible] feet in length. Incidentally [illegible] explained that the entire [illegible] including shops, wharves [illegible], is lighted by electricity [illegible] work may be carried on at [illegible] well as day. The power [illegible] includes three air compres[illegible] of compressing a total [illegible] of free air per minute to [illegible] of 100 pounds per square [illegible] power is utilized in operat[illegible] hammers, riveters, chip[illegible] machines. Finally, [illegible] plant of sufficient capacity to furnish power for all the hydraulic tools in use.

This model shipbuilding institution is divided into two main departments, the hull department and the machinery department. Each of these in turn is subdivided into numerous smaller departments. These latter are so arranged that material may be transferred from one to the other by the shortest route. The ship shed, framing shed and kindred departments are grouped adjacent to the ship ways, where the new vessels are laid down while the machine, boiler, blacksmith, copper and outfitting shops form another group. The pattern and joiner shops, lumber sheds, fireproofing plant and sawmill constitute another cluster of harmonious departments, while yet another is formed by the buildings near the piers and dry docks, wherein repair work is carried on.

The machinery equipment of this monster shipyard is as notable in its way as is the institution as a whole. In the framing shed, where may be seen the first stages of building a ship, there is in operation the largest manhole puncher in the world—a machine which punches a hole 18x27 inches in size through steel plates an inch in thickness. In the ship shed are 32-foot bending rolls and other similar record-breakers. The bending shed has furnaces and other equipment for heating and bending bars of iron 70 feet in length and the machine shop—100x525 feet in size and probably the largest, costliest and best-appointed one in America—has planers 60, 84 and 120 inches in length to say nothing of the largest wall planer in the world, a fifty-horse-power motor being required to operate this one machine.

PROMPTNESS OF REPAIR WORK.

The Newport News company operates its own foundries—one for steel and iron castings and the other for brass work. The repair plant, including an equipment of dry docks, outfitting basin, piers, stationary and floating derricks, etc., is a revelation in itself. Repairs are not limited to one department of ship work, but at this plant any damage to any part of a vessel can be repaired, no matter whether it be sails, spars, crank or tail shaft, a shell plate, a patch on a boiler or a new steam pipe. The institution is fortunate in that the depth of water in the harbor and the small range of tide, which is but two and one-half feet, allow a ship to enter the dry docks at any hour of the day and there is no loss of time in waiting for high tide. Frequently vessels in need of repairs are docked without discharging their cargoes.

The dry docks at Newport News constitute one of the most interesting features of the ship yard. One dry dock is 639 feet in length and another is 860 feet long. The latter cost nearly a million dollars and two first-class battleships or two large merchant ships may be docked together in this basin. There is no ship afloat too large to be docked at Newport News and it is no unusual sight to see two ships in one of the dry docks and three or four vessels in the other, all undergoing repairs at the same time. It requires from an hour and a half to two and one-half hours to pump out one of these dry docks and the work of the colossal pumps is most interesting. There are main centrifugal pumps of 100,000 gallons per minute each and drainage pumps with a capacity of 12,000 gallons per minute. The pumps are driven by electric motors of 1000 horse power each. On the water front at the Newport News yard there are five large piers, one of which is 900 feet long, and the outfitting basin above mentioned is 900 by 500 feet in size and has a depth of water of about forty feet.

The Newport News ship yard has been rendered world-famous by reason of its wonderful equipment of auxiliaries, such as cranes, derricks, etc., for use in handling boilers, armor plate and other classes of heavy material that enter into the makeup of steel ships. At the head of the list stands the remarkable revolving derrick, Hercules, a 150-ton electrically operated burden bearer that ranks as the largest derrick crane in the world.

THE GIANT DERRICK.

This giant machine was designed, built and erected by the Newport News Company. The derrick jib is capable of having its outer end raised or lowered, thus giving to the hoisting blocks, which depend vertically from this end, a movement not only of rotation about the center of the derrick, but also of translation in and out from the center. The derrick can operate on all weights lying anywhere within a circle-ring whose maximum and minimum diameters are respectively 207 and 83 feet. The ropes for hoisting are of plough steel wire one and one-fourth inches in diameter and each rope has a breaking strength of 100,000 pounds.

Supplementing the work of the Hercules are the activities of another powerful mechanical toiler, the shear legs with a lifting capacity of 100 tons, and then there is the array of ingenious balanced cantilever cranes—one of the novelties of the present-day industrial world. These cantilevers, each with outspread arms upward of 200 feet from tip to tip, are mounted above the shipways on trestles 100 feet high and may be seen miles away, carrying in mid-air the plates and angles that are ready to be worked into the vessel. There are five cantilever cranes, three of which handle material for two ships simultaneously, under construction on either side of each trestle. One of the cranes is operated by steam, but all the others are impelled by the magic current. As in the case of the big derrick Hercules, one man is sufficient for the operation of each of these cranes that carry loads of thousands of pounds at a speed of hundreds of feet per minute.

The naval products of the Newport News yard make it an institution of historical importance to every patriotic American citizen. Among its contributions to Uncle Sam's navy are the battleships Kearsarge, Kentucky, Illinois, Missouri, Virginia, Louisiana and Minnesota, the armored cruisers West Virginia, Maryland, North Carolina and Montana; the protected cruiser Charleston; the monitor Arkansas; the gunboats Nashville, Wilmington and Helena. The company has built many merchant ships engaged in the Pacific trade, including the Korea and Siberia.

Prison warder (recognizing old offender, to jailer:) Well, that fellow's back again.

Jailer: Yes, Herr Warden, there's nothing beats a comfortable home.—[Figaro.

THE DEMAND FOR WORKERS.

All Lines of Industry Are Swamped With Business.

Railroad Systems of Country Are Outgrown.

The World's Greatest Iron-Producing Country.

From all over the country continues to come stories of the riot of business entailing excessive demands on all kinds of industries and creating a demand for labor impossible to be supplied in many localities. Never before has there been such a demand for laborers or such a variety of new work demanding the investment of capital in the establishment of new industrial enterprises. The railroad companies of the country have been caught in the crush of new business and are unable to handle it. We have outgrown our railroads, and at this, the most favorable season of the year for expeditious handling of freight, practically the whole railroad system of the country is so overwhelmed with business that there is a real shortage of cars and an utter inability to handle freight promptly. On many railroads the running of trains on schedule time seems to have become a thing of the past. Serious as this is, it does not come as a surprise to those who have been watching the relative growth of the country and its railroads.

Comparing the mileage, the number of cars, locomotives and ton mileage of the railroads of the country for 1895, 1900 and 1904, we have the following:

Mileage—1895, 180,955; 1900, 194,321; 1904, 212,348.

Cars—1895 1,265,108; 1900, 1,385,253; 1904, 1,770,834.

Engines—1895, 36,610; 1900, 38,065; 1904, 48,658.

Ton Mileage—1895, 88,567,770,801; 1900, 141,162,109,413; 1904, 173,613,762,130.

Passenger Mileage—1895, 12,642,202,551; 1900, 16,313,284,471; 1904, 22,167,124,184.

These figures show an increase between 1895 and 1904 of 31,000 miles or 17 per cent., while of cars there was an increase of 505,000, or nearly 40 per cent., and of locomotives 12,000, or about 33 per cent. The total ton mileage of freight traffic increased by 85,000,000,000 tons, or just a little less than 100 per cent., and the passenger mileage by 9,500,000,000, or 75 per cent. These figures give some indication of the very great improvement in the traffic per car and per locomotive. With a gain of only 3 per cent. in the number of locomotives the freight traffic has increased nearly 100 per cent., while the mileage of railroads increased during the period 17 per cent. Since 1904 this growth in traffic has gone on still more rapidly, and we are now at a point where the present railroads with their present equipment have reached the utmost limit of their facilities, and a further increase in traffic would be practically impossible unless there should be a steady expansion in the facilities for handling. It is true that the railroads are ordering new rolling stock and improving their roadbed, and many of them are double-tracking, and some of them in places putting down three and four tracks.

The growth which we have seen during the last ten years, stupendous as it has been, must of necessity be far exceeded by that of the next ten years. There may be ups and downs of business, but while we are to expect occasional slackening from the present high pressure, each new burst of activity carries the country far ahead of the point at which it started. To a population of about 85,000,000 we will add during the next ten years about 20,000,000, giving us a total in 1916 of 105,000,000 people, and by 1926, or twenty years hence, 130,000,000, and in 1931, or twenty-five years from now, our population will be 145,000,000. The gain in population in the next twenty years will be but a little less than the total population of the country as late as 1880. Beyond our grasp as these figures are, it must be borne in mind that business expansion makes a far greater rate of increase than the growth of population. In the latter the increase will probably average a little less than 25 per cent. every ten years, while the volume of freight, as judged by the past, is increasing 100 per cent. in the same period, and the value of agricultural and manufactured products between 1895 and 1904 gained more than twice as rapidly as population.

ADDING TO EQUIPMENT.

The Canadian railroads are feeling the same excessive demand as those of the United States, and to overcome the shortage of cars the Canadian Pacific Railroad is turning out a new freight car from its Montreal shops every thirty-five minutes in the working day, and a new locomotive comes out every six days. The Pennsylvania and the Baltimore and Ohio railroads have sent out appeals for men for shifting crews, telegraph operators, agents, trainmen and other different lines of railroad work.

From the outlook in the United States the present year will exceed every previous one, with the exception of 1905, in regard to equipment orders. The latter year was the high record one for the equipment manufacturers. The following table, from the Railway Age, shows the record in this respect for full years since 1900, as compared with thirty-five weeks of 1906:

	Freight cars.	Passenger cars.	Locomotives.
1901	193,439	2,879	4,340
1902	195,248	2,439	4,665
1903	108,936	2,310	3,283
1904	136,561	2,213	2,538
1905	341,315	3,289	6,265
1906 (35 weeks)	156,330	1,606	2,642

THE METAL INDUSTRY.

Time was, and not so long ago, either, when Great Britain had a long lead in the iron and steel production, but this has now been so well passed that a member of Parliament, in the London News, calls attention to the fact that "the order of production, which thirty years ago was Britain first and the rest nowhere, is now: (1) America, (2) Germany, (3) the United Kingdom. In 1905 America produced 22,992,000 tons of pig, Germany 10,[illegible]00,000 tons, and Britain 9,593,000 tons. Thus America now produces more iron than Britain and Germany put together. Yet so great is her home demand at this time that she is importing iron from us instead of dumping on our shores. In steel production we are also far outdistanced by America and Germany. The figures for production in 1905 are: America 19,912,000 tons, Germany 10,067,000 tons, United Kingdom 5,812,000 tons."

Of copper, it is estimated that the production of the United States for the year 1906 will exceed a billion pounds. The actual estimate is 1,005,000,000 pounds, which would compare with a production of 901,360,998 pounds in 1905, and the demand is in excess of these figures.

TEXTILE INDUSTRIES.

The manufacture of absorbent linen, a new industry, is being established at Providence, R. I., by a company capitalized at $400,000. The Denison mills at Sherman, Tex., have just begun to make cloth as well as yarn, the mills being started up after some years of idleness. Another new silk mill is being established at New Berlin, N. Y., while the Crown Silk Company of Bangor, Pa., is adding 300 additional operatives to its establishment.

At Fall River, Mass., the demand for mill help has become so acute that the Industrial Removal office in New York has been asked to send Jewish operatives to that city from among the thousands of Jewish immigrants arriving at that port.

A new carpet mill is being added to the already great plant of the Bigelow Carpet Company at Clinton, Mass., and at Lowell, Mass., and a button factory is to be established at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., that will have a pay roll of $100,000 a year.

These are but scattered industries of the industrial growth now in progress in this country, the aggregate of which is almost beyond comprehension when it is considered that we are a nation of 85,000,000 people, and a sufficient number of employés cannot be obtained to enable all the industries to supply the demand for their products. What an army the employés of any industry would make can be seen from just the number engaged in one industry in one State, Oregon, where the labor commissioner reports 12,101 persons at work in the 313 lumber mills of that State, who received in wages last year $6,648,093.

UTILIZING WASTE PRODUCT.

HOW CHEMISTRY IS ADDING TO OUR WEALTH.

All Portions of Organic and Inorganic Substances Now Being Used. Sawdust Is Made Into Marble, Pine Needles Into Mattresses and Coal Slack Into Cement.

It has been said that a French family will live on what an American family throws away. This is an emphasis of the greater economy of the French people because of their environment. At the same time it is now the fact that economy is becoming the watchword not only of families, but in all kinds of business.

To the business man of today waste has come to be looked upon as little short of crime. Every particle of an organic or inorganic substance has a useful part to play in contributing to human necessities or pleasures, said Henry G. Kittredge in an interesting report made some years ago to the United States Census Bureau, and when it performs no useful function, or remains dormant, it shows that the ingenuity and enterprise of man have not reached their fullest development or that the arts of the laboratory have not revealed all the secrets of nature.

Such remarkable progress has been made during recent years, however, in the almost complete elimination of waste that it would seem that there was little left in this direction for the ingenuity of man and the creative force of science to accomplish. It has for years been the open boast of the Chicago packer that nothing of the hog escapes but the squeal. The refiner of oil can boast with equal truth that nothing escapes from the crude oil which he refines but the smell, and there are many industries where the elimination of waste has been carried to a point of fully as great efficiency as that shown in either the packing or oil industry.

It is to the chemist that we largely owe this tremendous addition to our annual increment of wealth. Thirty years ago, for every ton of finished product turned out by our manufacturers there was one to several hundred pounds of materials which were thrown away as waste. Not only was this so-called "waste-material" considered valueless, but the disposition of it was often a source of considerable expense and annoyance to the manufacturers. Owing to the wonderful progress of chemical knowledge during the last quarter of a century, and the constant finding of new revelations and uses for substances of all kinds, a complete revolution has been wrought in nearly every branch of the manufacturing industry. Instead of this waste material being a source of expense to the manufacturers, the experiments of chemists have shown how it can be converted into products which have a high marketable value, and it is no exaggeration to say that the value of products annually manufactured out of materials which thirty years ago were thrown away as waste today amounts to fully $500,000,000—a sum equal to nearly seven times the annual production of gold in the United States.

Sawdust was for years looked upon as an absolutely waste material, and was either dumped into a stream of flowing water or thrown into a heap where it could be conveniently disposed of. During the last few years a process has been discovered, however, which has resulted in giving sawdust a value far above solid lumber. By this process, which combines the use of hydraulic pressure and the application of intense heat, the particles of sawdust are formed into a solid mass capable of being moulded into any shape and receiving a brilliant polish that is fully as beautiful as ebony, rosewood or mahogany. Ornaments of great beauty can be made in this way closely resembling carved woodwork. In the manufacture of such ornaments the only materials mixed with the sawdust are alum and glue. Imitation marble can be manufactured from a mixture of the finer grades of sawdust with ivory waste, waterglass and glue. The substance thus produced can take a high polish and resembles the finest marble. In Norway acetic acid, wood [illegible] tar and alcohol are produced on a commercial scale out of sawdust.

Successful attempts have been made to utilize the needle-shaped leaflet of the pine tree to produce an article of commercial value for textile and other uses. Factories have been erected, both in this country and in Europe, that convert the pine leaflets into what is called "forest wool," which has proven to be a suitable material for stuffing mattresses and articles of furniture in place of horsehair, for manufacture into hygienic articles for medicinal use, and for articles of dress, such as inner vests, drawers, shirts and chest protectors. In the opinion of chemists the principal use of sawdust in the future will be in the production of sugar and alcohol. Sawdust is practically pure cellulose, which is easily convertible into sugar and alcohol.

For many years bituminous coal operators used to cast aside slack as waste. Later it was sold for 5 cents a ton, and the operators were glad to sell it at this price. Today slack commands at the mine 75 cents a ton, or within 5 cents per ton of the price of runup-mine coal, and the sale of this by-product now adds many thousands of dollars a year to the profits of the large bituminous operators. The increase in the price of slack is due to the demand for fine coal which has arisen from the makers of cement. At first cement manufacturers bought lump coal and then pulverized it to fit their purpose. One of the most enterprising manufacturers of cement some years ago began experimenting with slack, and he soon discovered that it would answer his purpose fully as well as lump coal and greatly reduce the cost of manufacturing cement. This manufacturer is now said to consume 140 tons of slack daily.

THE BOYS' HARD LOT.

Rules for Their Supervision in Colonial Times—Things Laid to Their Door.

[Youth's Companion:] Along with other enlightenments of the age the genus boy seems now to be better understood and appreciated than in the days of the colonies. The worthy advocates of the present that "children should be seen and not heard" were apt to forget that if young people were "heard" at proper seasons they were much more apt to be "seen" to advantage when occasion required. The boys of 1700 were no worse than those of today. What modern lad could sit through a two-hour sermon without the aid of much wriggling and squirming and an occasional kick or two? Mr. W. R. Bliss, in his book on colonial meeting-houses, tells how the youthful portion of the congregation was regarded by our very great-grandfathers.

Certain laws enacted in Massachusetts at the end of the struggle with King Philip declared that the war was a punishment for "the disorder and rudeness of youth in many congregations in time of the worship of God." John Eliot, pastor at Roxbury, evidently thought this a harsh charge to lay at the boys' door, for he expressed his opinion that they had nothing to do with it, and that the war was a judgment on the people for wearing wigs.

In 1666 John Dawes, of Boston, was empowered to take care of all young people "that are disorderly in time of God's solemn worship," and to correct the unruly ones with a small wand. In 1723 John Pike was paid £16 for keeping boys in subjection in the time of service for six months. When hired the second time he doubled the price.

On Cape Cod four men were appointed by a town to take care of the boys on the Lord's Day, and to whip them if necessary. Such officers were termed "inspectors of youth." In Duxbury, as late as 1760, a committee was chosen to look after "the wretched boys" on the Sabbath.

What did these colonial lads do to require such supervision? One almost shrinks from examining into their lawlessness; but the records reveal the depths of their iniquity.

They did not stand up, as their elders did, for the long prayers, but sat with their hats on "during ye whole exercise." They ran out before the prayer was done and "ye blessing pronounced." They were guilty of "Rude and Idel Behaver, such as Smiling and Larfing and Intiseing others to the Same Evil;" of "Pulling the heir of their nabors in time of publick Worship."

One's imagination might go on and add the paper balls and nutshells which were probably thrown from the galleries where "the wretched boys" were imprisoned, the shaking of benches, the sly pinches and the similar ebullitions of youthful spirits which went to make up the sum total of colonial wickedness.

Egyptians Adopting Glassware.

The rapid increase in the imports into Egypt of glassware is reported. The 1905 imports amounted to $700,000, as compared with $200,000 in 1892. This increase is said to be due to the influx of Europeans into the country, and also to the general improvement of conditions of living of the natives, who were formerly contented with earthenware table utensils, but are now large purchasers of glassware. The extensive adoption of oil for lighting purposes has also given rise to a demand for glass lamps, which come from Austria and Germany. Lemonade bottles with marble stoppers are imported largely from Great Britain and delivered at about $5 a gross. Glass bracelets are largely worn by the native women.

Most Remarkable Railway Bridge.

The new railway bridge over the Yellow River in China is one of the largest and most remarkable in the world. It is a mile and seven-eighths in length, and is composed entirely of steel, with no masonry whatever. It rests on steel tubes embedded in the river bottom and supporting a series of arches varying from about 66 to 98 feet in length. Some of the supporting pillars consist of a group of eight steel tubes sunk 59 feet in the river bed. The problems encountered by the engineers were particularly difficult because the river current changes not only with the season, but even day by day. Sometimes where there is a bed of sand one day, three feet of water may be found the next day. The strongest currents are in August

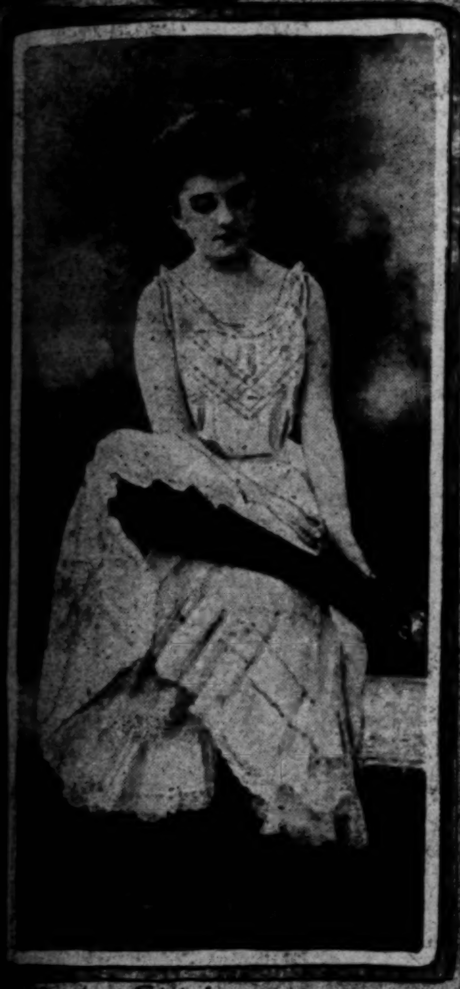
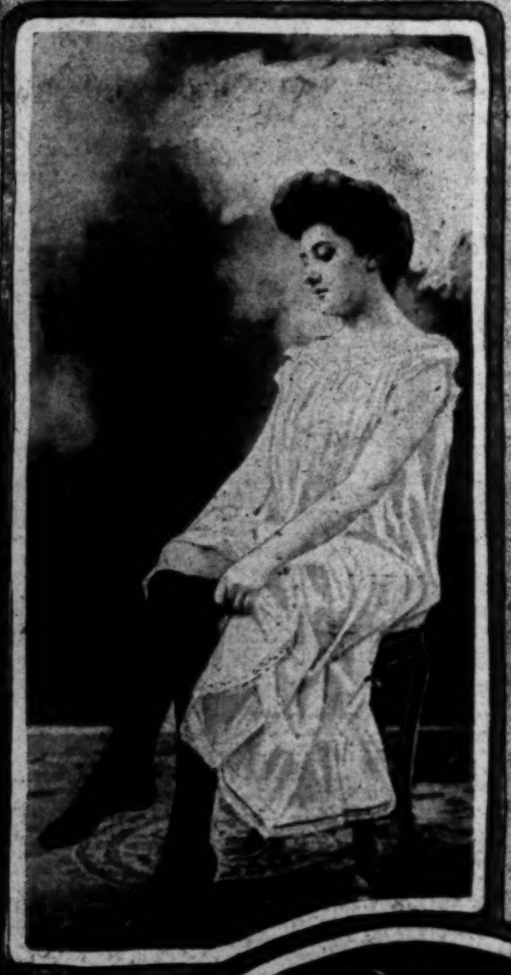
Without a Stitch of Embroidery

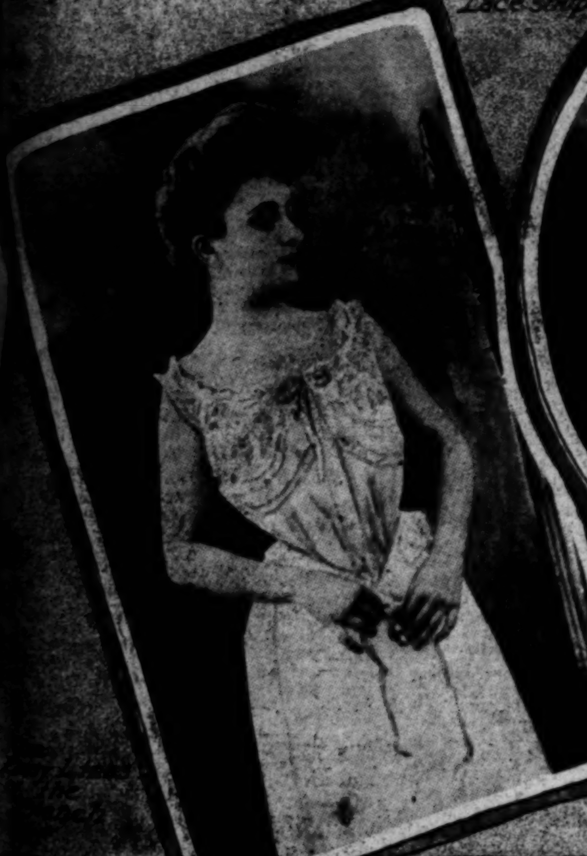
Lace-trimmed Lingerie Rivals French Embroidery

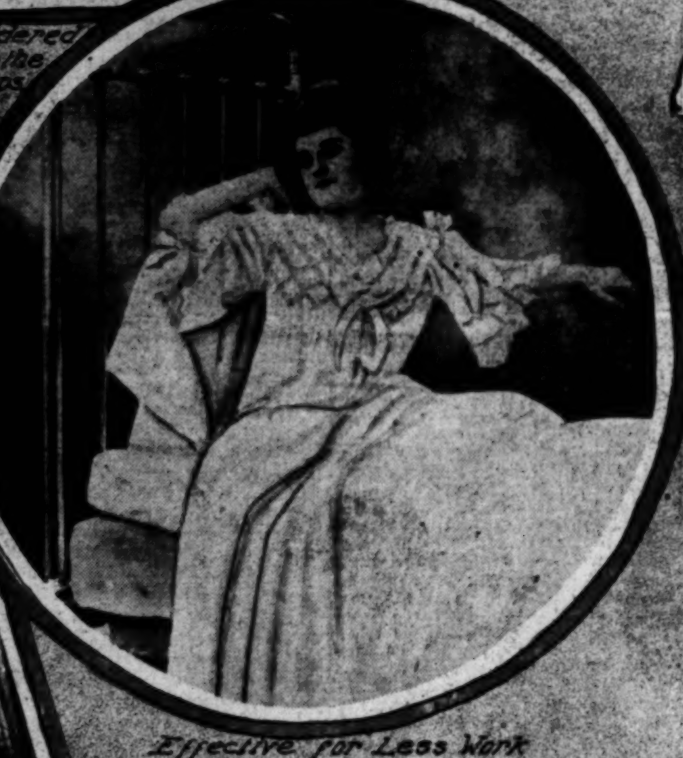


…hout a Stitch …y Embroidery

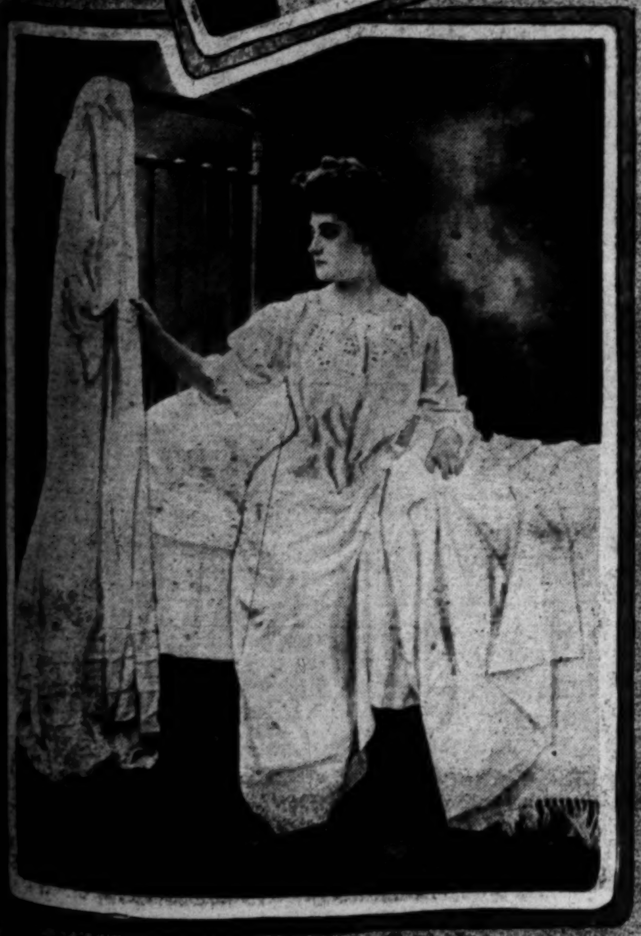


Embroidered between the Lace Strips

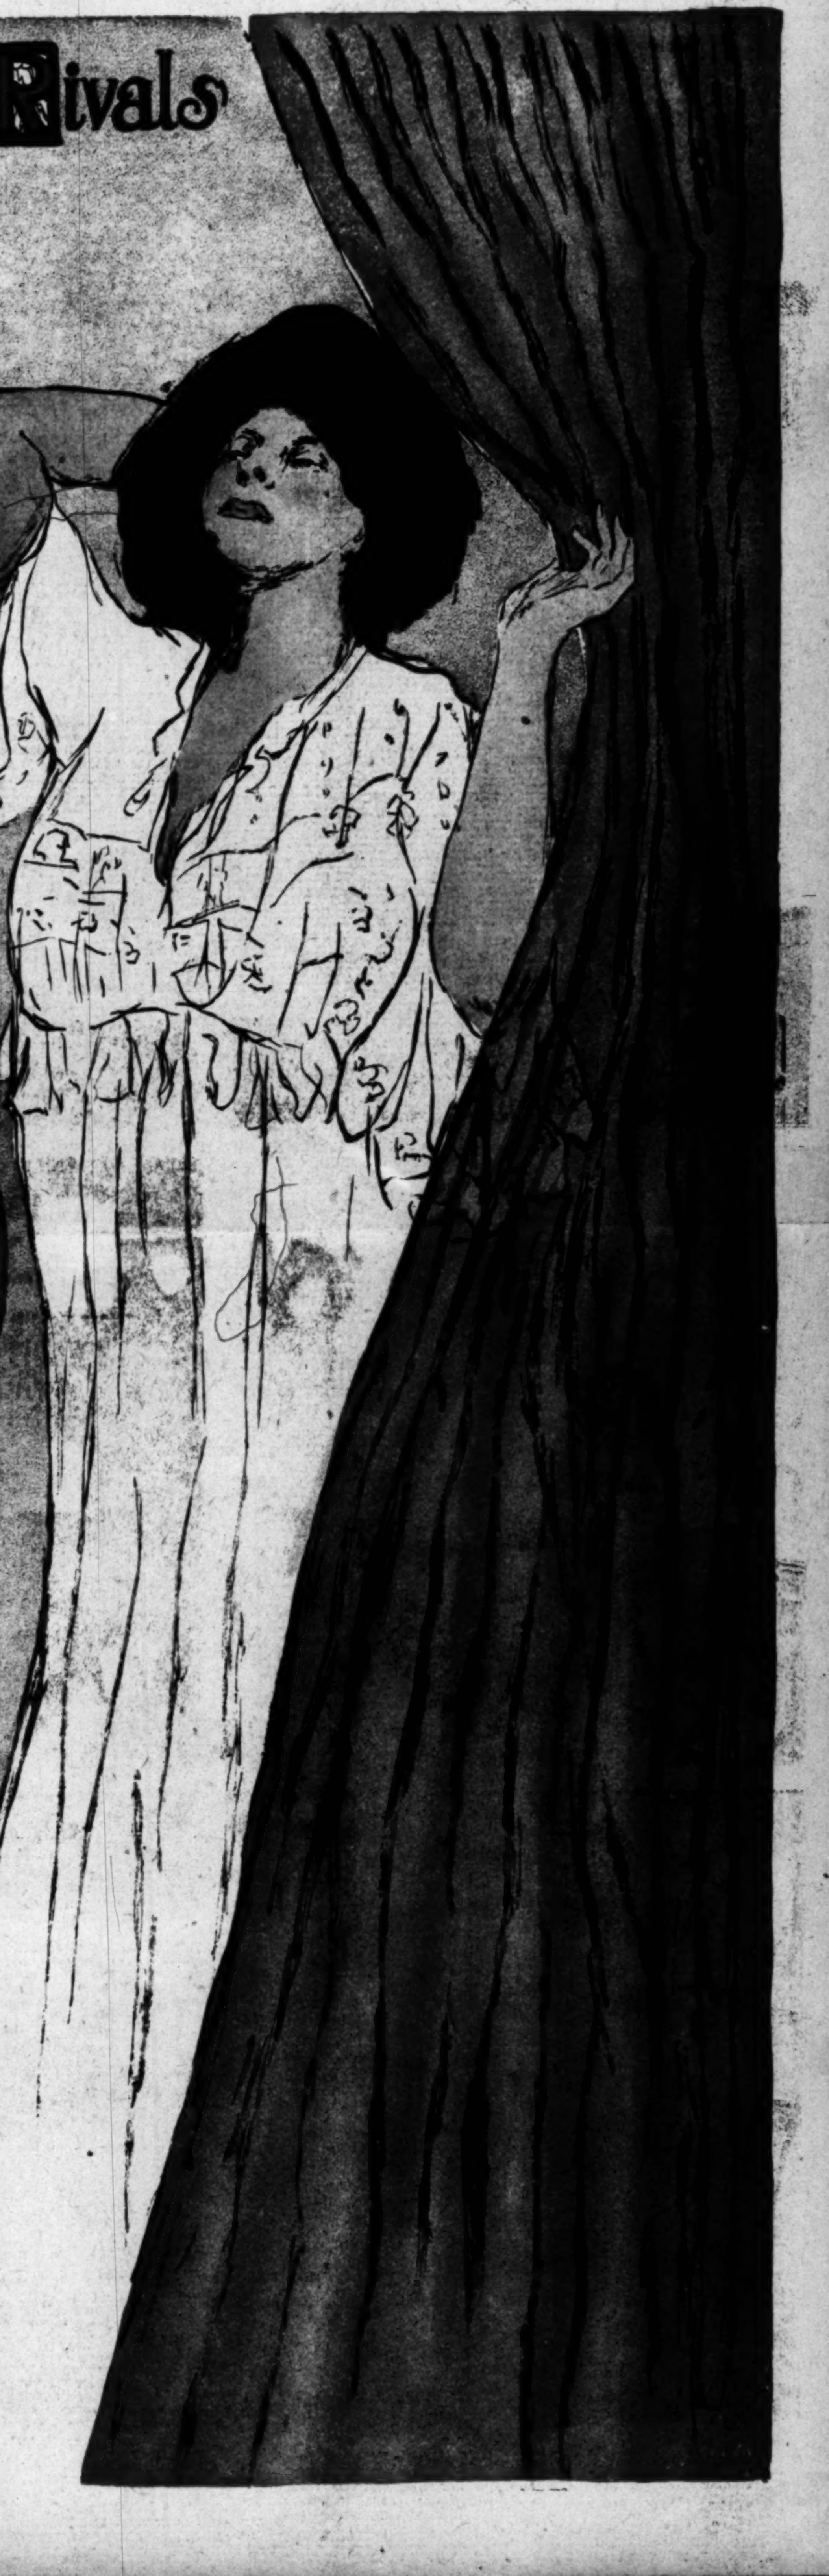




Effective for Less Work



…ffect of Simplicity Got by Elaborate Work



IN SPITE of the exquisite beauty of hand-embroidered lingerie, there's just a wee bit of revulsion against it because of the time it takes. Not by the woman who buys, for every year sees more alluring bits of daintiness displayed to tempt her purse—not necessarily beyond its strength, either, when you compare the cost of the lingerie of today with that of a few years ago. Nor is there any feeling against it in the mind of the woman with whom needlework is a positive passion, who would rather "set stitches" than read or drive or do anything else. And, strange as it may seem to busier mortals, there are plenty of women of that stamp.

But the average woman, she who likes to make her own corset covers and chemises, who wants plenty of them, yet who likes, too, to have time enough to do many another more important thing, is beginning to resent the time it takes to embroider the tiny designs that require such care in the embroidering. For, like the little girl made famous through nursery rhymes, unless the work is very, very good it is horrid.

Some of the new lace-trimmed lingerie suggested a solution to the problem—not the fussy, over-elaborate things, loaded down with cheap lace, beruffled and beribboned within an inch of their lives, but simple, effective styles, trimmed with good lace and not too much of it, and given pretty little distinctive touches of hand embroidery, by way of ribbon-run eyelets or initials set in a swirl of clever stitches.

Cluny lace—are edges of it, and real—comes for very little, and one of the prettiest and simplest chemises had a tiny frill of it to edge neck and armholes, eyelets set in—it took just twenty-six of them—in place of a casing or of beading.

Real torchon—or linen-torchon, as it is sometimes called—is brought into play for some dainty pieces made of handkerchief linen, or of that other weight, as fine, but more closely woven, and outwearing handkerchief linen by two to one.

But the prettiest of the laces used are those narrow insertions of Baby Irish, which are practically nothing but the mesh of the lace, the pattern conspicuously absent, and just the pretty criss-cross chain-stitches used instead. They are let into the linen in a lattice work that is as effective as the loveliest of eyelet work, yet in the same class with it by virtue of its simplicity and its perfect taste.

The great medallions are omitted except for the ultra things that the well-bred woman scorns; ribbons are abandoned except where they serve some definite purpose; and the lace itself is sparingly applied—in a bold contrast to the overladen stuff that masquerades as effective, which same it certainly is, only—!

As for the new hand-embroidered lingerie, it is lovelier than ever, blindwork rapidly gaining precedence over eyelet work—that is, designs composed of eyelets. As a means of inserting a draw-ribbon, eyelets grow more popular all the while.

What is new in lingerie? Very little else except newer designs for embroidery and ways of setting in lace. The same sheer, pretty stuffs are used, the same quaint lines of the French corset cover and shoulder are hard to improve upon; the same theory of getting rid of every bit of unnecessary fulness, yet keeping the lines easy, put into practice. But the newest thing about them is this introduction of simple, beautiful lace-trimmed styles, as unlike the old as the hand-embroidered styles were from the old corset cover trimmed with machine-made embroidery that proclaimed its humble origin in every stitch.

Some Matters of Especial Interest to the Women.

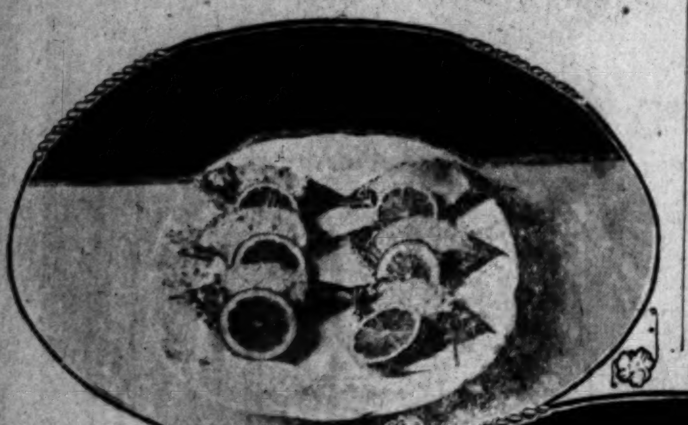
Bivalves and Shellfish.

A VARIETY OF WAYS IN WHICH THEY MAY BE PREPARED FOR TABLE USE.

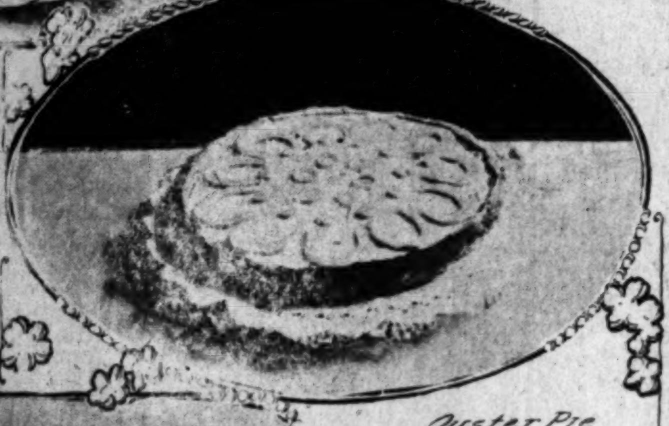
By Mrs. Ruth Arbogast.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

NOW that the months with R in their spelling have begun their cycle oysters are considered in their prime and other shellfish share something of their revival. In households where these foods are prepared in three or four ways only it is not surprising if the taste for them lessens in a comparatively short time, for in no case is it more true than in the preparation of food that "variety is the spice of life." The plain milk or water stew may be varied with an oyster soup which one cook recommends as perfect and is made with one quart of oyster liquor, two dozen oysters, one quart of milk, two tablespoonfuls of flour, two tablespoonfuls of butter, the juice of half a lemon, salt and pepper to taste, and add a tiny pinch of mace. Heat the milk and strained oyster liquor in separate vessels. Rub the butter and flour together and cook in a saucepan until they bubble, then pour on hot milk, stirring until the mixture is thin and smooth. Add the liquor, drop in the oysters and cook five minutes, season and serve at once, adding the lemon juice the very last thing.



Buttered Crabs



Oyster Pie

Boiled Lobster

Ignorance of the nature and value of clams as food has much to do with their holding a secondary place to oysters in the minds of many people. Being composed largely of muscular tissue, which may be rendered very indigestible, one should be careful that the whole clam, especially the hard, muscular part, is not eaten. In fact, in almost every instance—except, of course, in the case of chowder—the clams should be removed after cooking and before the preparation is served if one has a digestion weak in any way. Clams have valuable food properties and are most beneficial as an article of diet for persons with impaired digestive organs. Clam juice or bouillon can be retained by the stomach when every other form of food is rejected.

To boil lobsters have the water slightly salted and boiling when the lobster is thrust in head first. Cover and watch from time to time. It is not possible to give an infallible rule as to the length of time required to cook the meat tender, for some lobsters are tougher than others and the size also makes a difference. Thirty minutes will suffice for the average lobster. When done take the kettle immediately from the fire and unless it is to be served hot allow it to cool in the water in which it was cooked. Then split down the back with a sharp knife, remove the intestines—which runs the length of the body—and stomach, then crack the claws and remove the meat for salad. If the lobster is to be broiled, plunge in boiling water for fifteen minutes, then remove and split open, brush with butter and broil over glowing coals.

Deviled Oysters—After draining and wiping the oysters dry, pour over them a mixture made of two tablespoonfuls of melted butter, one tablespoonful of lemon juice, a dash of cayenne pepper, a saltspoonful of salt, and a few drops of Worcestershire sauce. Let them stand in the dressing for a short time, stirring occasionally that all may be moistened. Fry several thin slices of salt pork and reserve the fat for cooking the oysters. Take the oysters from the dressing and roll in cracker dust, afterward in beaten egg, and again in cracker crumbs. Allow them to stand a few minutes in a cold place, then fry in hot fat, adding a little lard or dripping if there is not sufficient to cook them nicely.

Hot Clam Cocktails

Oysters with Celery—Place a saucepan with one pint of finely cut table celery over the fire, cover with boiling water and boil until tender; season with one even teaspoonful of salt and a quarter of a teaspoonful of white pepper. Mix one teaspoonful of corn starch or flour with one ounce of butter and add it to the celery, then add twelve oysters without their liquor, and cook until the edges begin to ruffle. Lay six slices of buttered toast on a hot dish, pour over the celery preparation, allowing two oysters to each piece of toast, and serve.

Oyster Pot-pie—This may seem like a strange dish, but it is a good one. Scald a pint of oysters in their own liquor, and when it boils skim out the oysters and set aside in a warm place. To the liquor add a pint of hot water, season with a heaping teaspoonful of salt and a quarter teaspoonful of pepper, adding also a tablespoonful of butter. Thicken with one tablespoonful of flour and three tablespoonfuls of milk. Have ready nice light biscuit dough, rolled about twice as thick as pie crust, cut this in inch squares, drop into the boiling stew, cover closely, cook forty minutes, remove from the fire, stir the oysters into the stew and serve.

Oyster Pie (Illustrated)—Allow one dozen oysters to come to a boil, seasoning with a large piece of butter, white pepper and salt. Make a rich paste and put in a deep pie dish. Add the oysters and their liquid, cover with a top crust, which may be ornamented as desired, and bake in a hot oven.

Oyster Cutlets—Drain thirty good fat oysters, wash by pouring over them cold water, then put into a dry saucepan and stir over the fire until they are plump and the edges curl. Drain, and this time save the liquor. Chop the oysters fine and to each half pint allow half a tablespoonful of butter, one rounded tablespoonful of flour and a gill of oyster liquor. Rub the butter and flour together, add the oyster liquor and cook until quite thick; then add the oyster and the yolk of an egg. Take from the fire and add a level teaspoonful of salt, a tablespoonful of chopped parsley, ten drops of onion juice and a dash of mace. When cool, form into cutlets, dip in egg, then bread crumbs, and fry in smoking hot fat.

Crab Sandwiches—Pick carefully from back and claws the meat and eggs of twelve crabs, put into a bowl and mash with a silver fork. Add to this a lump of butter the size of a walnut, two hard boiled eggs chopped fine, seasoning of red and black pepper, and one tablespoonful of Worcestershire sauce, or twice the quantity of tomato catsup. Cut a slice of bread very thin, spread with the crab preparation, and cover with a slice from which the crust has been cut. The sandwiches may be heated slightly in the oven or served cold as preferred.

Buttered Crabs (Illustrated.)—Remove the meat from large, hard shelled crabs, cut it up finely and mix with an equal quantity of bread crumbs, a little minced parsley, and season to taste with salt and cayenne pepper. Pack this mixture into the shells which have been well cleaned, squeeze a little lemon juice over them, cover with bread crumbs and bits of butter and bake in a moderate oven until nicely browned. Place on a dish, garnish each crab with a lemon slice and serve.

Hot Clam Cocktails (Illustrated.)—Steam small clams and arrange about a lemon cut in basket form, and place on each clam a bit of broiled bacon. In the lemon basket put a tablespoonful of cocktail sauce which is made of one tablespoonful of tomato catsup, one-half teaspoonful Worcestershire sauce, two drops of Tabasco, one-half teaspoonful of chopped chives and one teaspoonful of grated horseradish. The clams are dipped into this sauce.

Soft Shelled Clams—Remove and discard the black ends of one pint of soft-shelled clams, then cut off the hard part, chop it fine and simmer this portion slowly for ten minutes in one tablespoonful of lard. Season with salt and paprika, then turn in two tablespoonfuls of sherry and the soft portions of the clams. Have the beaten yolks of two eggs well blended with a half cupful of cream and add it to the clam mixture and cook all until creamy but not curdled.

Puree of Clams—Pour a cupful of cold water over twenty-five clams, let stand a few moments, then drain and save all of the liquor. Put the liquor in a saucepan over the fire and when it comes to a boil skim. Chop the clams fine, add them to the liquor, let boil again and again skim. Rub one tablespoonful of butter and two tablespoonfuls of flour together until smooth and add to the broth with one-fourth cupful of bread crumbs; stir and cook until the mixture thickens. Press through a sieve, return to the kettle and when heated add one pint of cream which has been previously scalded in a farina boiler. Season and serve at once.

Lobster Salad—Cut boiled lobster meat into as even pieces as possible, marinate and put in a cool place until wanted. When ready to serve mix with shredded lettuce leaves and mayonnaise dressing in the proportion of one-half cupful of dressing to every pint of salad. Serve on curly lettuce leaves, garnished with the dressing and the powdered coral of the lobster, if desired.

Creamed Lobster.—Place a saucepan with one tablespoonful of butter and one tablespoonful of flour over the fire, stir and cook a few moments, then add one and one-half cupfuls of hot milk. Stir and cook this until it becomes a smooth sauce then season with one-half a tablespoonful of salt and a dash of cayenne pepper. To this add one pint of cooked lobster meat that has been cut into dice, stir for a few minutes over the fire to heat through and serve poured over toast.

WHEELS OF STATE STOP WHILE PASTRY IS DISTRIBUTED.

BY MARGARET MENET.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Sept. 29.—It happened a great many years ago, yet there is authority for the statement that it happened. There was a good soul who was numbered among the clerks of the State Department in Washington and whose sympathies became aroused on behalf of a neighbor who needed, or merely wished, pin money. I don't know whether this good soul is today one of the time-honored contingent of gray-haired women or not, but that has nothing to do with the story. Here is what she did. She went to her neighbor and said something like this:

"I have just thought what you can do. You make good cake, don't you? Well, I have been talking with several of the ladies at the office and they say they will be glad to give you orders. Then I had this thought. What we can't sell outright, I can cut into quarters and sell at 10 cents apiece. I know there isn't a lady down these who can refuse to buy a piece of fresh cake if it is temptingly held up before her."

The result of the confab was that the woman out of office arranged with the woman in office both to create and supply a demand for cake among government employés, and on the day appointed the first consignment of goods was delivered. A colored maid delivered it. With six round hat boxes piled one on top of the other and secured by an abundance of cord, she walked, undisturbed, into the most imposing of all the departments in search of the woman clerk who was to superintend the office end of the industry, and whom she promptly found. It was the work of but a moment to dispose of such of the cakes as had been ordered in their entirety. The remaining ones were quartered, the pieces passed around among the clerks, the money for the whole transaction collected and given to the maid, who was then dismissed.

The affairs of a great nation rested while the women clerks held their feast.

This was before the days of civil service reform, do you say? Quite true, but the eternal feminine is still in play among the fair daughters in service, and your Uncle Sam, clever old chap as he is, will have to do a lot of sitting up nights if he ever succeeds in ruling it out of office.

Generally, upon entering public life, the wage-earning woman makes it her aim to become quite as business-like or clerical as a man holding the same position would be. In fact, if she is at all ambitious, the purpose is apt to become the dominant force of her life, imposing far heavier exactions than any work she may be doing. Of course, wherever a woman is employed, there are certain indications that she is around, such as a wet handkerchief pasted smoothly on a toilet room window or a powder puff tucked away in a top desk drawer, which the experienced eye is not long in searching out. But in the main, the girl herself wears an air of official industry.

The girl in general, that is. Not the woman government clerk, for she seems to be in a class by herself, and the conditions under which she earns a comfortable income between the leisurely hours of 9 and 4:30 are unique. The jealousies and the rivalries for the favor of chiefs, or other men, are often descanted upon, but to offset this condition there really does exist among women clerks a bon camaraderie that is delightful to behold. They themselves and their individual lives are of so much more importance than the round of daily duties that brings them together, rain or shine, that matters pertaining to the former would be attended to during office hours and the latter done between times, were it not for the growing exactness of the civil service system.

Ever since that eventful day of the informal entrance of cakes into the State Department, the unwritten laws of office decorum have been gradually more rigidly enforced. Yet, notwithstanding, there has sprung into being among women clerks a system of inner industries that bids fair to outdo Uncle Sam's business activity.

A Treasury clerk who lives on a Maryland farm and comes in to office every day supplies a large number of fellow-clerks with butter and eggs, which she brings in and delivers herself. The number of women who take orders for caramels and other candies is too numerous to mention, and drawn-work is a commodity that finds a ready and extensive sale. Usually it is some one outside of office that makes the articles offered for sale. In the case of older women, the candidate for the woman government clerk's small change is quite apt to be a daughter whom the mother would keep out of the service, out at the same time arrange a means of her earning pocket money.

Nearly every department has a drug closet established by woman's ingenuity in supplying the things she would have at hand. The one in the Treasury occupies an unused cubbyhole in one of the dim corridors, and is presided over by the matron of the toilet room. For the purchase of drugs, the clerks ever so often are assessed small sums, which allow a percentage of profit for the matron in compensation for her out-of-office-hours work.

It is during the holidays, however, that the inner industries are seen to best advantage and would play greatest havoc with the necessary routine of governmental business if they were permitted to do so. The proceeds resulting from the sale of fancy stock collars, pincushions, hand-embroidered lingerie, etc., is a considerable one, and doubtless brings due return for work done out of office and canvassing for sales during office hours.

The play of the eternal feminine can be seen at any time by the eye of the sympathetic visitor, but during the lunch hour probably it is most in evidence. In act, it fairly runs riot then, and if any one doubts the statement let them seek the assignment division of the Patent Office any day between the minutes of 12 and 12:30 and see for himself.

The dim interior of this part of the building is dotted with the desks of woman clerks. When the minute hand of the great clock reaches the stroke of 12, there is an instantaneous cessation of the clicking of typewriters and the scratching of pens. The chief clerk of the division, realizing that the hour is at hand which brings his temporary abdication of the seat of authority, noiselessly steals to a wardrobe in one end of the room, changes his office for his street coat, and vanishes from sight. One or two man clerks hie them to the restaurant in the basement of the building or to some of the cafes that line the surrounding streets. An older man, who has succumbed to the habit of carrying his lunch in a brown paper bag, places this on top of his desk and unobtrusively devours it. The same instinct that sent the chief of the department scurrying off the premises holds him in check. He does not need to be told that until the ensuing half hour shall have passed and his status as a government employé is again established that his appearance or non-appearance in that section of the department is not of the slightest moment. He knows this and is mute.

Upon the disappearance of the chief, the transformation of that office of staid (?) government clerks into a chattering tea party is quickly brought to pass. On top of the dark wooden desks heavy brown paper is spread in lieu of table linen. Out of all sorts of unsuspected places quietly creep cups and saucers and spoons. Out of the depths of drawers foolishly supposed to contain papers of national importance, innocently emerge glass fruit jars of preserves, covered jelly glasses, disclosing mellow baked apples or puddings pilfered from dinner the night before, whole pies bought of bakeries before office hours in the morning, combs of honey, and every kind of health food.

In twos and threes, according as their affinities draw them together, do these older and younger women gather around the desk of one another and partake of their luncheon. Bread and butter is brought from home to form the substance of the meal, and tea brewed in brown jugs, with hot water obtained from some source unknown save to the initiated few, is generally the beverage that completes it. Sometimes chocolate ordered from the outside is brought in in steaming pots.

Ever so often, in agitated whispers, the establishment of an electric stove is discussed. Luncheon would be so much more possible meal if something hot could be prepared. But don't tell of this plan, for at any moment the voice of authority might speak out and cruelly demolish the hope of better arrangements in the future. The midday luncheon, however, is not a surreptitious feast. It is part of the regular routine of this office, and, in so far as it is confined within the time allotted to it is officially recognized.

Yet they call themselves slaves—these daughters of Uncle Sam who are in his service.

Care of Artificial Hair.

All authorities on false hair seem to agree that while a heavy switch should be shampooed regularly and thoroughly the little curls and puffs so much worn at the present time do not need the same treatment. The dust can be easily brushed out of these small pieces and they do not come into so close contact with the natural hair as a switch which is generally twisted in with the wearer's own hair.

While there is normally no oil in the artificial hair, still it absorbs a certain amount of oil from contact with the natural hair, and for this reason needs washing. This should not be done frequently. In most cases one shampoo in two months is quite sufficient to keep a heavy switch in good condition.

The directions for washing false hair are almost exactly the reverse of those prescribed for the shampooing of natural hair. The same soap may be used, or whatever shampoo mixture is preferred; but this should not be rubbed directly on the hair.

Instead, the switch should be plunged into a bowl full of soapsuds. After being thoroughly washed it must be carefully rinsed in many waters, some hairdressers insisting that eight rinsing waters are none too many to insure the thorough disappearance of the soap.

While natural hair should be dried in the bright sunshine whenever possible, this practice should be carefully avoided with artificial hair, as strong sunlight tends to fade it. The best method of drying a switch is to hang it at night in an open window in a strong breeze.

By morning, it should be perfectly dry, and the breeze has a tendency to make it light and fluffy. It may then be combed with a coarse-toothed comb to remove the tangles.—[New York Sun.

A MILD PROTEST.

[Mrs. Humphry suggests in "Truth" that engaged girls should be labeled.]

Why did you let me learn to love
  The very floor beneath your feet,
To treasure that discarded glove
  And hoard that faded marguerite?
Why let your photo grace my table,
  Mabel?

It took not long for me to show
  The fire that in my bosom raged—
You might as well have let me know
  That you already were engaged!
To guess it I was scarcely able,
  Mabel?

Why not one gentle hint have dropped
  That you were some one else's prize
Ere yet upon my knees I flopped
  To hear that gauntest of replies
Festooning all my soul in sable,
  Mabel?

How heavy is the hand of Fate,
  Its plots how pitilessly planned!
To learn, alas! when all too late,
  That you had promised Binks your hand;
You surely might have worn a label,
  Mabel?

A Girl With a Million.

DAUGHTERS OF RICH USUALLY WELL-MANNERED AND WELL TAUGHT.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

Why write about a girl with a million in a series of familiar talks about the women who work?

The answer is that the idea that a rich woman leads an idle life is founded on a fallacy. The girl with a million has as much to do in a different line as her sister-woman who has not a penny beyond her daily earnings. The frequent and shop worn device of writers of fiction has been to describe the girl with a million as arrogant and haughty, as purse-proud and vain, or else as extremely plain and awkward. This tendency runs back into the most ancient literature, and in the fairy lore of nations the girls who have gold and diamonds are generally ugly and ill-tempered, while the Cinderellas and other little maids who are struggling with misfortune, are singularly beautiful and bewitching.

Life, in the twentieth century, flatly contradicts the literature of past ages in this particular. Among the prettiest girls in the world of today are the daughters of rich men and the heiresses of vast incomes. From the cradle they have everything that can possibly tend to health and beauty; their food, the ventilation of their nurseries, their hours of rest and sleep, the sweet, safe and tranquil seclusion of their infancy is a good preparation for strength and vigor later on.

People who are misinformed have a great deal to say by way of undeserved, and on the whole, unveracious criticism of the society mother. We hear that she neglects her children and gives their care into hired hands. As a matter of fact, she often takes the most intelligent and constant supervision of her children, intrusting them indeed to nurses whom she hires, but who are worthy and responsible and whose vigilance and faithfulness are without a flaw. There are exceptions but this is the rule. Infancy in the home of a multi-millionaire, and in America we have many such, is as well looked after as and perhaps better than in the royal houses in Europe.

After babyhood comes the kindergarten, and in due course the kindergarten is followed by the governess and the well-selected school, while physical culture comes in for a share in the girl's education. Generally speaking, the daughter of a wealthy home is what most of us consider a perfect dear. She is a creature overflowing with vitality, she is trained in gentle and beautiful manners and she has an all-round education. She learns not only from books, and if she desires, is in due time prepared for college, but she acquires every accomplishment, and in practical matters, is as carefully taught as in those that are theoretical. She can drive, ride, skate and play the various games that are popular, as a matter of course, and she often takes lessons in cooking and sewing, the object being thoroughly to equip her for the journey of life.

When the girl with a million has finished her technical education and has been presented to society, she may enter on a round of gayeties and find one pleasure following fast on the heels of another, if that be her wish. On the other hand, she may lead a quiet and useful life with comparatively little fashionable gaiety. There are rich women, not a few, to whom dinners, dances, theater parties, teas, receptions and never-ending dressmaking compose the sum of existence. There are others who regard their money as a talent for which they must give account, who are as thrifty as if they were wage-earners instead of belonging to the ranks of employers. They spend freely, as is their right, and they give lavishly for the aid of every cause that appeals to them. The prodigal liberality, the lovely beneficence of some of the richer unmarried women of our day, they beyond all praise.

In a Western city there stands a superb mission home dedicated to the rescue work which saves poor derelicts and sets them again on their feet. The building and its equipment were the gift of one rich woman. Names are familiar to all, and there are high on the roll of saints none more splendid than those of a few wealthy women who give of their substance to found hospitals, endow orphanages and erect buildings for purposes that are helpful to humanity. Of private applications for pecuniary assistance there seems to be no end when a woman, young or old, is reputed to be rich, and the girl with a million has much experience in answering such letters.

Whether or not the American girl with a million will continue to be the easy victim of unscrupulous foreign fortune hunters, remains to be seen. It is a surprising fact that girls otherwise clear-headed and sensible, have been easily tempted by the glitter of a title, and have been occasionally willing to let their wealth become a matter of barter for which an old name was accepted without demur.

Among the numerous international marriages on record in the last few years, there have been some felicitous unions. Others have been disastrous failures. As a rule, a rich girl takes a risk when she marries an impoverished suitor from another land. His traditions are not hers. His relations when they become her relations-in-law may treat her with lofty contempt. They match their blue blood against her millions, and fancy they have done her favor. A marriage anywhere, at any time, where the contracting parties allow motives of convenience to influence them, is very likely to encounter rough weather, and the good Ship of Home may be dashed to pieces on the rocks of discord. A plain American should be good enough as a husband for an American girl.

Mr. Carnegie spoke for thousands of his neighbors, when, awhile ago, he gave his unqualified sanction to the marriage of a favorite niece who had chosen a poor young man with good principles and a clever brain. Mr. Carnegie openly said that he approved of Nancy and her choice.

An American who has two hands, a heart and a head will probably carve his way to good fortune even if the girl he marries have nothing of her own. He is not looking, as a rule, [illegible] a million, but for the maiden [illegible]

It is the greatest of pities [illegible] girl with a million should ever get the idea that men are running after her for the sake of what she has. This notion is sometimes instilled into her mind by people who attach too great importance to money. Fortunes, particularly in this country, are very kittle kattle. One day they are here, another they are gone. The girl with a million as well as the girl without a fortune is wise to be prepared for the possible evil day by acquaintance with a bread-winning art that may stand her in stead when the time comes.

I have seen in the uniform of a trained nurse patiently doing her duty in the hospital, the daughter of a man whose inherited and acquired fortune ranks high even in this land of wealth. That girl would meet calamity without excitement or fear. If calamity should attack her, she would be ready for it with a weapon in her hands. I have seen, in circumstances of utter poverty, a woman who began life under auspices so favorable that a princess might have envied her. The whirlwind of disaster laid low her people and their means were swept away. She had no preparation and initiative, and the girl who had been the idol of a [illegible] was glad to eke out a scanty subsistence by plain sewing. The girl with money and the girl without alike need practical training in some department of life and of wage earning in these changeful days.

A WIFE'S CONFESSION.

[After reading of the clergyman [illegible] the word "obey" from the marriage [illegible]

I lightly took the vow that day
  We, side by side, stood at the [illegible]
And at that dreaded word "obey,"
  Not mine to mumble or to falter.
Though other brides may shirk the word,
  Such other brides but [illegible]
By my firm voice it was not slurred,
  And oh I meant it when I said it.

I had full confidence that you
  In happiest ignorance would [illegible]
That you were too responsive to
  The twirling of a little finger.
Of disobedience not a sign
  You found among my words [illegible]
I vowed your lightest wish was mine,
  And that was true—in [illegible] senses.

If I disliked your stern behest,
  That stern behest was not [illegible]
For soon you would yourself [illegible]
  What I had from the first suggested.
You plumed yourself with happiest [illegible]
  To think you settled every question,
And issued orders, unaware
  That each of them was my suggestion.

And so, of wisdom all compact,
  Should every wife find joys [illegible] faster,
Content, the while she rules in fact,
  To hail "him" as her lord and master.
But well it is to understand
  What happiness is to my plan [illegible]
For I shall do as you command
  And you command as I command you.

Richest Woman's Trousseau.

Frau Krupp, with her two daughters, Bertha and Barbara, has just concluded a visit to Berlin for the purpose of purchasing trousseaux for both young ladies, whose weddings take place within two or three [illegible]

The trousseau of Fraulein Bertha, who is the richest woman in the world, having an annual income approximating a million sterling, is [illegible] small. It consists of one walking dress of lilac colored [illegible], one evening dress of [illegible] cashmere cloth, one blue and [illegible] evening dress, one brown cloth walking dress, one riding costume, [illegible] mantle for evening wear, and [illegible] yellow cloth mantle for afternoon drives.

These five dresses and two mantles of the simplest style complete Fraulein Bertha's wedding outfit, and the total cost does not exceed £20 [illegible] Krupp purchased an equally [illegible] trousseau for Fraulein Barbara at [illegible] same cost.

Although the modest purchases are quite consistent with the remarkable simplicity with which the girls have been brought up, the newspapers nevertheless complain that their wedding outfit ought to have been more proportionate to their vast wealth. Uncomplimentary comparisons are drawn between the Krupp girls' [illegible] and those of the daughters of [illegible] Englishmen.—[Paris Correspondent London Express.

The New Tailor-made.

The tailor-made suits of the fall [illegible] be strictly tailored. Instead of [illegible] frivolous little Eton, the coat [illegible] of a simple mannish cut. The [illegible] six-inch coat will be a fashionable model. These coats will be [illegible] breasted, and have no trimming [illegible] but a velvet collar. They will be [illegible] with a fitted back and sides, while [illegible] fronts will be semi-fitting, and [illegible] times loose. The long plain coat [illegible] will be used. For dress occasions, such as calling and church wear, [illegible] redingote will be the most fashionable.

Another style coat will be of the [illegible] ting type, and rather long, but [illegible] long, of course, as the redingote. The three [illegible] coat will form part of the three [illegible] costumes, which promise to occupy such an important position in the modes of the autumn and winter [illegible] will be made of the same fabric [illegible] dress, but it will avoid the trimmings [illegible] design of the dress proper, and [illegible] more or less simple in detail.

The separate wrap for fall will [illegible] follow along the fitted type, but [illegible] be more or less shapeless—[illegible] the Empire idea prominent.—[Woman's Home Companion.

1.—In the Magic Wood there stood a great Rock too steep to climb. On the top dwelt a fierce giant in an enchanted castle. Now, Jack-the-Giant-Killer had planted a fairy bean at its foot which grew up to the top in a single night! The Naughty Gnomes happened along the next day just as Jack was preparing to climb up to the Giant's castle.

2.—"What kind of vine is that?" asked Lop-Ear, the curious one. "That is my fairy Bean-Stalk!" replied Jack, "and I am now going to climb up to the Giant's castle and steal the Magic Harp that plays itself and the Goose that lays the Golden Eggs!" "Can we go too and see the fun?" asked both the Gnomes together. "No, indeed!" said Jack, "the Giant would gobble you up in a minute; wait till I come down, but don't meddle with anything."

3.—Up he started and the Gnomes watched him until he was nearly to the top. Then said Lop-Ear, who was forever meddling:—"I wonder what he is going to do with the axe? What is the use of waiting till he comes down, and besides, the Giant may eat him, and what good would the axe be to him then! I'm going to see if it's sharp enough to cut anything." Well!—

4.—Lop-Ear took up the axe and began chopping away at the Bean-Stalk. Just as it began to tremble and sway they heard the Harp playing and the Goose squawking and they knew Jack must be starting to come down the Bean-Stalk. They knew they'd catch it when Jack saw what they had done, so—

5.—They started to sneak away. But Jack, who had quickly slipped down the vine carrying the Harp and the Goose before it fell, cried out to them to run because the Giant was coming down also and coming in a hurry! You may be sure they did not wait to hear any more, but started for home on the gallop. When—

6.—BANG!!! Down came the Giant, Bean-Stalk and all, right slap beside them! Well! That was the most terrifying experience they had ever had in their lives. They managed to escape somehow — it gave them such a fright that they dreamed of the terrible Giant every night for a whole week!

The Samaritans, Most Ancient Jewish Sect, Appeal for Help.

Only 150 of Them Left.

A Bird's Eye View of the Ancient City of Samaria and Its Surrounding Olive Groves.
Copyright, 1903, by Wm. H. Rau, Phila.

TALL of stature, gaunt, as through suffering, but dignified and silent, four men, clad in the robes of their priestly office, have just visited England to implore aid for a dying race.

They were representatives of the Samaritans of Palestine, who are so harried and taxed by the Turks that life is a continual struggle to them.

The oldest Jewish sect on earth, and once very numerous, the Samaritans have dwindled to thirty families and fewer than 150 persons. As a people they have defied the ravages of war, poverty and oppression nearly three thousand years. Never has their unity been broken; their customs and manner of worship have remained unchanged.

Except that they are so pitifully few in number, the sect is the same today as it was when the Good Samaritan of the parable succored the traveler who had fallen among thieves; its unbroken line stretches back to the morning of history, when Abraham crossed the Jordan and pitched his tents in the land of Shechem.

A long and valiant struggle for existence, asking nothing but to be let alone with their traditions and their religion, have these people made, but the rapacious Turk is now slowly crushing out the life of the little remnant. In despair they raise their voices to Christendom and cry, "Save us, or we perish."

VISITORS to the small city of Nablus, in North Palestine, are attracted there, more than anything else, by the pathetic little religious community that has clung desperately, through centuries of oppression and poverty, to the foot of its sacred Mount Gerizim.

No more tenaciously has the cactus root held to the granite sides of somber Ebal, across the valley, than has this devoted band nestled in its chosen abode to await the advent of a new religious era.

Of all religious sects, this is the most ancient, the most extraordinary, in a way, and yet the smallest numerically and the feeblest in the world. Their story is one of pathos and tears, yet of unfaltering loyalty to the traditions and beliefs that have come down to them unchanged from the time of Father Abraham.

Among the millions of the human race, the Samaritans assert themselves to be the only true worshipers of God, the sole depositaries of His revealed will.

"The fire that was kindled from heaven on the sacred altar of the Jews has long been extinguished,' says an authority in expressing the convictions of the Samaritans. "The light that, age after age, shone out upon the surrounding darkness from the holy Mount at Jerusalem has been quenched in endless night, but its latest illuminations linger still on the cliffs of Gerizim, in the mountains of Samaria, a gleam of inextinguishable light.

"CHOSEN SEED OF ISRAEL"

"Clinging to these cliffs and steadfastly watching that heavenly light, these ancient Samaritans, as the chosen seed of Israel, are waiting in sure and certain expectation the coming of the cheerful morn that shall yet rise on the dark and dreadful night that is still gathering around them. 'We know that Messiah cometh, which is called Christ. When He is come, He will tell us all things,' is their cry."

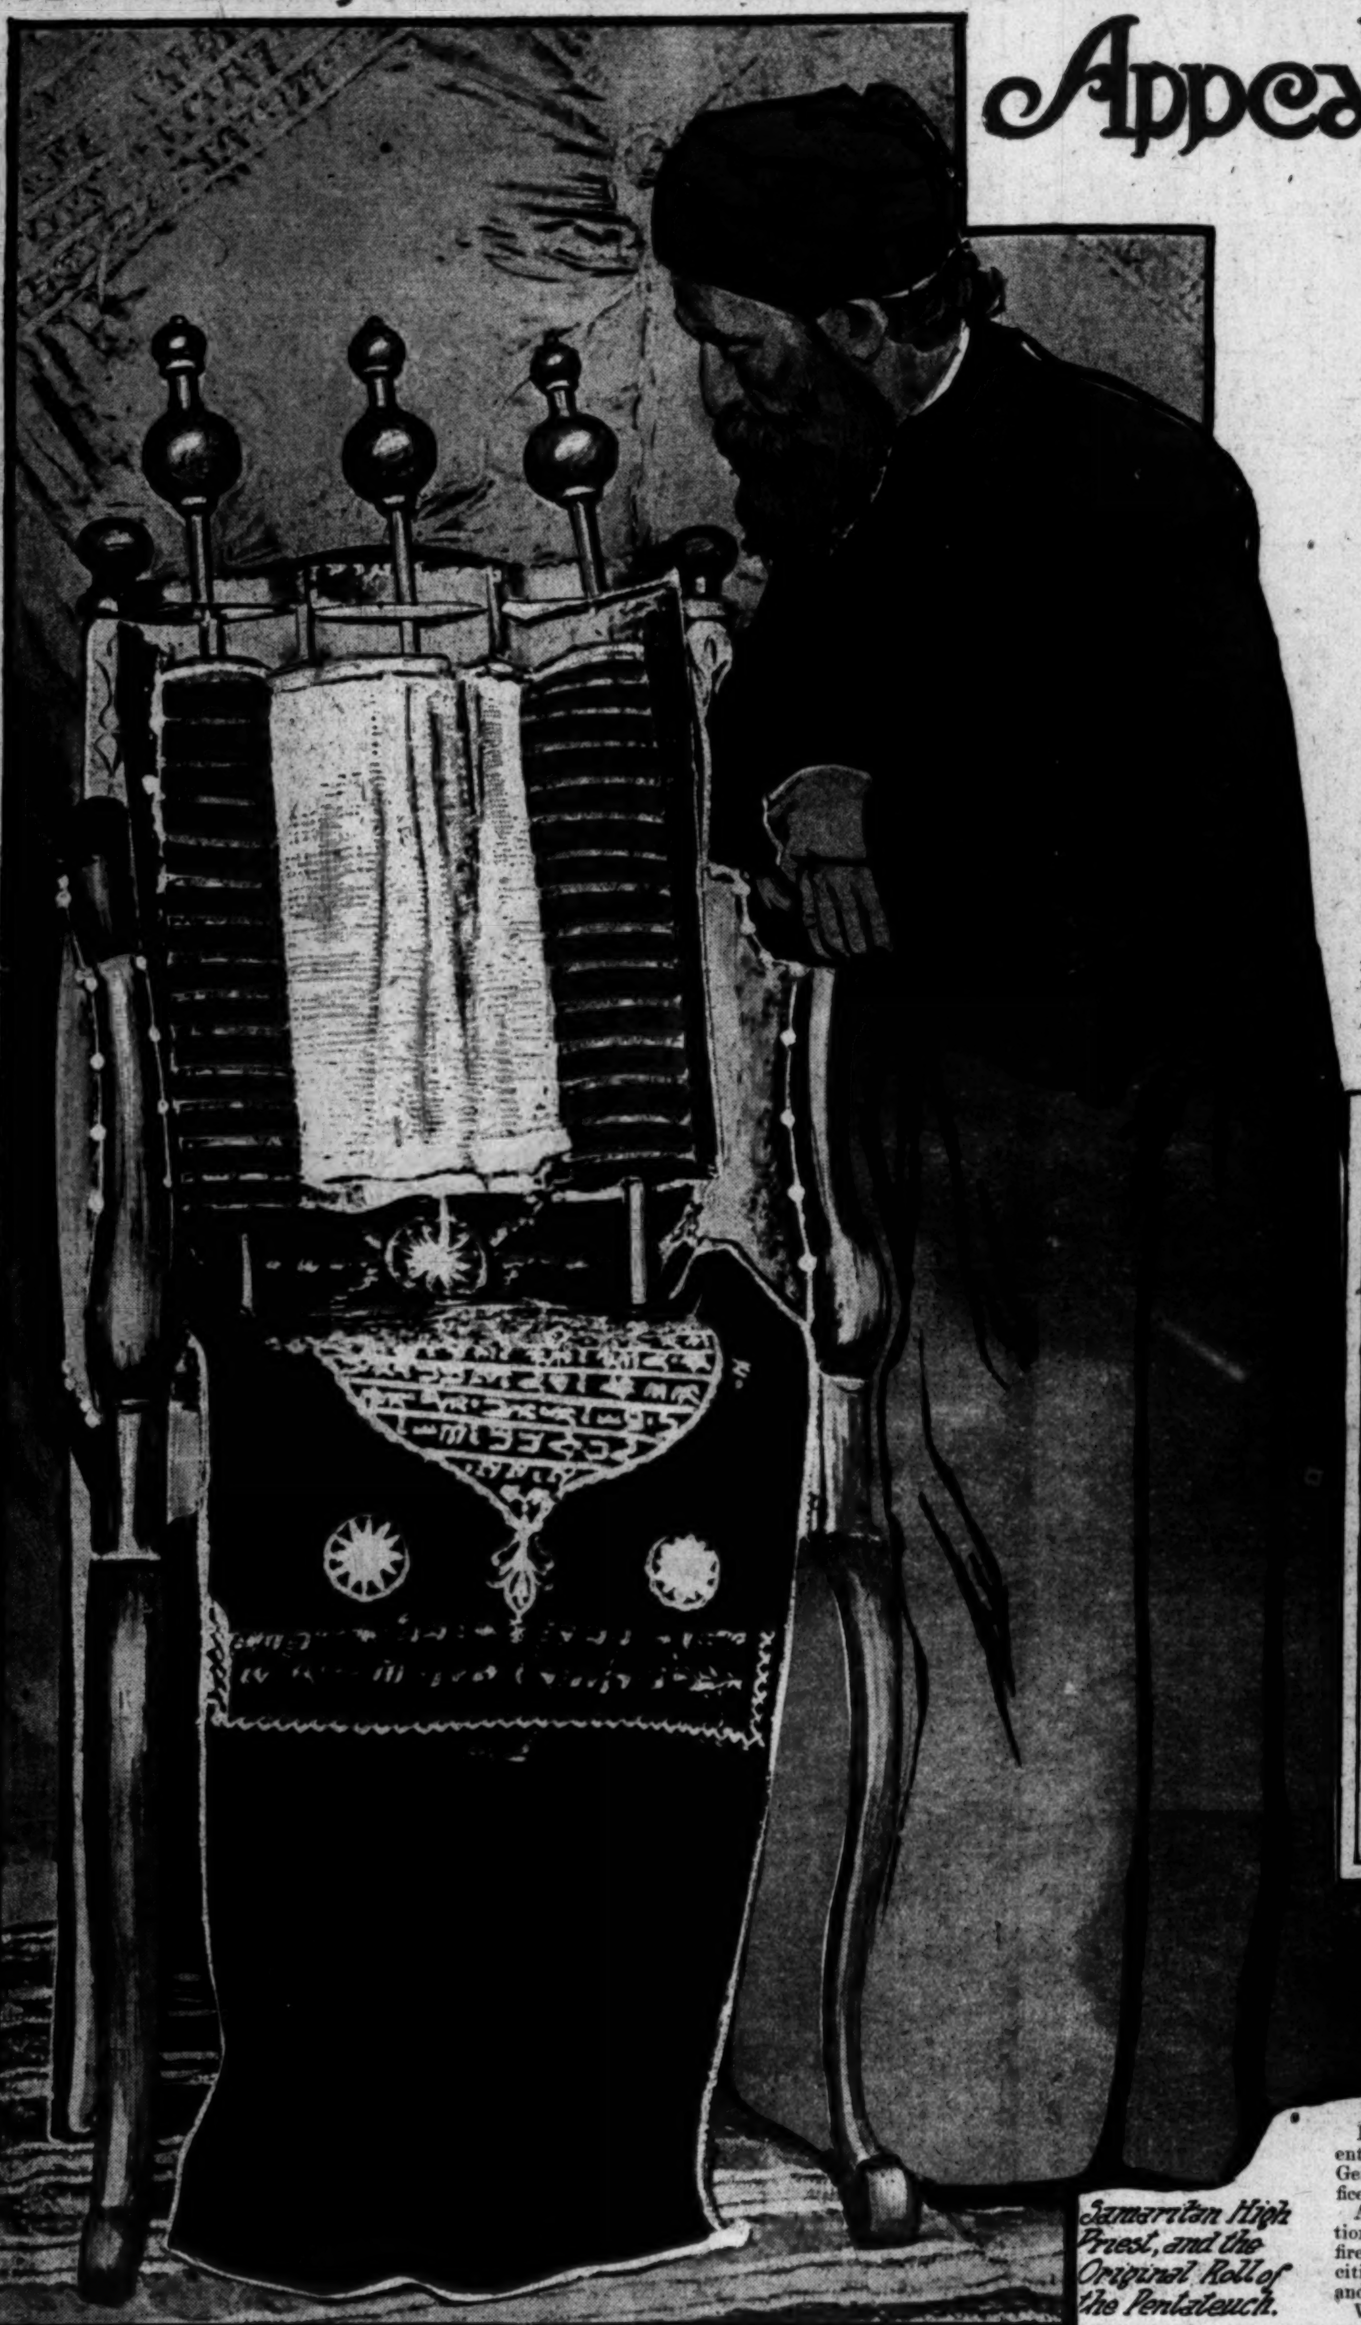
A single long, narrow street, running east and west through a wonderful cleft in the mountain, composes Nablus. The Samaritans are clustered in a colony in the southwest quarter. Several hundred feet above them towers Gerizim, their sacred mountain.

While other people of Palestine have scattered to the four corners of the earth, the true Samaritan would never think of removing permanently beyond the shadow of his beloved Gerizim.

There, clustered together in a recess of the cliff, they dwell quietly, close by their little synagogue, where they assemble for devotions, conducted as they were 3000 years ago.

Every Samaritan dresses in white, especially when appearing in public, in the religious assemblies and on all festival occasions. In order to comply with Moslem regulations, rather than from taste, the men wear red turbans. The women are permitted to wear earrings, because of them the golden calf was made.

The valley in which the Samaritans dwell is a sparkling gem of nature. In all the country roundabout there is nothing that approaches it in beauty and fertility.



Samaritan High Priest, and the Original Roll of the Pentateuch.
Copyright 1903, by Wm. H. Rau, Phila.

While barren lands and deserts stretch their miles over much of the surrounding country, this quiet, half-concealed little valley blooms as the rose. The profusion of fruits and flowers suggests a glimpse of the tropics. Figs, mulberries, grapes, oranges, pomegranates, apricots, almonds and other fruits vie with each other in luxurious growth in this miniature Eden. Over all is a peculiar coloring of sky and atmosphere which has been described as "a lovely bluish haze."

Samaritans assert that their real name is Israelites—"the true Israel of God," they say, "in distinction from the Jews, descendants of Judah, who have forsaken the religion of their fathers."

They declare that a copy of the Pentateuch in their possession is older than that of the Jews. They have other ancient manuscripts of priceless value as well. Among these is a scroll which has been used in their synagogue for many centuries.

Enclosed in a silver case and kept in a chest, the original scroll is rarely shown to visitors. It consists of dingy skins, which were prepared long before the invention of parchment, sewed together. The skins are about fifteen by twenty-five inches, and are now worn and patched; in fact, large portions of the writing are illegible.

When the Samaritans want a new copy of the Pentateuch, some scholar among them slowly prints it out by hand. They have no printing presses. A year is required to make a copy, which is never sold, but kept for the use of the community.

In religion the Samaritans are strict monotheists. They permit no pictures in their homes or temples—not even the portrait of a friend—holding fast to the injunction against representation "in the likeness" of anything "in heaven above or in the earth beneath."

They believe in good and evil angels, in heaven and hell, where good and wicked abide after death. After a future judgment, they believe that body and soul are reunited for a happy or unhappy existence, according to the life lived on earth. They fix the coming of the Messiah at 6000 years from the creation of the world.

"He will quickly come and gather all nations unto himself." His throne of universal dominion will be on Mount Gerizim. The twelve stones on which Joshua wrote the Ten Commandments will be recovered, as will the sacred vessels of the temple and the pot of manna now buried on the mountain.

Amram, then high priest of the Samaritans, related to the late Bishop Hurst, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a few years ago, some of the theological views of the dying community.

For fifty-five years, he stated, men will go on increasing in wickedness, after which will come a time of great peace and purity. Then there will come on a new period of great wickedness, which will last 300 years. This time will be closed by the destruction of the world.

After this the general judgment will take place, when the righteous will go to live with God and the wicked will be finally dispatched to the domain of Satan.

The Samaritans assert that they alone have kept the faith as it was committed to Abraham; that other Jewish peoples have wandered away from pure religion and the prescribed worship. Enmity between the Jews and Samaritans, spoken of in the New Testament, continues unabated to this day.

Strictly orthodox are the domestic institutions of the Samaritans. Their names are taken from the ancient Scriptures. The family of their priesthood has descended directly from the tribe of Levi.

When Samaritans want to marry, which they do at an early age, the proposal of the young man is made—frequently by his father—to the girl's father. The prospective bridegroom must guarantee an acceptable dower before his proposal is considered.

Written out at great length, the marriage agreement is witnessed with much solemnity, during which ceremony prescribed portions of the law are read aloud. The wedding festivities last several days, and end with an interchange of gifts between the newly married pair and their friends.

A Samaritan priest never comes in contact with the dead. If the relatives themselves perform the last offices of affection for their departed ones, they subject themselves to the Levitical law, which provides penance for ceremonial uncleanness. For this reason, persons not of the sect are called in to perform the burial offices.

After morning service on the Sabbath following a burial, the entire congregation gathers about the grave and eats a simple meal, in accordance with the lovefeast of ancient times.

Every Sabbath is strictly observed, but the severest regulations and solemnity surround the Day of Atonement. For twenty-four hours the people do not eat, drink, sleep or converse. The entire time is given to silent meditation and reading the Scriptures.

Processions to the holy mountain mark the feasts of Pentecost, Tabernacles and Passover today, as they did 2000 years ago. The Passover is marked by especially solemn and ancient ceremonies.

Jacob's Well, Where Christ Talked with the Woman of Samaria. The Man and Woman shown Here are Samaritans.
Copyright, 1903, by Wm. H. Rau, Phila.

Before the sun sets on the preceding day the entire community proceeds to the top of Mount Gerizim and encamps. For the Paschal sacrifice six lambs without blemish are provided.

As the sun sets the members of the congregation, in white robes, gather about the sacrificial fires. They chant prayers and sacred songs, reciting the entire history of the plagues of Egypt and the establishment of the Passover.

While this ceremony is in progress the lambs are led out, and the young men appointed to slay them draw their long, sharp knives. At a certain passage the lambs are slain and the slayers cross themselves with the blood.

Next the lambs are roasted over the fires, while bitter herbs, inclosed in strips of unleavened bread, are handed around. The people then retire to their tents until midnight, when the feast begins.

At that time the men of the congregation stand in two lines, with shoes on their feet, staves in their hands and rope girdles about their waists, as instructed by Exodus xii, 11.

After certain recitations each man tears off pieces of flesh and eats hurriedly and silently. Portions of the flesh are then taken to the women in the tents.

When the feast is over every particle of remaining flesh and bone is thrown into the fire and burned. The rest of the night is passed in prayer, and in the morning the people return to their homes and their daily occupations.

"Thus on this sacred mountain in Samaria the Paschal Lamb is offered year after year—the only Jewish sacrifice that still lingers in the world"—says a writer. Every detail of ceremonial as prescribed by the ancient law is faithfully observed.

Such is the strange sect in historic Palestine, the oldest and smallest sect in the world, which for the first time in all its remarkable history, sends out a cry to be preserved from total extinction.

The wily Greek greeted [illegible] terror with a smile, a glass of wine and an [illegible] to occupy the patent easy chair. In a mo[illegible] Death was in its grip, deprived of all power ex[illegible] that of speech, which he used in vain. In due time the gods traced Death to the lair of Sisyphus and set the grim terror free. Time went on and Sisyphus had to die actually. As his last breath left him, he whispered to his wife that he was only simulating death and was really going asleep and warned her not to let his body be buried until he came back again. Unburied, the old boatman of the Styx could not convey him to the land of shades. And so he was allowed to take up his abode in his house of clay for another period. But death comes to all men born of women, and at last the robber had to yield up the ghost, and that ghost had to go across the dark river to the land inhabited by the shades. There the judges sat upon his case, and as it was proven that he had never done an honest hour's work in his life, they condemned him to toil for all eternity. The robber was placed at the foot of a hill and on a shooting-the-chutes apparatus a great stone rolled down, which if not hurled back would annihilate the Corinthian robber. Hearing the sentence, he turned to the judges and said, "Supposing I rolled that stone over the edge of the divide so that it can come down no more, what would my fate be?" The grim judges of the realms of Pluto smiled in their sardonic way, nodded their heads to the robber and said: "You shall go free forever." Then it was the wily Corinthian's turn to laugh, even in Hades. Bursting his sides with merriment he said to the gods of the lower world, "I have cheated even you. Eternal hope is mine." And so he took his stone and said, "While there is hope there is happiness. Up goes the stone again." He is said to be still rolling the boulder, which is of adamant, and does not wear away, but that with eternal hope buoying up his breast, he sings merrily at his task.

The story of Pandora is still more familiar. She was of the gentler sex and to her hands a beautiful box was confided with the serious injunction to hold down the lid, for if the box were ever opened, she would have reason to be exceedingly sorrowful. Feminine curiosity was too much. She lifted the lid just to spy in and see what might be the contents of her box. In a moment out flew all the ills that flesh has since been heir to. Disease, disappointment, pain, trouble, contention, and everything that makes life a burden immediately on black wings, broad and strong, escaped from that box and in a trice were spread to every corner of the earth where mankind finds a dwelling. Feminine curiosity more than satisfied and feminine fear thoroughly aroused, Pandora clapped the lid on her box, too late and yet too early. Too late because all the ills of life had escaped, too early because had she waited another moment, Hope on golden wings would have escaped and proved an antidote to the influences of all the ills that had previously escaped. But the voice of Hope could not be stifled to the human heart. When this indiscreet Greek damsel recovered a little from her little fright, she heard the silvery voice of Hope pleading for liberty, and once more taking off the lid, out flew the angel with golden wings, and Hope was given to buoy up the human heart under all the ills that can come to us in human life.

Are not these stories beautiful? There never was a midnight so dark and tempestuous that the human soul could not look through and over its blank height and see the sun rise again to gild the dawn with ten thousand radiant hues of promise. No sea so stormy ever tossed the bark of the toiling mariner that through all the tossing waves he could not see the entrance somewhere in the distance and a safe harbor where his ship would ride upon blue and placid waters beneath the sky, cloudless and sunlit. There never came sorrow, distress or trouble to the human heart that hope on golden wings did not come and point the path to joyful days and peaceful homes somewhere beyond the land of trouble. There never was a cross so hard and heavy laid upon the martyr's shoulders to bear that was not made light and soft by the gleam of the jeweled crown, beyond the stars that is to adorn the brow of the faithful when the cross is borne and its pains suffered on the top of some Calvary of life. We can look into the horrid depths even of the closing grave and with the hope of a reunion in a world where we are told sorrow and sighing flee away and tears and suffering are unknown, where we shall meet on some bright shore those torn from our embrace in this world where the ills from Pandora's box are so multitudinous. And so each one takes up his daily toil, each one bears his cross, sharp though its corners may be, and heavy though the load is, and bears it patiently, because as the myth of Sisyphus teaches us, eternal hope is ours.

THE PATH.

We know not where our hidden way may lie,
  What stress and storm the coming years may hold;
  The midday heats and midnights drear and cold
May meet us on our journey far or nigh—
Yet step by step we go, till by and by
  The mystic tapestries of Fate unfold;
  When weary past believing, gray and old,
We reach the end together—thou and I.

On eyes grown dim the mists of blindness creep,
  The pulse moves slower still, and sorrows fade,
  But even then we may not understand;
Yet God still giveth His beloved sleep.
  Oh, Heart of Mine, why should we be afraid
  If only night may find us hand in hand!

—[Myrtle Reed.

PRACTICAL ETHICS.

NOTHING MORE TO SAY.

NOTHING more to say! Were this true, as some good folks would have us believe, we might as well pack up our intellectual faculties, retrace our steps, and settling down in sullen silence, bow in awestruck submission to the thought-inhibiting idea that all worth saying has long ago been said, all worth doing has once and forever been accomplished; and all vexed questions have for all time been settled.

What though no ten thousand should be able to produce a tenth part of what a single Shakespeare has wrought, shall we palsy their powers by dolefully droning into their ears the utter futility, the sickening hopelessness of any effort of individuals or generations of individuals to equal or excel the universally-minded Bard of Avon?

What right have we to extinguish the bright flame of a nobly conceived ambition springing from a breast where lofty aspirations stir, and where nestle high hopes of benefactions through altruistic achievements!

Then to what end the depressing and deadly discouraging wail of Solomon, "Vanity, all is vanity," or "Cease your striving, for there is nothing new under the sun?"

This dampening of the efforts of the human spirit struggling to express itself, could be justified only when it begins and ends with idle and useless repetitions of facts and principles universally known or established. That there is altogether too much bland parroting in our day is no doubt; but psychological experiment demonstrates that even an honest imitation is not utterly devoid of originality in that the article imitated must of necessity contain something of the spirit of the imitator. Nor will two copyists produce results absolutely the same.

Nothing new under the sun! Science particularly aims to show the uniqueness of Nature's method in that she abhors the production of duplicates. She is careful to create singly and not in pairs. No one thing shall be exactly like another. Closely allied her creations may be, belonging to the same family, order, species, but no two types are ever identical! She revels in the lavish production of differences and laughs at our bewilderment in this dazzling maze of diversity.

Variation, differentiation, proves the irresistible motor power in natural science pushing forward the heavy wheels of the car of progress. Oh, yes, some would urge, this may properly be said of matter or gross substance, but how about the application of the same principle to the immaterial world? Is what you say of tangible objects equally true of intangible thoughts and ideas?

It would seem that in the psychological realm or field of human consciousness the same things are true as in the physical life, if we confound not form with content; confuse not matter with its diverse appearances.

So far as known, the basis principle of all sentient life is fundamentally the same. But behold this endless divergence of form into which this elementally-like material has been molded To go no further back (and this is perhaps too far), review the shapes subsisting between the shaggy orang-outang and the proud Caucasian gentleman! Still, what of the intervention and influence of natural conditions, or the effect of environment?

To be sure, environment is Nature's master mechanic, constantly busy with modifying and changing for better or for worse the original structure. Thus also is it with Truth which is eternally one and indivisible. Truth is the basic spiritual substance in psychical life, the antithesis of matter which is, the tangible basis of physical existence.

We are wont to say, and it seems to us not altogether accurately: "No one has the whole truth, but every one a part of it." Rather does it seem to us we should regard Truth as one, a unity, like mind, or the monotheistic conception of Deity—One, whose manifestations are many, a unity manifesting itself in infinite variety! And thus truth itself is inimitable, and though subjected to violent onslaughts, none has succeeded in crumbling the sacred indestructible "loaf" into fragments, to be distributed at pleasure in larger or smaller quantities.

Indeed there are as many aspects of truth as there are forms of thinking; hence the mind of man from its beginning has had to occupy itself with this or that fact of life, discovering new facts or "truths" with the increase of intelligence and growth of experience—much in the same manner as the astronomer has learned to locate signs and to explain systems by the advancement of astronomical science and with the perfection of vision-aiding instruments. And hence we might well add there are as many viewpoints of truth-moral, religious, scientific, as there are stars in the heavens, some arranged like constellations in close clusters—whence arises complexity, and our difficulty in trying to see many sides at once, instead of regarding each separately and in relation to every other—others distinct and wondrously luminous like conspicuous planets. All awaiting the watchful eye of the faithful seekers after truth in every generation and from generation to generation, through which they may become manifest to the rest of the world.

Nothing more to say! 'Tis false! Not until the last gong of time has struck; not until the last gleam in the firmament has been accounted for; not until the final thought has flashed across human consciousness; not until the ultimate atom has been successfully analyzed; not until the last man is born into the wealth of the great unknown shall there be nothing more to say for those who look with earnest, intent vision consecrated to the service of placing in plain sight of all mankind, larger and ever larger areas of truth.

BERTHA HIRSCH BARUCH.

Panama as It Is. By Frank G. Carpenter.

THEODORE P. SHONTS.

HE GIVES PLAIN FACTS AS TO THE ISTHMIAN WORK.

From Our Own Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 8.—"The people would like to know just what Uncle Sam is doing at Panama."

I made this remark to Theodore P. Shonts, the chairman of the Isthmian Canal Commission as we chatted together in his office near the War Department not long ago. In reply Mr. Shonts brought out a lot of maps, and we traveled together across the canal zone inspecting the work. The War Department receives weekly reports as to just what is going on, and any changes of note are recorded by cable.

My first question was as to whether the dirt had really begun to fly.

"In one sense it has," replied Mr. Shonts, "and in another sense it has not. The work of the canal construction is properly divided into two parts. One is the getting ready to build and the other is actually doing the work. The getting ready is what we are doing now and we are rapidly advancing in that respect. We are making the isthmus healthy, housing our men, building terminals, railway tracks and yards, and working out a large number of engineering problems. In this sense the dirt has begun to fly, as far as is possible in connection with that preparation. It will fly faster and faster as time goes on, and within a few weeks from now we shall be making a perceptible impression on parts of the excavation.

"The month before my last visit we had moved 240,000 cubic yards from the Culebra cut, and we had then at work an average of less than eleven steam shovels. Within a short time Engineer Stevens expects to have forty steam shovels in operation, and he will then be handling 1,000,000 cubic yards per month."

Uncle Sam Really at Work.

"Tell me in simple language what 1,000,000 cubic yards means?"

"We generally estimate a cubic yard of earth or rock as a ton. It is a load for a two-horse team over a common country road. The product of one month will be enough to load a wagon train of 1,000,000 teams, and supposing that each team took thirty feet on a roadway the train would be 30,000,000 feet in length. Dividing by 5000 cubic feet to the mile for easy figuring, the team would be 6000 miles long, or just about long enough to reach from New York to San Francisco and back again. We expect to be doing that long before the snow falls. When we are doing it we shall consider that we have begun work seriously as to the excavation part of the problem."

"Where will this excavation be first done?"

"The most of the work now is in the Culebra cut, and a great deal of it will be right there. This cut has in the past been considered the key to the time required for doing the work. It is not so. The work upon the locks, if a lock canal is built, will require more time than that in the cut. The locks will be about 1200 feet long and several hundred feet wide. They will be so small that it will be impossible to work a large number of men in them at one time, and this will limit our possibilities."

"Is forty steam shovels the maximum capacity of operation?"

"No, we shall install more and more as rapidly as we can. We have now sixty-one steam shovels on the isthmus and we shall eventually be working 100 or more. I think the time will come when we shall work by night as well as by day, using electricity to give us the light."

"What are you doing with the old French machinery?"

"We are still using some of it, but are introducing modern appliances just as rapidly as they come. There is no economy in working over the French stuff. It is out of date, out of repair, and will go to the scrap heap just as soon as new tools and tracks can take its place."

Uncle Sam's New Tools.

"Give me some idea of what you have already bought?"

"I can hardly do that in detail," replied Mr. Shonts, "although we have it item by item. We have spent more than $9,000,000, and this covers all kinds of materials from steamships to blasting powder. We have sixty-one steam shovels, 1300 flat cars, and more than 300 dump cars. We have more than 5000 tons of steel rails, much of which is already in place. We have laid tracks through the Culebra cut of steel rails which weigh seventy pounds to the yard, and we are double-tracking the road across the isthmus. We have a large number of tracks running from the Culebra cut to distributing yard, where the cars will be made up into larger trains for heavier engines to take off to the dumping grounds. This will enable the engines on the tracks to the cut to be kept busy all the time bringing in loads and carrying back the empties.

"In addition to these," continued Mr. Shonts, "we have new and powerful locomotives, hundreds of box cars, a number of modern passenger coaches, hoisting plants of various kinds and twelve hoisting engines. We have bought more than a million pounds of dynamite and blasting powder and 152 rock drills. As to building material, our lumber purchases alone have been more than 30,000,000 feet, and we have also something like 10,000,000 bricks, and 500,000 square feet of roofing tile. The work of house construction is going on throughout the zone, and we are steadily improving our quarters for the men."

"Just about how many men have you at work?"

"Something like 23,000," said Mr. Shonts. "By far the greater part of them are foreigners, and a considerable number are Spaniards."

"Tell me something about the Spanish labor?"

"This is made up of men whom we imported from the North of Spain. They are of the same character as those used by Sir William Van Horne in building the Cuba railroad, and we find them excellent workmen. We have tried a few hundred as an experiment, and we hope to increase the force to some thousands. They are far superior to any labor we have so far secured, excepting the Americans."

"How many Americans have you at work?"

"About 3000. They are chiefly mechanics, engineers, foremen, carpenters, masons, plumbers, etc. They are good men, and are, to a large extent, in charge of the work."

"How does the Spanish labor compare with the native labor?"

"Engineer Stevens estimates it as two or three times as efficient," was the reply. "It is almost equal to the American labor. The ordinary native labor, including that of the Jamaican negroes, is equal to about one-third the working power of the American."

"How about hours?"

"We use the eight-hour day. This is the law, and we cannot do otherwise. That it is so is a mistake. I don't think the eight-hour law, the contract-labor law, or the Chinese-exclusion act should obtain on the isthmus. Four-fifths of our employés are bound to be foreigners, who are accustomed to longer hours and who work so much less intelligently and energetically than the Americans that it is hardly fair to consider them on the same basis. However, that is a matter that Congress will have to determine. We pay our men by the hour, and we can by law give them only forty-eight hours a week. If we could work them for ten hours a day, we could give them sixty hours a week; and in that case they would accept lower wages than they now receive. As a matter of fact the skilled laborers would rather have the ten-hour day, and some of them would be glad to work overtime at extra pay. As it is now, they expect to get time and a half for all work done over eight hours."

THEODORE P. SHONTS.

[Copyright, H. H. Pierce.]

Chances for Young Men at Panama.

"What do you now think of the chances for young Americans at Panama?"

"They are good. The wages are higher than in the United States, and there is no more risk of health there than there is in railroad building in many parts of our Southern States."

"Do you have many applications for places?"

"Plenty of them. Our mail is filled with letters from men of all classes who want to go to Panama; and we are sending down mechanics and others by almost every steamer. We have no trouble in getting all the men we want; and those who are now applying are far better than those of the past. Among the first corps that went there to clerk and do other work, were a lot of sissy boys, who expected to lead a luxurious life in the tropics with seltzer and apollinaris on tap. The men we have now are earnest, hard-working fellows who go down to stay and grow with the work."

"Is there much dissatisfaction among the clerks?"

"No, I heard no complaints during my stay on the isthmus. In fact, I attended a dinner there of the mechanics and others at Corozal where the men made speeches denouncing some recent newspaper criticism of the work and eulogizing the officials in charge. I [illegible] safe in saying that there is no dissatisfaction in Panama.'

"Have you sufficient quarters for the men?"

"Yes. We have done a great amount of building since we took charge, and we could give quarters to [illegible] more employés than we now have. We are building and improving right along. We have nine hotels on the canal zone, and nearly every American has a room looking out on a veranda, sometimes alone and sometimes with a roommate. The Tivoli Hotel at Ancon, which is intended more especially for the administration employés, has 160 sleeping apartments. We have a practical builder in charge of the new construction, and more than 2000 men are now putting up new buildings and repairing the old ones.'

"How about food?"

"We have organized a good system of supplying the men with meals at low rates. The native workmen are charged 10 cents a meal and the Americans pay 30 cents a meal at the hotels. The native food is, of course, much cheaper than the American. A 10-cent meal consists of soup made of meat and some rice, sweet potatoes or yucca and bananas. That is a sample. Of course, there is considerable variety. I have eaten such meals, and they are not bad."

"How about the 30-cent American meals?"

"They are to be found at the hotels and mess-houses. They are just about equal to the 50-cent meal that one gets at a country hotel in the United States. The bill of fare usually includes several kinds of meat, some vegetables, fruit and perhaps ice cream or pie. We have established cold storage plants and put refrigerators cars on the railroads, and we are doing all we can to make the men comfortable."

Amusements and Health.

"How about amusements?"

"We have been very busy improving the sanitary conditions, and have not done as much in that line as we should like to do. Nevertheless we have established reading-rooms in the hotels at Corozal and Culebra, and equipped a brass band which has been organized by the employés of Cristobal. The Americans are adapting themselves to conditions there. They are forming clubs of various kinds, and, among other things, an International University Club, which is composed of American and Panaman college men. The Masonic and other orders already have branches there."

"Do you think you have stamped out the yellow fever, Mr. Shonts?" I asked.

"We have had no cases since last November, and the warfare on the mosquito seems to have largely abolished her from the isthmus. Many of the men are growing careless and fail to put down their mosquito nets at night; and the fear of yellow fever has for the time departed. Indeed, I was surprised to find so few mosquitoes. Take La Boca, where our wharves are. I had occasion to stay there over night, and slept on one of the Pacific Mail steamers without mosquito netting or any other similar protection. During the evening I did not see a mosquito, and it was only after I got to bed that I heard one buzzing. I got up, turned on my light, and killed it, and then went back to bed. The work done by the sanitary commission in this respect is wonderful. A year or so ago one stopping at La Boca would have been eaten up by mosquitoes, but there are not, I venture, on the ten-mile zone, one-tenth as many mosquitoes as on any similar strip along the New Jersey coast."

"Is the malaria also disappearing?"

"We are decreasing the malaria. But there will always be more or less of that at Panama, just as in many parts of the United States. I would say, however, that the health of our employés is extraordinarily good. We have a sick rate of only 20 per thousand, and that is a better showing than in New-York City. Dr. Gorgas reports that there are 450 beds vacant in the hospitals, and he is sanguine that he can now control the health situation. Our quarantine arrangements are good, and we shall do everything we can to keep out yellow fever and other diseases. Indeed, I doubt if there is any place in the world so carefully watched from a health standpoint as are our stations at Panama. When we open a new labor camp, the sanitary engineers go there and lay it out. They attend to the cleaning and the men are not allowed to begin until the dangers of health are minimized."

"Have you a good water supply?"

"Yes. Panama has its own water works with a reservoir in the mountains of something like [illegible] gallons. Empire has a big reservoir, and so also have Gorgona and Colon. Bas Obispo is supplied by a running stream. The water has been analyzed at all these places, and it is good with the exception that it contains a slight percentage of vegetable matter. Notwithstanding this at some places they are boiling the water."

"Tell me something about the chief engineer, Mr. Stevens? Is he the right man for his place?"

"We think so," replied Mr. Shonts. "He is a man of extraordinary ability, great industry and infinite integrity. He is as straight as a string. He likes dealing with big undertakings and is accustomed to handle large bodies of men. He understands how to ganise his work and, he has selected able assistant Indeed, it seems to me that Uncle Sam could not ha gotten a better man for the place."

"When are you going to finish the canal?"

The chairman of the canal commission smiled as h replied:

"That is a question which depends much upon Co gress, and also largely upon what kind of a canal decided upon and how the work is carried out to a co clusion. If a lock canal, such as we have recommende shall be permanently decided upon we can finish it an have some of the largest steamers that float the ocea going through it within eight years. I think Enginee Stevens puts it at seven or seven and a half, but I wi say eight. These figures are based upon our presen calculations and investigations, and we think them no far from right.

ROYALTY UNIDENTIFIED.

The experience of the King and Queen of Spain, wh when motoring the other day, were refused admittanc to one of the King's own estates by a too zealous custodian who did not recognize his royal master, remind one of several similar misadventures of royalties, som amusing and some annoying.

Not many years ago, when King Edward was motoring near Lymington with the present Lord Montagu, gate was suddenly closed in front of the car, with th remark from the keeper:

"No, you don't! Two of your sort have rushed th gate already today, and I'm not goin' to be had again."

His Majesty was much amused at the absurdity of being "held up" on his own highway, and promptly pacified the keeper by tendering the required fee, a sixpence.

A charming story was told not long ago of one of Hi Majesty's little adventures when motoring near Biarritz He had stopped for refreshment at a small hotel in th village of Cambo, where he was served by a pretty Basque maid, who chatted freely with the unknown guest.

"A pretty girl like you has surely got a sweetheart?" said the King.

"No, monsieur."

"What! no sweetheart? The young men about here must indeed be hard to please."

"I don't know, monsieur."

"Ah, well," continued His Majesty, "I shall have to send you one from my own country."

"Thank you, monsieur," said the maid, with a smile and a curtsy; and when the King departed she shook hands with him, with "Au revoir, monsieur. Remember your promise."

The Prince of Wales tells many amusing stories of similar experiences, one of the best and least-known of which is the following. In his sailor days he had to pay a visit to a P. and O. ship which was lying in Malta Harbor. The captain of the liner had barely given instructions to one of his officers to man the yards the moment he saw the Prince coming off, when a boat slipped quietly alongside, and a young man stepped on deck, to be greeted by the officer with the words: "I say, when's that Prince coming? I wish he'd be jolly quick, as I don't want to wait long."

"I am very sorry," said the supposed passenger, who was none other than the expected Prince, "but I came as quietly as I could, as I knew you'd be manning the yards or something of that sort, and, as a sailor, I know what a bore that is."—[Tit-Bits.

METHUSELAN GEESE.

That a goose should have been "prematurely" killed in the neighborhood of Forest Hill, at the age of fifty, is interesting, but by no means unprecedented. I have well-established records of geese living considerably over half a century, and there is certainly fairly trustworthy evidence of both geese and ganders living for over a hundred years. Some curious facts "there anent" are recorded in a most entertaining book of travels in Scotland over a hundred years ago, and published in 1807, namely, "Travels in Scotland by an Unusual Route," by the Rev. James Hall, M. A. Hall appears to have been a most observant naturalist and veracious narrator. At the seat of Mr. Charles Grant (Elchies, near Carron) he saw some venerable geese, one eighty years of age, and he wrote: "A gentleman in the company asked if I knew how far sea fowls, eagles, partridges, and the singing tribes, continue faithful to the companions of their former years, when they meet in the spring. I told him I did not, but informed him that there is a goose alive at a clergyman's house near Glasgow, 120 years old, it being allowed to live about the house, and became the property of every succeeding clergyman there."

It is certainly curious that the greatest longevity among aves is to be found in birds widely separated in zoölogical classificaton, such as eagles (over a hundred years), parrots (well into the hundred, if not over), geese, and pigeons (thirty to nearly forty years, my greatest record being thirty-seven). Among song birds, the lark is, perhaps, the longest liver, if well cared for in a case or aviary, my best record being twenty-two years, when I made a drawing of it in the act of singing. That was in the March of 1905, and it is still alive. Thrushes (T. musicus, not T. viscivorus, which is not so suited for a semi-confined life), often live from fifteen to twenty years. Jackdaws also often live from fifteen to twenty years, and ravens about double that. In all these cases humane and careful feeding, etc., are presumed, in which case such birds live much longer and (evidently) happier, than in a "state of nature."—[Pall Mall Gazette.

D'Entrecasteaux Islands.

The Death Chair of Dobu and Other Things Seen There.

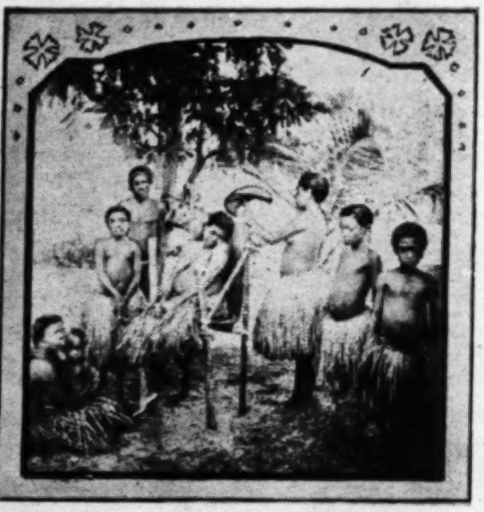
By William Edgar Geil, F.R.G.S.

AFTER dangerous explorations in British Papua I decided to make my way through a coral sea to the almost unknown D'Entrecasteaux archipelago, lying north by east of New Guinea. So I set sail for Dinner Island, intending to wait there for a few days, hoping to get a lugger going to Dobu. Dinner Island, or "Sam," as it is familiarly known (Samarai) is but a dot on the map, oblong in shape, four cables long by two wide, and surrounded with a fringing reef except for 300 yards on the northwest side. It is the seat of government for the eastern part of New Guinea, and counting all and sundry the population may be divided into seventeen females and 200 males.

The natives working on the wharf receive one shilling a day in coin. Until recently, the savages accepted a few sticks of tobacco for the day's darg, but that has changed, and money is demanded.

We domiciled at Mrs. Mahoney's hotel, because that is where the swells stop. On that day the population was discouragingly peaceful—but one fight had occurred. I attempted to number the people on a spree, but lost the count. At supper a drunken fellow left a plate of soup on the table and went out. While he was gone some one else entered and sat at the former's place. The second man left in turn, leaving on the table a plate well filled with cabbage. The drunken chap returned and soliloquized:

"This is mighty strange—hic!—when I left this was—hic!—soup, and now it is cabbage. Say!—hic—this was soup when I—hic!—went away, and now it's—hic!—cabbage. Mighty strange!" Then he decided to eat it anyhow.



DEATH CHAIR OF DOBU.

The savages have these two samples of the white man, who, with his ancestors, has enjoyed for centuries the healthful influence of a Christian civilization. The drunken, swearing, immoral trader; and the clean, sober, pure missionary. I listened the next morning to our drunken white man, partially sobered, say distressingly disgusting untruths about the missionaries. The trouble is that there are ten bad white men to one good white man. Should missionary success lag at certain places, there is the reason.

The highly civilized "white" men have formed an association called "The Gory Breeders Club," a title which probably properly describes the members. This very New Year's Day a white man who foully murdered a native was let off with the niggardly penalty of $25 paid to the relatives of the slain man.

New Year's Day on "Sam." What an experience! This is what I wrote on the spot. "The place is drunk, yelling like bedlam, drinking and capering worse by far than the savages who fringe about to see the horrible displays of white insanity singing at times 'Auld Lang Syne,' many times in fact, for it was oft repeated through the liquor-red throats of those who had better sent the 'cost' to needy ones at home, rather than shekel-enrich the local dealers in bad spirits."

During these five years of travel and study of native races I have invariably found licentious, drinking, swearing white men speak disparagingly of missionary work, and as invariably pure, educated sober, honest, virtuous white men praise and indorse it.

No vessel put in to "Sam" en route to my destination, so I hired a naphtha launch to take me to Dobu, the capital island of the still savage D'Entrecasteaux group. We provisioned our little vessel and kept an eye on the weather. When the sky signs were favorable we put out, with a few trusty ex-cannibals, through the dangerous fringing reef and said a glad adieu to the home of "The Gory Breeders White Men's Club." A good wind helped us along at first, but presently we dropped the sails because the breeze shifted from the quarter to head-on. I took the temperature—air 87 degrees Fahr., and water 84 degrees Fahr. at 4 p.m. January 1. We carried a live sheep on the forward hatch, with a tarpaulin over it to keep off the sunshine. Once the vessel careened to port because of a sudden starboard wind, and the live mutton's head got a bump. Imagine my surprise when one of my Papuan boys, the son of a cannibal, made a pillow to protect the sheep! Yes, the savages are capable of development into kind, tender, civilized people.

Dobu was reached in a hailstorm, but the great missionary Bromilow was standing on the shore to greet me—a full hundred of his civilized natives, and many more savages were with him. They were so glad we had come back that one shouted: "We feel so good we want to pull down a house."

Heartily welcomed by the missionary, we hastened to his humble thatched hut. Here his charming wife, Mrs. Bromilow, who was born in New York, gave us storm-wet travelers a gracious greeting and sent a young savage whom she called Gideon to take my small belongings to a daintily furnished room. The eyes of the youngster were so bright, his movements so agile, that I made some inquiries which led me, as soon as the storm was over, to go, see and photograph the Dobuan death chair. The vivacious kid Gideon kept at my heels and emitted a few sentences of English. On the shore of the sea stood the death chair, ready for the next victim.

Death is mysterious to the savage and he feels led to adopt divers devices to destroy its fateful power. Here the chair is used. It is made of the trunks of small trees, lashed with thongs of grass. In it is placed the dead body, and a section of the deceased's favorite bowl, purposely broken, is hung on one side of the back and a basket of yams on the other. The whole is then let down into a circular hole in the ground. It is customary in the case of a mother to hang around the neck of the body the jawbone of her late husband, and to bury her live baby, if there is one, with her!

Recently, Mrs. Bromilow saw a commotion, and ran to learn the cause, finding that a mother and a live baby boy were being buried together. The heroic wife of the missionary pushed the savages aside with almost superhuman strength, jumped into the circular grave, tore off the thongs holding the baby to the breast of the corpse, and amidst the most awful maledictions and bloody threats of the violent cannibals, made her way toward the mission house. She fell exhausted just as a friendly native took the baby boy, whom she had literally snatched out of the jaws of death. That rescued child was at my side while I photographed the death chair. His name is Gideon.

On my return from the death chair there was an earthquake, but we did not go out to see its effects. The island is of volcanic formation and is subject to violent shocks. In the middle of the bit of land steam escapes, and there the savages do their cooking.

A few years ago, when Bromilow and his heroic wife came the savages, who were then raw cannibals, held a council of war and notified Bromilow he must do one of three things, leave, or be killed and eaten, or become a chief. He considered the first and said "I cannot leave." The second presented only the advantage of a saving of funeral expenses, and he finally decided on the third choice, and became a great chief. He remains such to this day. Then he built a church, but nobody would enter it! For a long time he wondered why. At last one of the chiefs told him this ancient legend

"A wizard, long time ago, got the people to go into a house, and then called out: 'Mind your eyes!' So great was the wizard's power that they all became birds without feathers. Again the master magician called out: 'Mind your eyes!" and then they all got feathers. Although birds, they still had the minds of men. A humming-bird found a little hole by which he escaped. Other small birds squeezed through the hole which was gradually enlarged until even the largest bird could get through when his time came. Having escaped from the building the birds soared around in the air, not knowing what to do. Then the sorcerer called: 'Settle in the trees.' They did so, and that is how the beautiful birds of Dobu originated."

Then the chief added: "Chief Bromilow, that building of yours looks like the bird-house, and the medicine man says you will get the people into it, cut off the land on which it stands, put on a rudder and steer the people off into the great unknown."

Bromilow and his noble wife have converted thousands of the savage population, and he has not had a vacation for ten years!

I met one day the great chief Gaga Numore, who brags that his strong right hand has killled over fifty powerful men, face to face. He would not deign to attack a man in the back. He entertained me with two roasted chickens and a leaf full of yams. All the while he ate betelnut, green peppers and lime mixed together, which had the immediate effect of making his mouth appear as if full of fresh blood! This was to him no disadvantage, for it has always been his custom to drink out of a cocoanut shell the blood of his victims.

He has now, under Bromilow's influence, given up his cannibal customs, and is about to become a Christian. He is of large stature, and has, for a savage, a fine face. But I noticed an unpleasant brimstone odor about him which led me to question his near conversion. I found I was doing him an injustice, for I discovered that the sulphurous odor came out of the earth!

CONSCIENCE.

I knock at thy door,
The door of thy heart;
I mercifully implore—
Listen to me ere we part!
If forbidden, I return no more,
My mission? That the Supreme Will Be done; that all men brethren be;
That all shall own One Name, and none so ill
As to seek the outcast degree.
Awake! lest my voice be stilled,
Arise! before the dawn fades away,—
With duty sublime be filled,
Striving thy best day to day,
Open eternal portals to life forevermore.

Wretched Valparaiso.

A CITY WITH A RECORD OF HARD LUCK THAT IS UNEQUALLED.

By a Special Contributor.

THE history of the city of Valparaiso is one of the most unmixed hard-luck records I ever came across. I have written in another letter of the havoc that is yearly wrought by the northers to the shipping in the bay and the property along the water front, but these storms, in their steady recurrence, are only as minor incidentals that have helped the people to forget their other troubles. The norther has attained greater prominence during the last few years merely because the gap between the more serious calamities, from which some of the more superstitious Chileans believe their chief port will never be free, has been a longer one than usual. These fearsome ones have agreed among themselves for some time now that the next visitation will be an earthquake*, and since the San Francisco disaster their prognostications have been particularly depressing.

The founding of Valparaiso dates back to very near the year 1500, the time of Almagro's expedition from Peru for the conquest of Chile, which makes it a few years older than the first of our North American cities. There were probably plenty of troubles from the very first, but the records of the earliest period are scanty and there is no way of knowing what they were. In 1578 that spectacular freebooter, Sir Francis Drake, came swooping down on the little pueblo, completely cleaning up every article of value the place possessed, neither church nor private houses being overlooked. Hawkins did a more thorough job still, a few years later, and brought the inhabitants to the verge of starvation by taking away all their provisions. Still later some Dutch pirates effected a considerable clean-up in the unfortunate town, and after them came the English again. Thus things dragged on to 1730, when the monotony was varied a bit by an earthquake which destroyed all of the houses and most of the inhabitants. For the next eighty years it was nip and tuck between earthquakes and pirates as to which would do the most damage, with the earthquakes gradually getting the better of the contest through the construction of fortifications that hampered the work of the pirates. During the war of independence the Spanish attacked the city and captured it after a hard and destructive bombardment. This damage had just been nicely repaired by the indefatigable citizens when the Chilean victory at Chacabuco forced the Spanish to evacuate the town. This was done only after destroying the fortifications and burning all the houses to the ground.

The Earthquake of 1822.

Chile made great progress immediately after her independence was assured, and Valparaiso was well on its feet again in 1822, when an earthquake of great severity laid everything flat upon the ground and destroyed many lives. Much lumber was used in the reconstruction of the city, and in 1843 a fire of great extent undid all that had been accomplished since the earthquake. This was followed in 1858 by a still larger fire that left not a building standing in the business section. In 1866 the Spanish sent a fleet out to the west coast in an ill-advised attempt to regain their lost footing there. The futility of this effort at once became evident to the admiral commanding the fleet and he decided to expend the ammunition he had brought in doing as much damage as he could, and then sail back to Spain. Of course he began on Valparaiso and the work interested him so much that he used up all his powder and shot without troubling to shift to another anchorage. About $30,000,000 of damage to the city is checked against the gallant Spaniard's little diversion. In 1888 further variety was added to the record by the bursting of a dam in one of the quebrados back of the city, an accident that was attended with great loss of life and property. Three years later, in the revolution of 1891, the city came in for a bombardment at the hands of the insurgents and, following the battle of Placilla, some lively street fighting resulted in a number of fires which were attended with great loss. In the last ten years there have been no great catastrophes, but several serious labor riots have resulted in the loss of many lives and the destruction of much property. Of recent years these riots, like the northers, form a menace from which there are never long spells absolutely free of apprehension.

At the risk of being tiresome, I have checked over this record of Valparaiso's troublous past, not merely because in itself it constitutes a remarkable succession of disasters visited upon a single city quite without parallel in the world's history, but to show also that not all the energy, determination and buoyant courage in the face of adversity is on the North American side of the Isthmus of Panama. In spite of what she has been through, perhaps, in a way, because of it, Valparaiso is today rich, prosperous and progressive. That still better times are in store for her is undeniable, but whatever of good the future may hold can never be more that her due for the brave uphill fight she has made in the face of overwhelming odds.

Mixed Transportation.

In the matter of transportation the Valparaiso of today is a curious mixture of the old and the new. The automobile is a common sight on her streets, and her tramway system is in many respects the most up-to-date in South America; yet her cabs, in design if not in fact, are over a hundred years old, while the clumsy two-wheeled carts that serve instead of drays are almost as antique as the cabs. The streets are equally obsolete, belonging to the period from which the cabs and carts descended rather than to that of the autos and trams. Some people say that the condition of the streets is due to the springless carts, while others claim that the condition of the springless carts is due to the streets. At any rate both are very bad. It is perfectly plain that the springless carts would batter holes in a street of adamant in a very short time; it is equally evident that such streets as now exist would give but short shrift to any springed vehicle that was forced to navigate them. The obvious remedy is to inaugurate asphalt and springs at the same time.

These springless cargo carts cut an important figure in the industrial life of Valparaiso, for they serve as drays, delivery wagons, piano vans and such, combining all the functions of a dozen or more different kinds of vehicles in another country. The wheels are of considerable size, which makes the body of the cart high and difficult to load. They are drawn by two horses, one in the shafts and the other, which is under saddle, working from either side. The driver rides the latter animal and urges it and its mate along by means of a whip composed of a long lash and a short club. The lash is for the legs of the beasts and the club for the head; either is used indiscriminately. The saddle horse does its work by pulling on a short, thick thong of twisted hide which hooks on to a ring on the girth of the saddle and to another at the side of the cart. The saddle is kept from slipping back by a breast-strap arrangement similar to that used with pack saddles. In addition to carrying the weight of a man the saddle horse is unable to work to advantage because it can exert a pull only upon the side of the cart. These carts, with their noisy, bare-legged drivers, are most picturesque and amusing for tourists to look at, but they are also fearfully cumbersome, slow and ill-adapted to the work in hand. Four or five years more, at the most, will probably see the last of them, on the ground of economy if no other.

Wheeled vehicles are used only in the less inclined portions of the city; on the hills—and there lives the greater portion of the population—pack horses and burros are used. Milk and bread are also delivered to all parts of the city on horses. The baker carries his stock in two enormous bags of cowhide, untanned and with the hair on, while the milkman or lechero has a light frame fitted to his pack saddle in which set his milk cans. At the bottom of each can is a faucet for drawing off the milk. As the rich milk and cream rise to the top of the can it is a favorite trick of the lecheros to leave the last six or eight inches in the bottom of each can for their own use or that of favorite customers. Of course, food carried about in this way comes in for a good deal of jolting and a good housekeeper is able to tell how long her purchases have been on the way by the amount of chafing her loaf has received and the quantity of butter that floats on her milk.

The Useful Burro.

The burro trains are another important feature of the transportation system of Valparaiso. These little animals are very similar to those of the North American west. If there is any difference these here are smaller in size, but the loads they carry are quite up to the regulation standard of two pounds of pack to one of burro. Nearly all the bricks from which the city has been built have been carried down from the kilns on the hillside by burros, and a large part of the other materials used in the houses on the cerros has gone up in the same manner. Occasionally a burro train will be called upon to assist in a house-moving, at which times it is worth going a mile to see, perhaps, a stove, a bed, two or three bird cages and heaven knows what not upon the same little animal. Bedding makes the most amusing packs because it is so light and yet so bulky, the literal antithesis of the burro himself. I saw a load of mattresses start up one of the steep hills a few days ago upon a burro. The cubic contents of the pack must have been easily four times that of the animal, and from behind absolutely nothing was to be seen but the towering load and four slender legs. Half way up the hill the pack began to turn, and after that the burro was merely an incidental until the bundle struck the bottom. It brought up against a telegraph pole with the burro on top, his legs sticking straight up in the air. A pull at the lash rope released him, and the next essay met with better success.

The only thing to be tolerated about the Valparaiso cab is the fare; it is very low. Legally, as well as in fact, and I would point out that there is usually a very considerable distinction between the two terms in South America, the cabby's toll is one of the lowest to be encountered anywhere. The legal fare is 10 centavos, or about 3 cents, gold, though I never heard of any one riding for that sum. Ten cents was the authorized fare at the time the money of the country was on a gold basis, and the figure was not changed upon the statute books when the silver basis was reëstablished. The real fare is 40 cents in the present currency. If you ask a cabby for your change above this sum he will give it to you politely; if you give him 50 cents or $1 he will size you up as easy and stand out for double.

The cab itself is built upon the lines of the mail coach of the eighteenth century, a padded box swung between —not over—four wheels. The body or box is suspended some distance from the ground to enable it to clear the high places in the streets. It is drawn by two, three, or four horses, driven—or rather herded—abreast, and at a lateral speed in inverse ratio to the up-and-down going necessitated by the condition of the streets. The best advice I can give in regard to these cabs is not to take them, for, if you do, take a cushion as well; you will know what to do with it when the cab starts.

The Street Cars.

The tram system of Valparaiso—and that of Santiago as well—is under the control of a German company with headquarters in Berlin, the largest of its kind in the world. Its ramifications extend to South Africa, China and Japan, as well as to South America, and it has with great success wherever it has operated. The in Chile compare favorably with those of the same pany in Buenos Aires, Hongkong and Tokio, but still a good ways behind the best North American stallations. The rolling stock is the worst feature the Valparaiso system, but the old cars are now relegated to the suburban service and their places by new importations from Germany. The fare is low, first-class passengers riding inside of the cars paying 5 cents, while second-class ride on top and 2. The Chilean cent has about one-third the the American.

The electricity for running the trams is furnished the only large water-power station in South America. It is located near Pañuelos—also the site of the waterworks—about eight miles from town, and elevation of nearly 1000 feet. Here the company turbine installation with a fall of about 700 feet, oping a total of 6800 horse power. There have number of hitches in the operation of this plant it was started three months ago, and on several sions during the past week the big steam plant company in the city had to be put again into There has also been some difficulty in working plant to its full capacity on account of a shortage water.

Women as Conductors.

But the most remarkable feature of the Valp street-car system is its conductors; they are The "sex" is also employed in like capacity in and all the other cities of Chile that have electric trams. This practice sprung into being time of the revolution of 1891, when men and were scarce and women plentiful. Having given satisfaction to their employers during the vening years they are still retained. The first conductors were said to have been young and and to have been dressed in natty uniforms. even goes further and says that at that time good looks were a part of the "entrance In the light of the present this seems hard to It is also recorded that after a while the natty were dropped and it is just possible that the phal "youth and beauty" clause was stricken same time. Today, judging from what I have somewhat painstaking survey of the situation, say that the possession of youth and beauty, being a requirement, was now the means of flat disqualification. The "charming, chaste and ty-three" standard has apparently succeeded "fussy, fat and forty-five." Which may be sonable procedure on the part of the company, tified by the same reasons that prompt a man unsightly typewriter in order to possess a ary who is not being constantly tempted to flirt lect her work. Be that as it may, it is greatly credit of Chilean men—I say this in a sense of ison with other South American countries woman can hold a position of this kind. A conductor in Buenos Aires or Rio would be from limb before she had made her first circuit; one of the "youth and beauty" kind would. of the present incumbents of a Valparaiso car safe on a four years' whaling cruise in the Arctic.

The customary dress of a lady tram conductor is a broad-brimmed slouch hat, a short jacket sleeves turned back an inch or two, and a short skirt always hanging with a heavy port or list. Every time I see one of them I am our much lamented heroine, "Calamity Jane," scout of the Northwest, and at the time I knew ity" she had passed her fifty-second mile post subject to weekly attacks of delirium tremens.

An appreciative American lady, writing "new order of tram conductors" which she Santiago, says: "They are neither flirtatious and no scandals are heard about them. To a is an interesting sight to observe the note how capably she manages her car, businesslike way in which she goes through of collecting fares, giving change, gers, and seeing that the rule regarding admitted is not infringed upon." Granted this; she certainly is not prudish and for the very good reason that flirting, quires a second party. That scandals about her is attributed to the fact that several layers of social strata exist between here below which scandals never descend. A from an upper to a lower social stratum, Scandals are essentially aristocratic. "scandal in high life" is redundant; when other than "high life" it is not scandal.

I grant, also, that the lady tram conductor her car well—with the help of the motorman, most of the managing—and her collecting of model of thoroughness. She never misses you times she even comes round a second time you pay over again in case you have torn up in a fit of absent-mindedness. But the "giving part I absolutely refuse to acquiesce with. As gets your money and has sized you up as a helpless gringo she immediately lapses into a fulness from which it is likely to require than you have at your command to bring her

Not Choice in Selection of Words.

I must also reluctantly maintain that the conductor is very profane, in which connection a recent incident. It is the custom down the passenger a ticket as receipt for his fare, tickets are torn from a long strip that is an automatic tape-measure. In some way or conductoress dropped overboard the roll part of while the car was going at the top of its speed. of releasing the free end of the strip and after stopping the car, to pick up the roll, desperately on and tried to "reel in" the elusive a task similar and quite as hopeless as trying to pi up a ball of yarn by the loose end. In a twinkling yards of five-cent tickets were trailing off behind like patent log astern of a ship, and before the car was fina ly brought up this length was doubled or trebled.

It was at this juncture that the profanity occurred, rather, first became audible. The conductoress hauled the tickets hand over hand, and, as sailors punctuate th bringing in of the anchor by a chanty, so she punctuate the bringing in of the recreant roll by the delivery short, sharp, forcible little speeches directed to, and con cerning, things and people in general. This happene about a month ago and at that time I knew, I believ seven Spanish swear words, and the frequency wit which my seven words kept recurring in her littl speeches makes me certain that nearly all the othe words she used were closely akin to them. In fact sev eral new words which I caught and adopted from he discourse on this occasion I have since used with con siderable success in addressing newsboys, policemen hotel-keepers, and even other conductoresses, whom have believed were trying to take advantage of my bein a stranger. She is a wonderful woman, this Chilean con ductoress, but I can never quite forgive her for the prac tice she has of doing me out of my change every tim I ride with her.

Most of the better class of people in Valparaiso liv either in the suburb of Viña del Mar, 15 minutes distan by train and now also connected by a recently-opene tram line, or on one of the cerros or hills back of th business section. The most fashionable of these latte are rather cliffs than hills, and in former times resi dence upon one of them was penalized by the reall heavy exertion of going up and down steep and almos interminable steps. With the construction of the presen system of ascensors or elevators the worst drawback t cliff life was done away with. These lifts are speedy, cheap and convenient and run constantly from early i the morning until midnight. They are very liberally patronized but some business men still prefer to jo down the steps in the morning "just to put the blood i circulation, old chap, don't you know," while occasionally one will be seen to tackle even the ascent for the sake o the exercise.

Healthful Hill-climbing.

I believe that the Valparaiso women owe their fine figures largely to hill climbing, a good deal of which is still necessary in parts to which the ascensors do not reach. The children are as nimble as goats in getting about the hills, and this activity, and their fondness of it, are things that last well into later life. To see a vigorous young Chilean girl charge down a flight of stairs is as good as seeing a frightened big horn do a -foot cliff, and the memory of the first performance of the kind that one witnesses is not a thing that soon passes; mine is still fresh.

It happened one morning during my first week in Valparaiso. I had just rung the bell at the American Consulate, the door had been opened for me by a string from above, and I had stepped inside and begun the ascent to the second floor. Suddenly, above me, I heard a snare-drumlike rat-a-tat on the steps, there came a rush of air in the stairway, and I was dimly conscious of a blur of black, underneath which I caught a suggestion of French heels, ankles—beautiful ankles—and a swish of lace, just such a glimpse as one would get in passing in an auto at 60 miles an hour. The lingerie window of a ladies' department store. The thing swooped down at me, as a vampire swoops at a man who has stumbled into its cave, and just in time I leaped aside against the wall and threw up my arm to ward it off. Something soft brushed against my hand and then the door slammed and I was alone in the half-darkness of the stairway. I immediately rushed on up to the office and without losing any time demanded an explanation from the Consul. All that surprised gentleman could tell me was that his typewriter had just gone out for breakfast. I couldn't see how that explained things at all, but on the off chance went to the front window and looked out. The square was vacant save for a tall girl, with her graceful figure swathed in the folds of a manto, who was picking her way across the cobblestones to the Avenida de Brasil. That was his typewriter, said the Consul. As we watched her she daintily lifted her skirts to avoid a patch of mud and light broke upon me at last: I knew those French heels and ankles in an instant.

The Event of the Day.

The great event of the day in Valparaiso is the evening parade on the Plaza Victoria, the principal square of the city. This affair is on from 6 to 7 every evening in the week, but is at its best on Tuesdays, Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays, on which days the band plays for the benefit of the promenaders. People dine late here and the function is strictly an ante-prandial affair, an appetizer, a "fresh-air cocktail," is it were. Those attending are for the most part made up of business and office men, a generous sprinkling of army and navy officers and boys from the Escuela Naval, while the ladies are principally late shoppers. The English, as a rule, do not take kindly to the affair, generally preferring to spend this hour of their "dog-watch" in the club or a favorite bar over a cocktail more tangible than one of fresh air. This refers to the men, of course, but the custom is also responsible for the non-appearance of the English ladies who cannot very well come out alone. The Germans and French are always out in force, particularly the Germans. There are likewise a number of smart looking maids with a whole army of about the prettiest and sturdiest little boys and girls under their charge that it has even been my lot to see. These youngsters are full of life and activity and plucky and "sandy" to their finger-tips. They play all kinds of tag and other running and jumping games upon the promenade, bat their heads against the electric light poles, go sliding on their faces along the hard cement and come most startling croppers over the seats and curbs, and all with never a whimper of similar and quite as hopeless as trying to pick a ball of yarn by the loose end. In a twinkling 50 yards of five-cent tickets were trailing off behind like a [illegible] by sailors of a ship, and before the car was finally brought up this length was doubled or trebled.

It is an illuminative instance of the stuff the young Chileans are made of.

Valparaiso's hospitality, that of both the Chilean and the foreign residents, is most liberally dispensed to strangers on all occasions, and the most striking point about it is its spontaneity and informality. "Potluck" is the rule, and a man thinks nothing of picking you up on the street at the last minute and taking you home to breakfast or dinner without any notice to the family whatever. You always fare well, and if the family takes it hard they manage to hide their feelings most successfully. If a man is taking you home to dinner and something better offers on the way he will have no hesitancy in advocating a change of programme. A single instance of this will suffice.

Meeting a friend in the postoffice a few nights ago I was brought to acquiesce without much argument to his suggestion that a quiet family dinner at his home might be a welcome relief from hotel fare. But first we must go to the club for the inevitable cocktail. Valparaisans are very fond of cocktails, though they only know two, the gin and the champagne, both very creditable creations. The States are better known among the English of Valparaiso as the home of poker and cocktails than for anything else, and one of their greatest delights on meeting an American is to have him name over as many kinds of cocktails and other mixed drinks as he can think of. You don't need to know how to mix these cocktails, you don't even need to know of what they are made; just to run through the names musingly and regretfully, as if you missed them, is quite enough. I believe that the local line of argument is that, if they themselves are able to derive so much pleasure from the consumption of only two kinds of cocktails, how much more pleasure must the Yankee get from 15 or 20.

On the occasion of which I was speaking we met at the club a man with some tickets to a new tanda that was being put on at the Nacional for the first time that night, and his suggestion was dinner at a downtown restaurant and the theater afterward. So we called off the quiet family dinner and a table at the "bolsa" was reserved by phone. At this juncture entered a man who had been shooting the previous Sunday and who had ducks on for dinner in his home in Viña del Mar that night. Again the matter was put to a vote without debate and the ducks had it by a sweeping majority. The next minute we were rushing off to catch the Viña train.

A Floating Hospital.

BOSTON'S WAY OF CARING FOR THE POOR SICK CHILDREN.

By a Special Contributor.

IN her experiment with the floating hospital, Boston has given to other great coast cities a suggestion for saving the children of the poor to grow up into vigorus citizenship. The floating hospital had its inception in the brain of the Rev. Rufus Tobey, who, in going to and from the hot city and his summer home, saw the wretched mothers with their sick babies, seeking relief from the oppressive heat on the wharves at the bay. He wondered why some means couldn't be evolved for taking the mothers and their children on a day's excursion down the bay. A boat was chartered, and the excursion made, and so quickly did the generously-inclined respond to the appeal for funds, that the free excursions grew into a daily thing through the summer months.

THE BOSTON FLOATING HOSPITAL

BOSTON FLOATING HOSPITAL.

The many sickly children who had benefited by this charity suggested the idea of a floating hospital, and in 1897 the barge Clifford was purchased and equipped to accommodate 200 patients. In some cases it was found necessary, in order to save the life of a child, to keep it on board over night, and out of these cases grew the equipment for permanent cases. Two wards were prepared, with physicians, assistants and nurses. In a year this expanded into four wards, with the newest apparatus installed for cooling and drying the air and for preparing food after the most hygienic methods, while an advisory staff of physicians—specialists—was appointed.

But the work outgrew the old boat, and in 1901 it was found that if the hospital was to meet the needs of the poor, more commodious quarters must be constructed. In 1905 the new boat was begun; and in August of the present year it was put into commission (though not yet entirely completed,) and it stands today as a testimony to Boston's effort to solve the problem of her poor.

The new hospital is incorporated as the Boston Floating Hospital, under a board of trustees, of whom Edward Warner is chairman. In every particular the new hospital is equipped to fight the battle against disease. The vessel is 171 feet long and 44 feet beam. The hull is of steel and the superstructure of wood. There are four decks—the main, the hospital deck, the out-patients' deck, and the pilot's deck.

In the hold, besides the space for machinery, are the cook's galley, a dining-room for mothers and convalescent children, and quarters for the crew. On the main deck are the food laboratory, the clinical laboratory, the executive offices, dining-room for officers and nurses, and an emergency hospital ward. The food laboratory is fitted up with every appliance for preparing food for the sick children. Here is made pasteurized milk, or modified or sterilized, as the physician may order, and here, too, every bottle or other vessel used in the hospital is thoroughly sterilized before it is again used.

The hospital deck contains six rooms and an operating-room (four for critical cases and one for convalescents,) and one outdoor ward. This is protected from the inclement weather by awning which may be lowered; while steam radiators modify the severity of the temperature. On the out-patients' deck are accommodations for day patients; a nurses' rest-room, a kindergarten, quarfers for resident physicians, for house officers and for the visiting staff.

There is no appliance that modern science has suggested that has not been installed in this new boat, which will accommodate 100 permanent patients and 150 day patients. The boat leaves the wharf at 10 in the morning and anchors down the bay, returning at evening to discharge its load of refreshed mothers and children—the mothers having learned better how to care for their children, the children benefited by the cool breezes and the careful and scientific care of skilled physicians, of trained nurses and kindergartens.

The hospital is supported entirely by voluntary contributions. But its value in caring for the poor, in training them to recognize the source of disease, and in preventing it, is so apparent that the charity has not lacked for funds for the continuance of its work.

PLAYS THAT HAVE EARNED MILLIONS.

"Good old 'Rip Van Winkle,'" said a stage manager, "holds the record as a money-maker among modern plays. 'Rip' has earned, down to date, something over $5,000,000.

"When 'Erminie' was first produced in London, it was a total failure. But Rudolph Aronson saw the possibilities of the pretty and graceful opera, he secured the American rights, he engaged Francis Wilson, Marie Jansen and Pauline Hall for the leading roles, and he produced 'Erminie' superbly. The result was that this opera, which had been pronounced worthless, was acted 4800 times, and earned $3,000,000.

"Kate Claxton played 'The Two Orphans' 5500 times, making $2,000,000 out of the play.

"Denman Thompson, when he wrote 'The Old Homestead,' little thought that his wholesome drama would earn $4,000,000 in twelve years. Yet those are the authenicated figures.

"De Koven's 'Robin Hood' and Jones's 'Silver King' have each earned $3,000,000, and still bring in royalties to their happy authors.

"Among recent successes the greatest is Pinero's 'House in Order.' This play was put on at the St. James Theater last February, and ran steadily through the summer. It earned at the St. James $1,100,000, and its provincial and American runs are still to be heard from."

A LETTER FROM AFRICA.

All the way from the West Coast of Africa a well-known professional automobilist received a letter the other day from a young native desirous of learning the chauffeur's trade.

This amusing letter ran as follows:

"Sir—I implore myself most respectfully by holding my pen with pleasure to teach myself arts of the chauffeur (full course) beneath yours instructions. I am humble to capitulate myself a fit candidate for an apprentice beneath yours. Would such kindness bestowed upon me neither pains, dishonesty, disobedience not anything displeasant will be wanting on my side to render my service faithfully and devotedly. Trusting this will reveal a vapor on your worthy Controllership with more estimation under your sway to oblige—I have the honor to be,

"Your obedient servant,
"S. S. M'WANGA."

THE OLD CAR RETIRED.

As the car of Juggernaut, its wheels wet and red, thundered on its bloody way, it met a 90 horse power, 1907 model automobile.

The two great machines confronted each other for an instant. Then, humbled and ashamed, the car of Juggernaut turned and slunk back to its antiquated garage.

Typhoons of China Sea.

The Great Loss of Life and Property Unnecessary.

Contributed by James Page,

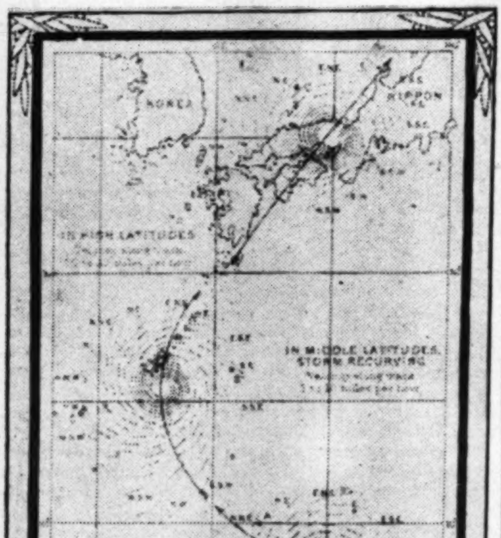
Of the Division of Ocean Meteorology, U. S. Weather Bureau.

THE timely firing of the dreaded double gun of the Hongkong observatory on September 18, would have meant the salvation of over eight thousand helpless men and women, and prevented the loss of millions of dollars worth of sea-going and harbor craft.

The wholesale devastation wrought by the last great typhoon, upon the largest commercial center of the Far East was wholly unnecessary. The coming of this frightful typhoon might have been absolutely foretold and preparation for its reception made accordingly, if the meteorological service had been as excellent there as that of our own government.

Certain terrestial cataclysms such as the earthquakes of San Francisco and Valparaiso, the eruption of Mount Pelee and disasters of a similar nature are yet beyond the power of human agency to minimize their effects, but through modern meteorological science properly applied, the winds of the heaven may certainly be robbed of their ghastly toll of human lives.

That the typhoon of September 18 caught Hongkong unawares, and caused a property damage that was great as well as a loss of life that was far greater than that caused by earthquake either at San Francisco or Valparaiso, emphasizes the necessity of more thorough study of these immense whirlwinds on the part of the English, German and French meteorological observatories which are scattered along the Chinese coast and have charge of the forecasting of the weather in that region of the world. Acting for the benefit of seamen and for the protection of commerce the United States Hydrographic Office has already made an exhaustive study of these storms and has published rules by means of which a vessel threatened by their approach may not only avoid the center or region of most violent winds, but even shorten the passage by taking advantage of the lighter winds which prevail upon the outer limits of the storm.



PATH OF A TYPHOON.

According to the figures collected by the Hydrographic Office the frequency of typhoons reaches a maximum during August, September and October, January, February and March remaining practically exempt. The investigation furthermore shows that the typhoon of the Western Pacific Ocean is in many respects the counterpart of the West Indian hurricane of the Atlantic. Both classes of storms have their origin in the vicinity of tropical groups of islands, and under similar barometric conditions; both undergo the same slow development and exhibit the same tendency to recurve upon reaching the northern limit of the northeast trades.

A typhoon, or tropical cyclonic storm of the Pacific, is due primarily to the appearance, generally within the sea inclosed by the Philippines, the Western Carolines, and the Mariana Islands, or within the China Sea, of a local area of low barometer, brought about by the inequalities in the temperature conditions of the atmosphere. In its incipient stages, the deficiency of atmospheric pressure throughout this erea may be slight, amounting only to a few hundredths of an inch. According to varying conditions, such a depression may either be dissipated, or it may deepen and ultimately develop into a well-defined storm center, giving rise to winds of hurricane forces. At the center, and during the height of the storm, the barometric pressure may fall as low as 27.50 inches, one of the most remarkable instances in this respect being the typhoon encountered by the United States Coast Survey Steamer Pathfinder September 25, 1905, the vessel at the time cruising off Samar, in the Philippines. In this terrific storm the vessel's barometer sank to 27.10 inches, the course of the fall and the subsequent rise being shown in the figure presented herewith. The space, however, throughout which this excessively low barometer prevails is generally small, sometimes not more than a few miles in diameter.

Around this central low point, which constitutes the heart of the storm, the winds circulate in a direction contrary to the motion of the hands of a watch, not in circles, however, but in spirals, which continually approach the center, the curve described by the air being similar in many respects to the familiar path followed by the water escaping from a circular basin from a central opening in the bottom. To the north of the storm center we thus have eacterly and northeasterly winds; east of the center southerly and southeasterly winds will prevail; west of the center, northerly and northwesterly. The strength of the wind diminishes as we go outward, the winds of typhoon force rarely extending farther than 300 miles from the storm center.

If the storm center remained stationary, a vessel hove-to under storm canvas would experience no steady shift of the wind, but would simply feel the force of the gale increase until its full violence was attained, after which it would gradually blow itself out, all from one quarter. Such, however, is never the case. In addition to the movement of the air around the storm center, there is a progressive movement of the center itself, carrying with it its circulating system of winds. In low latitudes the direction of this motion for all typhoons has westerly component, some storms continuing this course and entering the mainland of Cochin China; the typhoon of Tuesday, September 18 was an example of this class. Others recurve to the northeast and skirt the shores of Japan.

The velocity of the progressive motion of the storm center varies; within the tropics it rarely exceeds ten miles an hour, being here much more regular than in higher latitudes, where the velocity ranges from zero the center at times appearing to become all but stationary, to 40 miles an hour.

The present theory of tropical cyclonic storms requires that there shall exist at the center, toward which the incurving surface winds are directed, a rising column of warm, moist air. Upon reaching the higher levels of the atmosphere, the water borne aloft by this air is condensed into clouds, which are carried by the now outward curving winds away from the center on all sides. These clouds then, which are formed at a great height, and are of the cirrus type, radiating in long feathery streamers from the region of the ascending column, constitute for the sailor the best indication of the approaching typhoon, sometimes making their appearance when the storm center is 1500 miles distant. As the center approaches the density of the cloud canopy deepens, until the belt of nimbus, from which torrents of rain descend, is attained. The width of this belt in front of the center, is in general, about 150 miles; in the rear it is less.

The figure illustrates the circulation of the wind around the storm center, and the progress along the storm's track. In this figure the incurvature of the wind is fixed at two compass points, or 22½ degrees, which is about the average value. To fix the direction of the storm center from the vessel, it is thus only necessary to face the wind, in which case the center will lie ten points to the observer's right. By assuming a rough value of the distance from center (remembering that, in general, as long as the barometer continues to fall this distance is diminishing,) and observing this rule, it is often possible to obtain a fair idea of the path followed by the latter. In this process the courage and distance made by the vessel must always be taken into account. When in the latitudes in which typhoons recurve, a simple sketch of this nature, showing the relative position of the vessel and the center at the close of each hour, or even more frequently, may save the vessel from a second conflict with the storm.

The figure also shows the shifts of the wind which a vessel hove-to in anticipation of a typhoon may expect. In the tropics, for instance, with squally, threatening weather, falling barometer, and wind north-northwest, a vessel will probably occupy the position A, shown on the diagram, and the shifts of the wind, as the storm center advances, will probably be northeast, east, and southeast, following each other in great rapidity, on account of the nearness of the vessel to the storm path. In the latitudes in which typhoons recurve, a vessel with the wind southeast shifting to south will probably occupy the position B, while in higher latitudes, when the storm center is moving north and northwest will have a position in the neighborhood of C. On the storm patch itself, and in advance of the center, a vessel will experience fairly steady but constantly falling barometer, and torrents of rain until the center is reached. Hence the barometer attains its lowest point, and in the tropics the curious phenomenon known as the "eye of the storm" may be encountered. The winds diminish in force, or even fall dead calm; the rain ceases, the density of the cloud canopy lessens; the blue sky by day, and the stars by night, may even appear; the waves, however, owing to the contrary winds on the opposite sides of the center, are lashed to a tremendous fury. Huge seas swing in, not from any one, but from all directions, straining the vessel violently and rendering imminent the danger of broaching to, or losing the rudder. The diameter of this region ranges from 2 to 30 miles, and the time required by it to pass directly over any point from a few minutes to two hours, depending upon the velocity of motion.

The center passed, the barometer starts to rise, fluctuating violently the gale renews itself, but from a direction almost opposite to that encountered on entering the center, blowing in squalls of about ten minutes duration, simultaneously with the barometric fluctuations, later settling down into a steady gale; the rain once more sets in, but it also comes in squalls, instead of continuously, as formerly.

In the case of these typhoons which cross the coast line, there is added to the violence of the winds, which have been known to surpass in velocity 150 miles an hour, the destructive effect of the so-called tidal wave. The surface of the sea immediately under the center of the storm is relieved of a considerable fraction of the downward pressure of the atmosphere, the water rising into the partial vacuum thus produced as it were in the barrel of a gigantic pump. This upheaval of the waves advances simultaneously with the center of the storm, and should this cross the coast line without warning at a point where the shores are low and densely populated, as is the case in the vicinity of Hongkong, wholesale loss of life by drowning is certain to ensue. It is this feature of the storm that renders their forecasting, if only a single hour in advance of their arrival, of such vital importance.

SCHEVENINGEN.

All the world has heard its name, and only a Dutch throat can pronounce it. Long lines, row on row, of hotels and pretentious cafés stretch along the sea's edge, monstrosities of architecture, whose center is the great hideous Kurhaus, and a pier that walks far out to sea and also ends in a pavilion of its own.

As we stepped out of the electric tram and made our way across the ugly square to the sea, my companion hesitated. "Fifteen years! It is a long time to stay away from a place, and expect to come back and find things unchanged. Better, perhaps, to have kept away altogether. Ugh! Look at it!" She indicated the great drab stretch of bricks and mortar, the maze of tram lines in the middle, miles of asphalt promenade stretching away on either side, with painted iron railings as barrier. A group of [illegible] women were coming up the steps toward us, their white caps, with the imprisoned silver coif underneath, shining in the light of the setting sun, a fiery globe sinking across the sea. Richly ornamented silver pins were set on each side of the healthily-brown countenances to keep the caps in place over the ears, and their many thick skirts hid most successfully the contour of the human feminine figure as every self-respecting old-fashioned Dutch woman's should. They were knitting as then went chattering together, complicated [illegible] garments for their men's wear.

"Only the old women dress like that nowadays. I remember when even the youngest girls did, too, and the children, but they are growing like all the world. Everybody will be alike soon." She was Holland-born, though American by years of residence.

We turned our backs on the new town and walked along the wet sand, past the rows of hooded chairs and bathing tents, to the gray dunes and the fleet of fishing boats coming home. As we went we heard stories of long ago, of a great storm when the fisherwomen waited days, mad with anxiety, for the safety of the long-overdue boats.

When at last the first returner was sighted, a boat put off to ask if none was missing, bringing back good news to the waiting women ashore. Many dropped on their knees in the wet sand, shrieking, in sheer joy, peans of thanksgiving to the accompaniment of the raging wind.

The red sun slipped out of sight at last, leaving a little rose-irradiated track across the tumbling gray waters. It was like a Mesdag picture. Now, with our faces towards the sea, the keen North Sea wind was in our lungs, the taste of it on our lips.

We had to turn at last. Lights were beginning to twinkle in the Kurhaus. The sound of a string orchestra sounded, thrilling through the mysterious twilight. Crowds of smartly-gowned women were mounting the steps with their attendants, a cosmopolitan throng, chattering, laughing, all pleasure bent. My companion looked away from the sea. Her face changed back to its normal expression of self-control. "Come! Let us forget the old that has gone, and enjoy the new that is here. They are beginning the symphony. We must hurry!"

We went into the huge hall, past rooms with open windows, through which wicked-looking gambling lamps were seen. Each little table on the terrace had its occupants. As we stepped across the threshold the appealing notes of one of the finest string orchestras in Europe drowned the call of the evening sea. We found seats with difficulty, and prepared to enjoy our music with the rest.—[Pall Mall Gazette.

WOKE UP NAPOLEON.

A number of British tourists had an exciting experience while inspecting the rooms of Napoleon I at Versailles today.

The party was in the Emperor's bedroom, and the guide was pointing out the beauties of Napoleon's bed, when one of the ladies exclaimed: "There's somebody in it now!"

At this moment a man, looking wonderfully like Napoleon, and dressed in the gray coat and cocked hat of the familiar shape, sat bolt upright in the bed.

"I am Napoleon the Fourth," he said, "the direct descendant of Napoleon the Great. I fought at the battle of Sedan, and after the battle I retreated to Paris and came here, and fell asleep. You woke me up. Go away."

The guide understood that the man must be mad, and had the good sense not to contradict him. He replied: "If it please your Majesty to follow us, we will conduct you to your palace." The man followed with dignity, and was eventually taken to the hospital at Versailles, where he is to be looked after.

He is an Italian named Benvenuto Buonocore. It is thought that it may be his extraordinary resemblance to Napoleon the Great which has turned his head. [Paris Correspondence London Express.

These were removed to the mainland and quartered among Mexican families, to be taken care of until they should go to the Great Beyond. The last family was taken away by the late Don Antonio Coronel, who provided for these "Last of the Mohicans."

Though the Indians were the owners of the island by the right of discovery and uninterrupted occupancy for centuries, the Spaniards took forcible possession of the coves, valleys, and the most fertile spots. The coves were mostly desired for smuggling purposes. The annual galleon bound for the Philippines touched at Monterey, and usually put in at the island. The Spanish government was sending about 20,000 sea-otter skins yearly to China, many of which were taken from the waters in this channel. A number of overenterprising sea-otter hunters entered into competition with the government, and made this island their headquarters. Finally this trade was transferred to the United States, and the Americano skin hunters also engaged in the smuggling business. Vessels from ports with goods for the California market also touched here, and unloaded quantities of dutiable goods, and the smugglers made profitable dividends.

A number of Mexicans established ranches on the island, and planted orchards and gardens, also, herds of deer and flocks of goats. When the ranches were abandoned the animals took to the mountains and ran wild. They have been gradually thinned out, but, occasionally one is killed, and when the hunter parades the beach, he creates as much attraction as a society belle posing in her abbreviated bathing costume.

Fragments of shells, stone implements and pottery are dug up, occasionally, according to the statements of curio collectors.

When the Americanos began to arrive, they saw the value of the sea-otter trade, and about a decade before the American conquest, George Yount, Pryor, Wolfskill, Laughlin, and Prentiss of Los Angeles, built a schooner at San Pedro and made a descent upon the island, landing, unopposed, at the then open port of Avalon. They did such a lucrative business that they gave no attention to outcroppings of gold which they discovered. They were hunting sea otter, not gold, and had no time to lose. After the discovery of gold at Coloma, Yount recalled to mind the discovery on the island and reasoned that there might be something in the discovery. He made three trips, but failed to find the spot, and it has since remained as one of the many "lost mines" of Southern California. Others searched for the lost mine, but after considerable burrowing and tunneling, nothing was found.

The greatest excitement in the history of the island, and the most formidable invasion, was that of a rush of mining prospectors in the early part of 1863. The tradition of Yount's lost mine was revived, and parties crossed over to search for it. Dan E. Way and Martin M. Kimberly of Los Angeles located a claim, which they thought was the long-lost mine. They found "indications," and the gold fever spread to the mainland. The rush began, and claims were located everywhere. The isthmus, or neck, about half a mile in width, was the objective point. At the eastern end of the island, at Wilson Harbor, lots were staked off, shacks put up, and the spot was called "Queen City." About 200 claims had been taken up, and still the rush continued. The locations zigzagged and ran into each other, and around each other. The Recorder's office at Los Angeles did a land-office business while the fever lasted. Stock companies were formed, with millions behind them, or before them, on paper—just as they are now. A miners' meeting was held at San Pedro, and a district was formed which included the island, the entire county, and the ocean between the island and the mainland. Assays of the pure stuff were shown running all the way from next to nothing to as high as the imagination desired—even to $5000 a ton. But it seems capital was timid, as it usually is. Men of means balked when asked to put in machinery. However, the work of tunneling into the mountains and digging into the valleys continued. There were no tangible results.

Finally the United States military authorities began to take notice. Uncle Sam was wrestling with the Confederates; bold privateers were sailing on the northwest coast; there was a plan to wrest California from the Union, and there were many Southern men in Southern California whose sympathies were with the South. The strategic position of this island would make a good base for Confederate privateers, and afford them better facilities for preying upon the commerce of the Pacific Coast. Thus reasoning, the authorities at Washington concluded that the rush of miners to the island was a strategic movement to occupy it in the interests of the Confederates. Accordingly, the commander of the post at Drum Barracks, San Pedro, issued, on December 25, 1863, the following order:

"In compliance with instructions from headquarters of the Pacific division received this day, I hereby warn all persons on Catalina Island to leave the same before the first day of February next."

The miners considered this as a blank cartridge fired at long range, and continued burrowing and delving—but did not turn up gold. Many of them said that the military authorities merely wanted to jump their claims. On the expiration of the truce, the commander of the post executed a flank movement, unaccompanied by a blow of trumpets, brass bands or bluster. He landed a detachment of troops at the Isthmus, and there was no barbed-wire fence, water hose or constables to make him afraid. The miners rested on their side arms and waited for the enemy to outline his campaign. They had not long to wait. The following bombshell was fired by the captain of the Fourth California Infantry on February 5, 1864:

"No person, or persons, other than owners of stock, or employés of incorporated companies, are allowed to remain on this island after this date, nor will any person be permitted to land till instructions are received from Washington. I hereby notify all miners, prospectors, or other persons, to leave immediately."

This shot was effective, and its aim seems to have been directed mainly to the "other persons" rather than to miners and prospectors. The miners and "other persons" ran up a flag of truce and surrendered, being permitted to march away with the honors of war, retaining their side arms, picks, shovels, and, of course, the few grains of gold they had unearthed—if any. "Queen City" was deserted. Traces remain of this once busy place, which played such an important part in the history of the island, and in the Civil War. The troops were withdrawn soon after the miners retreated.

After the war had ended Yount made another search for his lost mine, and a little prospecting was done by others, but nothing of value was panned out.

About this time, James Lick, a millionaire of San Francisco, bought the island from the United States government, paying $12,000. A few years afterward, he sent an agent to England to sell the island—Maj. Max Stroebel of Anaheim. The major was well laden with specimens of gold and silver ore, as evidence of good faith that mines existed on the island, and not entirely in the minds of the sellers. The Englishmen looked covetously on the samples, and the major negotiated a sale to a syndicate for $1,000,000. But—the major died suddenly, and the provisional sale was not completed.

Finally the heirs of James Lick sold it to George R. Shatto of Los Angeles, for $225,000. The tradition of that long-lost mine was restored, and the gold fever again spread, but, nothing of value being found, the fever died away into a chill, and the disheartened prospectors left for better "diggings."

A few years ago the Mexican government claimed the island, and all others in the channel, on the alleged grounds that they were not named in the transfer of California; furthermore, that they were not part of the mainland, any way. The document was seriously forwarded to Washington, where it was as gravely filed, and buried.

SOME RARE DISHES.

PEACOCKS' TONGUES, KANGAROOS' TAILS AND OTHER STRANGE FOODS.

[Tit-Bits:] It has been said that London is the only place in the world where a visitor, from whatever part of the earth he comes, can rely on getting his favorite native dishes; and although this is perhaps an exaggerated statement, it would certainly be difficult to name offhand half a dozen foreign delicacies which cannot be had within a couple of miles of Charing Cross.

Londoners professed to be startled at learning, a short time ago, that roast bear figured on the menu of a city restaurant; and yet equally strange foods are common enough within the four-mile radius. If you have a weakness for reindeer flesh you can take home a joint from Leadenhall Market in the proper season; you can buy Indian bullock meat in tins; or if you are more fastidious you can feast on roast peacock, with its succulent stuffing of truffles, or on roast swan.

Snails you can purchase, ready for eating, at the modest figure of 1s 6d a dozen; or if you prefer frogs you can have them tinned whenever you please, or fresh during the winter months. You can buy kangaroo tails in Smithfield and make delicious soup from them; birds' nests, all the way from China, are to be had for 12s or so an ounce, and wild boar's head is a popular dish in London, and cheap enough for modest purses. You can enjoy caviare which has come straight from the Volga; sausages of every degree of mystery from Germany, Italy, and France; peach-fed hams from America, smoked cod's roe, and the desiccated spine of the sturgeon.

If you care for peacocks' tongues, a rare delicacy, you may have them if you are prepared to pay the price; a dish of turtles' fins will cost you perhaps half a guinea; and this is the price of a pound of dried gray mullet's roe, which is sold in flat cakes with a thick covering of beeswax; but you must pay four times as much for a large pâté of the finest Strasburg foie gras with truffles. Tinned larks have quite a large sale in London, and in Soho you can purchase cocks' combs or cocks' kidneys cured in a dozen different ways.

Perhaps you have a partiality for Indian dishes. Very well; you can have an ideal meal for a reasonable figure, including such items as pulao, korma, koftas, kabab, gobi-gosht, and shalgam-gosht. Pulao, it may be interesting to explain, is an entrée composed of chicken and rice, flavored with cinnamon, pepper corn, coriander, cumin seed, cloves, and other spices; and korma is simply leg of mutton cut into tiny squares, richly seasoned, with an addition of sour curd composed of tamarinds, lemon juice and milk.

If this menu is not adequate you may add Bomaloe fish flavored with tamarind, toasted poppodams, and many another dainty from the East; while for condiments there is a very wide choice, ranging from pickled bamboo and balchaung, a Burmese condiment made from shrimps, to pickled mango and peppers preserved in sherry.

As for strange and luscious foreign fruits the name is indeed legion. From Madeira and Portugal London gets a most fragrant and luscious fruit in the squashy pine, which resembles a pine cone, about 1½ feet long, and very juicy. From the West Indies we get the alligator pear, which, when seasoned with pepper, salt, and vinegar, goes excellently with bread and butter; the West Indies also send the yellow and purple granadilla, full of delicious and most refreshing jelly. Among the newest and least-known of these fruits are also the grape fruit from Jamaica and California; the Jamaican mandarin orange, which is pipless and costs about 12s a dozen retail; the custard apple, with its rich pulp so suggestive of custard; the loquat respra japonica, a canary-yellow fruit full of the most refreshing and thirst-quenching juice; and scores of others equally delightful but better known, such as the pine-flavored mangoes from Bombay and guavas from Madeira.

If your tastes are very esthetic you can feast daintily on crystallized flowers of varied hues—on lilac and orange flowers, violets and carnations; you may eat rose-leaf jam, or sip rose petals in syrup. Or if your appetite is very healthy you may explore the Russian and Polish districts in the east of London and sample several varieties of edible seaweed, decaying vegetables with an accompaniment of rancid oil, or fish in an advanced and appetizing stage of decomposition.

THE HOME LIFE OF THE HAWK IN COTTONWOOD TREE.

By a Special Contributor.

"THAT chicken hawk's got a nest somewhere down in them cottonwoods; he's been 'round there every year nigh as long as I can remember. He's never pestered any of my chickens, so I don't pester him," replied the old farmer, who had taken us out behind the barn to a little knoll where we could see the grove of cottonwood trees and the old hawk circling above them.

This was in the summer of 1898, while we were on a hunting trip. We searched the woods at the time, but were unable to find the aery. A year later we happened to be in that vicinity early in the springtime, before the trees had leafed out, and made a careful search for the red-tail's nest. It was near the top of one of the tallest trees, and one look sufficed to give us both the same opinion; the nest was beyond human reach.

The red-tailed hawk is perhaps the best-known of the larger raptores throughout the United States. It may be found in almost every State where the woods still remain thick enough for it to find a good nesting place. The Pacific Coast is a more typical place for hawks and eagles than many of the Eastern States. The tall trees, the sheer cliffs along the waterways and the steep hillsides overlooking the valleys beneath, furnish ideal homes for these birds of prey. Their chosen sites are inaccessible positions where they are safe from human interference. The red-tail is perhaps commonest about the hills and in the valleys of California, where it builds in the scattered oaks. Almost every little cañon along the central coast region is occupied by a pair of these birds. Their nests are easily found in the early spring by scanning the trees for a mile up the hillside with a field glass. The abundance of these hawks is due to the large supply of natural food they find about these regions. Squirrels, moles and other rodents are very plentiful, and these hawks help to keep in check these pests that are such nuisance to agricultural interests. If it were not for the birds of prey, the balance of nature would surely swing very much against those who cultivate the soil.

A red-tail likes a high, commanding site for a nest, just as a mallard searches the sedge grass about a pond for a home, and the pair of hawks in the cottonwood surely found it. We schemed for three different summers after we found this aery of the red-tail before we finally succeeded in leveling our camera at the eggs. The nest tree measured over fourteen feet around at the bottom. There was not a limb for forty feet. The nest itself was lodged just 120 feet up. It was out of the question to clamber up such a tree with climbers, ropes or anything else, but we had another plan.

We had spotted a young cottonwood just fifteen feet away. This might serve as a ladder, so we chopped at the base until it began to totter. With ropes we pulled it over. The crown lodged in the branches of the first large limb of the nest tree, full forty feet up. This formed a shaky, aërial bridge, up which we clambered a third of the way to the nest. The anticipation led us on. We lassoed upper branches, dug our climbing irons into the bark and worked slowly up.

We found a stack of sticks the size of a small haycock. They were not pitched together helter-skelter. A big nest like the hawk's or heron's always gives me the impression that it is easily thrown together. I examined this one and found it as carefully woven as a wicker basket. It was strong at every point. Sticks over a yard in length, and some as big as your wrist were all worked into a compact mass. In the hollowed top on some bark and leaves lay the two eggs.

How could we ever secure a good series of pictures at such a distance from the ground? It looked impossible at first, but a careful examination revealed a rare arrangement of nest and surroundings. If we could but hoist our equipment there was no question as to photographs. Eight feet below the aery the trunk of the tree branched and spread in such a way that we could climb to a point just above the nest on the opposite limb. We strapped the camera in a crotch that seemed built for the purpose, with the sun coming from the right direction. The rub came in focusing the instrument. One hundred and twenty feet is not such a dizzy height when you stand on the ground and look up, but strap yourself to the limb of a tree and dangle out backward over the brink. No matter how strong the rope, there's a feeling of death creeping up and down every nerve in your body the first time you try it.

mother seemed to estimate well the change of the season. She cradled her eggs about the last week of March before the trees had leafed out, and all during the time of incubation, she had a clear view of the surrounding country. When the hawklets were hatched and she had to go back and forth carrying them food, and when the

The eggs of some hawks differ widely in marking, bu the two we found in the cottonwood year after ye were always of a bluish-white tint with pale lavender shell markings. In her period of housekeeping, the young began to move about in the nest and perch upo the edge, they were all protected from a view below a well as from the sun and rain above by the thick su rounding foliage.

The red-tail is often called chicken hawk, but he d not deserve the name. Many of the hawks carry rep tations that they do not deserve. Often people w live in the country are enemies of the hawks and c and shoot them at every opportunity, because they th the hawk is the persistent foe of poultry, whereas t is a very small part of his diet. Off to the west of the hawk's nest and spreading fo two or three miles to the north and south, is a networ of low-lying ponds and lakes. Here the red-tails fishe and hunted. Skirting one of these lakes early on morning, we came to the top of a low rise between thi and the next pond. A hundred and fifty yards belo and at the edge of the timber, we saw one of the red tails sitting on a dead stump. We crouched in th bushes and studied him for several minutes with th field-glass. He had not seen us, or at least he paid n attention to our presence. Suddenly he lifted his wing and set out straight across the lake, but at the farthe side he seemed to change his mind, for he swerved an sailed back a short way to the left, and suddenly dropped to the water like an osprey. With heavy flapping o wings, he struggled to regain the air with the weight o a large fish that was wriggling in his talons. As soon as the hawk reached the bank, he dropped the fish, evidently to let it die or to get a better grip on his load. A few intervening bushes cut off our view of the fisher and his catch, but we lay quiet till the old hawk took wing again with his fish. He could hardly scrape across the tops of the low willows as he labored slowly toward his aery in the cottonwood.

That afternoon we were again at the nest tree with our cameras. The two parents, as usual, discovered our approach while we were some distance from their home, and during the ascent they circled overhead with an occasional loud scream. When we looked into the nest, the fish feast was over, for only the tail-end of the carp remained. The fish was originally over a foot in length, and I should have judged too heavy for the hawk to carry such a distance, had we not seen him do it. But these birds of prey are powerful on the wing; they will sometimes attack and kill animals as large as themselves.

Occasionally a hawk will make a mistake. I have the record of one of these hawks that was seen sitting on a perch watching the ground below. Suddenly he poised and dived straight for the prey. He seemed to strike squarely and began to rise with a small animal in his talons. The bird rose for thirty or forty feet and then with a scream, he began to flutter higher and higher, circling around, and all the time feathers were dropping from his body. He reached a height of several hundred feet when he began to descend rapidly, and soon dropped to the ground. The hawk had pounced upon a weasel, and had clutched it through the hips, but had not killed the little animal. Both the bird and his prey were dead when found. The weasel, in its death struggle, had literally disemboweled the big bird.

Our young chieftains in the tall cottonwood, for so we called them, were now almost full grown. They were as large as their parents, but their heads were still covered with downy feathers. Instead of crouching timidly in the nest, they stood up and walked about or perched in the crotch over the aery. Their home, which was once nest-shaped, was worn about the edges till it was a mere platform of sticks. While at first they assumed a fighting attitude when we reached the nest, in all our visits they never once tried to tear our hands with their sharp beaks. How they watched us with those large eyes of grey, such sharp, serious eyes! No movement of ours escaped their gaze. After several visits to the aery, we learned to regard the hawklets with a sort of love. The long trip, the ascent of the tree, difficult and dangerous as it was, well repaid us for a glimpse of those wild creatures in their home. We longed to take them with us to study their habits, for in a few days they would be forever beyond our reach. But what satisfaction could we have had in watching those birds behind prison bars? I would much rather have had their dried bones. Anything but a hawk or an eagle in a cage!

We made a close study of the red-tail's home in the tall cottonwood. He was always a successful hunter. In all our visits, we never saw the time when his larder was empty. Nor did we find that he had to resort to the chicken yard for food. There was plenty of wild game. On the first visits, we found the remains of quail and pheasants in the aery. One morning we saw the mangled body of a screech owl; almost a case of hawk eat hawk. The old red-tail had evidently found the victim returning home too late in the morning, and there were no restrictions as to race and color in the hawk household.

The wild life of the red-tail has a fascination for me. He has an individuality that is as interesting as that of a person. He has a character as clearly marked as in any feathered creature I ever saw. His home is permanent. He is not a vagabond. He is local in attachments and habits. This is his hunting ground. He won it by years of defense. He has his favorite perch. He watches the pond as closely for fish as the farmer watches his orchard. His routine of life is as marked as any inhabitant along the river. Nor can I believe he is lacking in sentiment of the home. He adds sticks to his house and enlarges it year by year. Who can say that the old aery is not fraught with many hawk memories of the past?

THROUGH SLEEPERS TO BUENOS AYRES?

One of the dramatic railroad probabilities of this century is the establishing of through railroad service between North and South America. Marine Curiosities.

STRANGE CREATURES FOUND OFF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA COAST.

By a Special Contributor.

TWO new specimens of the ramora were secured recently at Catalina Island, when a large shark was taken by a tourist fisherman. The ramora goes ahead of the big shark and advises him of approaching danger. This assistance is not primarily for the welfare of the shark, but is an incident of the ramora's self-protection. The little rámorae, which look like dark blue India rubber, have a powerful sucking apparatus on the tops of their heads and partly along their backs. When an enemy is approaching they fly to the shark's head, back of the jaws, and adhere. The direction they come in advises the shark of the direction in which the enemy is approaching, and this gives him a better chance of escape. He cannot shake off or in any way dislodge the ramorae, and (as the alligator does not hurt the little birds which pick his teeth) the shark probably values the assistance his small companions render. The long, oval sucker of the ramora is placed on him in such a way that he can adhere while going at full speed, and whether he adheres to the side of a whale or of a shark, he cannot be removed until he leaves of his own will. On captured sharks he is pried off with a chisel, because the attempt to pull him off by hand would injure the specimen. Owing to the sucker projection spoiling symmetry of line, the ramora could not be a fast swimmer, but he leans to the big fellow who is really an express train for the ramora family, whose chief necessity is the ability to hold on while being ripped through the water at seventy miles an hour. With the same high rate of speed the shark also secures the meals, and all have the same dining hour; so that in spite of centuries of abuse the shark is now found to have a value—for the ramora.

Two fairly well-defended creatures now before me serve to explain that fish are generally seized as prey from above, because nature invariably puts the armor where it is most needed. One of these is the horned shark, which has two defensive spears, each high up on a separate dorsal fin; and the other is the Trigger Fish. In both cases the bayonets are pointed for the enemy as when a battalion receives the order to prepare to receive cavalry. But the trigger fish has a sort of pocket-knive attachment for his. It folds down into a groove which reaches along his back, exactly as the blade of a penknife may be turned down almost out of sight when its use is not required. The trigger fish is a huge head propelled by a short, broad tail, with no intermediate body to speak of; and in this questionable shape he seems as unlike a true product of nature as the animals of the Heraldry Office. Still, he is an ornamental affair for the aquarium, his creamy coloring being softly shaded with delicate pinks and blues. But when he has the blues he is not, like us, at his worst, but his best. The general absurdity of his appearance rather disappears when he is angered. He received his name when muskets were of an ancient pattern, and when he is at full cock he is not to be trifled with.

The silver perch of the Pacific give birth to their young. They lay no eggs. As this statement will probably be queried by "Constant Subscriber," it may save him postage to confer direct with the manager of the Banning Aquarium, at Avalon, Santa Catalina Island. Prior to four months ago, there was here only one of the silver perch, and the present collection was born in the tank on June 8—mother and little ones all doing nicely, thank you, and show a pleasing family resemblance.

Maternity in the shark family is not of such a high class; but as the French say, "it arrives;" it gets there just the same. The shark's egg is laid in the vasty deep and drifts about without causing any maternal anxiety till the young "wolf of the sea" is strong enough and big enough to break out of the protective shell. Not one man in a million knows of the extraordinary babyhood of the shark; but these glass tanks of the Bannings show much that has not been recorded—not even in the text-books of the specialties.

Here we see an egg that has been moving about one of the tanks for three months. A spiral flange protects the interior case, and the whole affair is so strong that it could probably roll among rocks for weeks without being damaged. With its projecting flange it looks something like two or three inches of a carpenter's augur broken off. In the right light, you can see that this curious egg is partly open at both ends, and in the interior can be seen a young shark swimming briskly. The action of his fins and tail makes a current of water through the shell, and in this current the young fish gets enough to live upon and grow.

Joseph Silyngno, formerly of Naples, has been catching and studying fish for thirty years, and is now the caretaker and practical man of the aquarium, but he does not know when this shark will get clear of his shell, and has been waiting and watching him for nearly four months. No creature seems to have ever become really attached to a shark except the ramora, but Silyngno shows more interest in this infant pirate than many humans have in their own young. There is much to be discovered regarding these marauders of the deep, and the Catalina aquarium has some fine specimens, the gray leopard shark, which grows to twelve feet long and has a spotted body something like that of a middied carriage dog, the swell shark which has the ability to swell up his body to bursting point, and many others which gaze through the glass with a dull metallic eye that holds no light and seems painted with a yellowish bronze paint.

Another thing which, in our view, lacks the right to live is the stingaree, which may here be studied at close quarters and in safety. As it wings its way softly and silently through the water, it has all the appearance of flying, and so strongly suggests the vampire that it would be well named if called the water bat. The stingaree (perhaps I should write it stingray) does much to spoil the bathing on the Southern California coast—not because many bathers get struck by it, but through fear of the possible. This creature has an erectile dagger on the upper side of its tail, and when lying in the sand it strikes upward at the foot or leg of the wader, sinking the dagger nearly its full length. To pull out the blade tears the flesh, and an ugly black wound is left, which in one case laid up an acquaintance of mine for two weeks. But noise and splash frighten them away, and where a bathing beach is crowded safety is perhaps complete. Clam collectors who wade for hours among stingarees do not get hurt because they strike their rakes upon the ground. Fishermen with seine nets catch stingarees by dozens. They cut off the sting part of their tails and throw them back into the sea, where they quickly become food.

To pass to those fish which really do fly is a pleasant transition. Silyngno ridicules the many printed reports saying that flying fish only use their glass-like wings as aëroplanes. I prefer what he says on this disputed point to any scientific report, because he has lived in their midst and caught them for thirty years. Although it is difficult to detect the motion of their transparent wings, there are two facts to dispute the theory that they do not really fly.

First, they do not begin their passage through the air with any such rush and speed as would be necessary for the use of aëroplanes. Secondly, at the end of a long flight of say 150 or 200 feet, they often mount to a greater height than they have maintained in the previous part of their flight. Moreover they frequently get sufficiently immersed in an intervening wave to remove the efficiency of an aëroplane, and yet they continue their flight beyond. When it gets well set in print, a scientific mistake dies hard; and after much watching, I subscribe to the statement that flying fish fly, and that the length of their flight is solely limited by the tendency to tire. If an aëroplane could take them 200 feet at the same level, it might be expected to take them a thousand feet, which it never does.

Both the eyes of the frog flounder project in an isolated way from one side of his head. Each round eye, setting out clear of the head like a shirt stud, seems to work on a swivel, so to speak, and can be turned in any direction like a vessel's searchlight. The frog flounder here has a labor-saving arrangement in which he has an advantage over other folks. He does not bother to turn two eyes to examine an approaching object. He turns only one—the nearest. In this way he must often receive two different suggestions at the same time. But whether he has mind enough to decide two matters at once is doubtful.

In early life all of the flounder family swim freely through the water like other fish; but when they come to the age when they only flip along the bottom on one side of their bodies the Atlantic coast flounder partly twists the front of his head through the continuous effort to see out of both eyes while lying on his side. The result is that while the under eye sometimes gets around to the top side sufficiently for use, it is generally found so atrophied that its original place can hardly be discerned, and thus the eastern flounder flops through life with only one eye. But the general superiority of everything Californian is peculiarly apparent in our frog flounder which subsequently grows these extended swivel optics, showing that in nature new apparatus comes to experienced necessity. The name frog is only given in a fanciful way, owing to the humped appearance of the creature, which indeed might be expected to hump itself with pride after growing such wonderful structures.

STINSON JARVIS.

THE MEDICINES OF INDIA.

Great virtues are ascribed in India to the claws and horns of certain animals. Tiger's claws are in great demand with the common people. One or two claws may be worn near the loins, but should one possess a larger number the fortunate owner makes a garland of them and wears them around his neck. Deer's horn ground into fine paste is an excellent balm for pains and swellings. A more curious use is found for the same substance; it is sometimes made into a powder which is supposed to aid the growth of stunted women. The joints taken from the long and slender tail of the black scorpion are supposed to keep illness at arm's distance when children wear them on their waist thread.

A red or swollen eye is cured by having it touched with the bolt or chain of a door. A remedy which I have seen applied with considerable effect in more than one epileptic fit is to place a bunch of keys in the palm of the sufferer. I have heard it said that the fit passes away as readily if the keys are placed on the head. A rather quaint remedy in the case of a sprained neck is to use an iron measure for a pillow.

Sore throat is cured by spitting on red-hot iron—quite the simplest and least expensive cure known to the native doctor. Peacock's flesh is a good medicine for acute rheumatism.—[Madras Mail.

CHINESE DUEL.

On Sunday afternoon a Chinaman is reported to have been killed in a house at Talat Piu, Bangkok, as the result of a duel with another Chinaman. They fought with the two forefingers of each hand, stabbing each other with these in the region of the spleen and at the same level on the other side of the body. A strongly-built coolie, using the weight of his body, could certainly give a nasty blow in that part of the body, even with two fingers, and repeated blows of the kind are said usually to prove fatal. The men who go in for this kind of contest practice every morning stabbing bags of rice or paddy with these fingers till they can use them like a piece of iron.—[Bangkok Times.

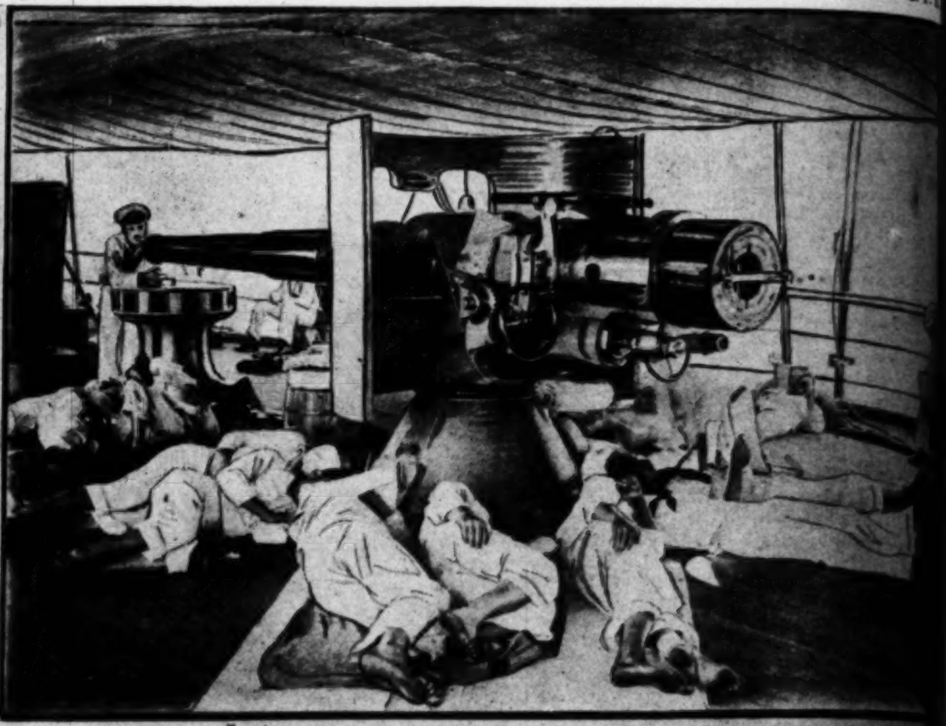
Honor to Our Jackies.

THE MEN WHO ARE FOREMOST IN TIMES OF PERIL.

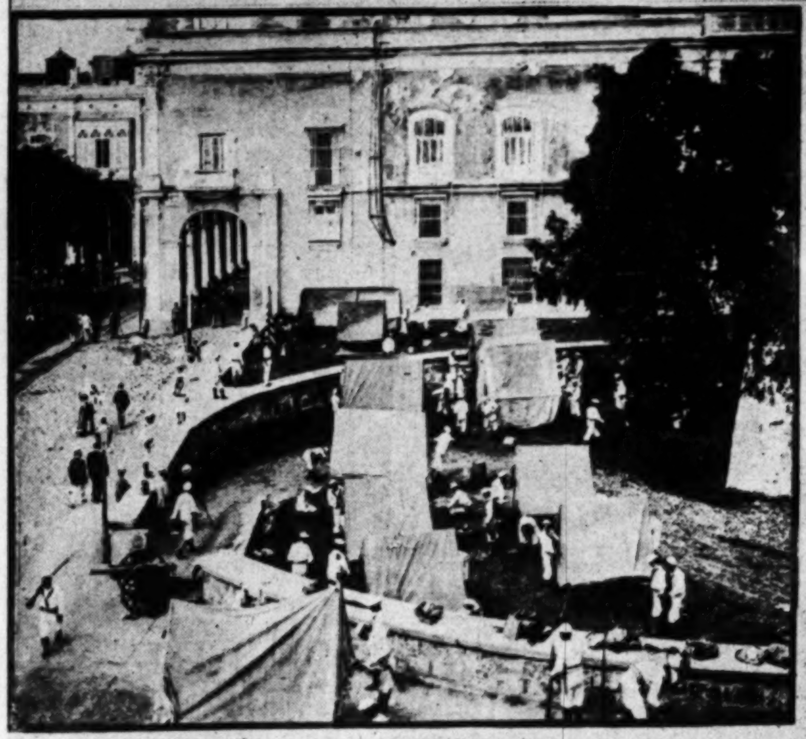
By a Special Contributor.

THE strong arm of official Washington has been extended in a determined effort to put an end to the activities of certain narrow-minded and unpatriotic persons who have lately been treating the uniform of the United States navy as though it were a badge of disgrace.

Rear Admiral R. D. Evans



Sleeping by guns ready for immediate acti



Camped in Palace Square, Havana

President Roosevelt, it is said, personally contributed $100 to aid Chief Yeoman J. F. Buenzle in his suit for $500 against the Newport Pavilion Company.

Buenzle has an honorable record in the navy, and is a man of good appearance. Were he arrayed in citizen's clothing, no proprietor of any public place of amusement in the world would think for an instant of denying him admission, yet merely because he was in the uniform of the naval branch of his country's service, Buenzle had to undergo the humiliation of being shut out.

He was not the man quietly to submit, and at once entered suit. His determination to get redress enlisted the immediate sympathies of prominent men, including Rear-Admiral Thomas, who at once volunteered to bear half the expenses. President Roosevelt extended his aid, and in addition to giving his money, made a strong public argument that the jackies' uniform is as worthy of respect from the people of the nation as the shoulder straps of the officer.

The men who wear the naval uniform represent as fine a class of enlisted men as any service could show. It is rare that any of them misconduct themselves. The entire system of naval service teaches a man to respect his uniform, to remember that any offending on his part is a double wrong if committed when he is in the clothes that show him to be a servant of Uncle Sam.

During the summer maneuvers at Portsmouth, the sailors of the fleet under Rear-Amiral Robley Evans, were very unfairly treated by the residents and business people of the town. Stung by frequent instances of discourtesy to his men, the gruff old sea dog, Evans, sent a tart letter to the Mayor of the town, in which he said that to put affronts on the nation's uniform came not far short of being a crime, and that unless the people of Portsmouth mended their ways, he would take action against them.

Later Mr. Evans suggested to Charles Bonaparte, Sec- retary of the Navy, that it would be a good plan to have Congress act on the subject, and draft a law making it a crime to discriminate against a man because he has on any uniform of any branch of the government serv- ice. Mr. Bonaparte is known to be favorable, and it is highly probable that at the next session some such measure may be passed.

In one instance, not long since, two sailors in uniform were refused admission at a Boston theater. Yet by a strange irony the play was one of patriotic theme, in which sailors were on the stage half the time, and were hailed as heroes. The men on the boards wore medals, but the actual sailors in the nation's service were not good enough to be permitted to see the production, even though they stood ready to pay for the privilege.

President Roosevelt's book on the "American Navy" is an admitted authority, and it is worthy of note that all his utterances on the subject of our great record as a nation of sea fighters, he has always been careful to pay fullest tribute to the humbler heroes, the sailors, who do the brunt of the work.

Manufacturing a Husband

THE WIDOW AND THE BACHELO TALK ON THE TOPIC.

By a Special Contributor.

"THERE," said the bachelor, as he nodded am at the big, jolly-looking man beside the l weazened woman, "is the best husband the ever made!"

"The Lord!" said the widow scornfully. "It isn't Lord who makes husbands. It's the wife!"

"And I always thought God made Adam," sighed bachelor, humbly.

"Adam," said the widow promptly, as she dro another lump of sugar into her tea, "wasn't a husb He was only a man. And a man is only—raw mate He is like a ready-made frock or a ready-made c he has got to be cut down and built up and ironed and taken in and to have all the raw edges trimmed before he is properly—"

"Finished?" suggested the bachelor.

The widow nodded cheerfully.

"Yes," she agreed, "and adjusted to matrimony. even then sometimes he is a dreadful botch."

"And all his style is gone," sighed the bachelor.

The widow studied her Sevres cup thoughtfully.

"Well," she admitted, "sometimes the material i bad or so skimpy——"

"So—what?"

The widow smiled patiently.

"Skimpy," she repeated. "There is so little to s men that the cleverest woman couldn't patch them into a full-sized specimen. They are like the odds ends left on the remnant counter. You have to do best you can with them and then use Christian Scie to make yourself believe they are all there and that patches don't show. Haven't you ever seen magnific women trailing little annexes after them like ech or—or——"

"Captives in the wake of a conquering queen?" br in the bachelor.

The widow nodded until the purple plume on her danced.

"Those," she exclaimed, "are the bargain-counter h bands, picked up at the last moment and made over fit the situation—which they never do."

The bachelor set down his teacup with the light revelation in his eyes.

"And I always thought," he exclaimed solemnly, "t they were picked out on purpose to act as shadows o or satellites."

"Picked out!" echoed the widow mockingly. "As all women wouldn't be married to Greek gods or pocket Bonapartes or Wellingtons or Byrons if th could 'pick out' a husband. Husbands are like Chri mas gifts. You can't choose them. You've just to down and wait until they arrive; and sometimes th don't arrive at all. A woman doesn't 'pick out' a h band; she 'picks over' what's offered and takes the b of the lot."

"And sometimes you're so long picking them ove added the bachelor, "that the best ones are snapped by somebody else and you have to take the left-over

The widow poised her spoon above her cup ten tively.

"Well," she sighed, "it's all a lottery anyhow. T girl who snaps up her first offer of marriage is as like to get something good as the one who snaps her fing at it and waits for a Prince Charming until the la hour, and then discovers that she has passed him by a that some other woman has taken him and made h over beautifully. And even if a girl had the who world to select from, she wouldn't know how to choo You never can tell by the way a thing looks under t electric light in the shop how it will look in broad da light when you have got it home, or how it will ma up or whether it will fade or run or shrink. And yo never can tell by the way a man acts before marria how he will come out in the wash of domesticity, stand the wear and tear of matrimony. It's usually t most brilliant and catchy patterns of manhood th turn out to be cotton-backed after the gloss of th honeymoon has worn off. And on the other hand yo may carefully select something serviceable—dull an virtuous and worthy and all that—and he may prove stiff and lumpy and set in his ways and cross-graine and seamy and irritable that you will cultivate gra hairs and wrinkles——"

"Ironing him out?" suggested the bachelor.

"Yes," agreed the widow, "and the wildest 'jolly goo fellow' will often tame down like a lamb or a pet pon in harness and will become a joy forever with a littl trimming off and taking in and basting up."

"Humph," protested the bachelor, "but when yo catch 'em wild and tame 'em, how do you know they ar not going to break the harness or burst the bastin threads?"

The widow considered a moment.

"You don't," she acknowledged grudgingly. "Bu there is a great deal in catching the wild variety an domesticating them while they are young. Of cours it's utterly impossible to subdue a lion after he has go his second teeth, and it's utterly foolish to try to refor a man—after he is 30 or has begun to lose his hair. Manufacturing a Husband.

THE WIDOW AND THE BACHELOR. TALK ON THE TOPIC.

By a Special Contributor.

"THERE," said the bachelor, as he nodded amiably at the big, jolly-looking man beside the little, weasened woman, "is the best husband the Lord ever made!"

"The Lord!" said the widow scornfully. "It isn't the Lord who makes husbands. It's the wife!"

"And I always thought God made Adam," sighed the bachelor, humbly.

"Adam," said the widow promptly, as she dropped another lump of sugar into her tea, "wasn't a husband. He was only a man. And a man is only—raw material. He is like a ready-made frock or a ready-made coat; he has got to be cut down and built up and ironed out and taken in and to have all the raw edges trimmed off before he is properly—"

"Finished?" suggested the bachelor.

The widow nodded cheerfully.

"Yes," she agreed, "and adjusted to matrimony. And even then sometimes he is a dreadful botch."

"And all his style is gone," sighed the bachelor.

The widow studied her Sevres cup thoughtfully.

"Well," she admitted, "sometimes the material is so bad or so skimpy——"

"So—what?"

The widow smiled patiently.

"Skimpy," she repeated. "There is so little to some men that the cleverest woman couldn't patch them up into a full-sized specimen. They are like the odds and ends left on the remnant counter. You have to do the best you can with them and then use Christian Science to make yourself believe they are all there and that the patches don't show. Haven't you ever seen magnificent women trailing little annexes after them like echoes or——"

"Captives in the wake of a conquering queen?" broke in the bachelor.

The widow nodded until the purple plume on her hat danced.

"Those," she exclaimed, "are the bargain-counter husbands, picked up at the last moment and made over to fit the situation—which they never do."

The bachelor set down his teacup with the light of [illegible] in his eyes.

"And I always thought," he exclaimed solemnly, "that they were picked out on purpose to act as shadows or—[illegible]."

"Picked out!" echoed the widow mockingly. "As if most women wouldn't be married to Greek gods or Napoleon Bonapartes or Wellingtons or Byrons if they could 'pick out' a husband. Husbands are like Christmas gifts. You can't choose them. You've just to sit down and wait until they arrive; and sometimes they don't arrive at all. A woman doesn't 'pick out' a husband; she 'picks over' what's offered and takes the best of the lot."

"And sometimes you're so long picking them over," said the bachelor, "that the best ones are snapped up by somebody else and you have to take the left-overs."

The widow poised her spoon above her cup tentatively.

"Well," she sighed, "it's all a lottery anyhow. The girl who snaps up her first offer of marriage is as likely to get something good as the one who snaps her finger at it and waits for a Prince Charming until the last hour and then discovers that she has passed him by and that some other woman has taken him and made him over beautifully. And even if a girl had the whole world to select from, she wouldn't know how to choose. You can't tell by the way a thing looks under the electric light in the shop how it will look in broad daylight after you have got it home, or how it will make up or whether it will fade or run or shrink. And you can't tell by the way a man acts before marriage how he will come out in the wash of domesticity, or in the wear and tear of matrimony. It's usually the brilliant and catchy patterns of manhood that turn out to be cotton-backed after the gloss of the honeymoon has worn off. And on the other hand you may carefully select something serviceable—dull and plain and worthy and all that—and he may prove so dull and lumpy and set in his ways and cross-grained and fussy and irritable that you will cultivate gray hairs and wrinkles——"

"Letting him out?" suggested the bachelor.

"Yes," agreed the widow, "and the wildest 'jolly good fellow' will often tame down like a lamb or a pet pony in harness and will become a joy forever with a little trimming off and taking in and basting up."

"Humph," protested the bachelor, "but when you catch 'em wild and tame 'em, how do you know they are not going to break the harness or burst the basting threads?"

The widow considered a moment.

"You don't," she acknowledged grudgingly. "But there is a great deal in catching the wild variety and domesticating them while they are young. Of course, it's utterly impossible to subdue a lion after he has got his second teeth, and it's utterly foolish to try to reform a man—after he is 30 or has begun to lose his hair. Besides," she added, "there is so much in the woman who does the training and the making over. There are some women who could spoil the finest masculine cloth in the world by too much cutting and ripping and—and nagging, while there are others who can give a man or a bonnet or a frock just the touch that will perfect them."

"How do they do it?" asked the bachelor enthusiastically. "Take 'em by the nape of the neck and——"

"Oh, no!" cried the widow. "They take them unawares. The well-trained husband never knows what has happened to him. He only knows that, after ten years of matrimony, he is ashamed to acknowledge his own youthful picture. He has been literally reformed in everything from his collars and the way he parts his hair to his morals and the way he signs his name. The best husbands aren't caught; they're made. And the luckiest woman isn't the one who marries the best man, but the one who makes the most out of the man she marries."

"But," protested the bachelor, "if we're such a lot and such a lottery, why do you marry us at all?"

The widow looked up in surprise and stopped with her cup poised in midair.

"Why do we wear frocks, Mr. Travers?" she asked witheringly. "Why do we pompadour our hair or eat with forks or go to pink teas? Marriage is a custom; and if a woman doesn't marry she is simply non—non——"

"Compos mentis?" inquired the bachelor helpfully.

"Well, yes," said the widow, "but that wasn't what I meant. What is the Latin for 'not in it?' Her father looks at her accusingly every time he has to pay her dressmaker's bill and her mother looks at her commiseratingly every time she comes home without being engaged, and all her friends look at her as if she were a curiosity or—or a failure. And besides, she misses her mission in life. That was what the Lord put Eve in the world for—to give the finishing touches to Adam."

"She finished him all right!" exclaimed the bachelor fervently.

"Making a living," went on the widow scorning the insinuation, "or making a career or making a fame or a fortune isn't the real forte of woman. It's making a husband—out of a man."

"I should think," said the bachelor setting down his teacup and learning back comfortably in his chair, "that they would form a corporation and set up a factory where they could turn 'em out by the dozen or the crate—or——"

"Pooh!" cried the widow, "a husband is a work of art and has to be made by hand. He can't be turned out by machinery like a chromo or a lithograph. And, besides, if you want a ready-made one you can always find plenty of them on the second-hand counter——"

"On the—where?"

"Where they keep the widowers," explained the widow. "If a woman isn't interested or clever enough to manufacture her own husband, she can always find some man who has been modeled by another woman. And she has the satisfaction of knowing exactly what she's getting and just what to expect. The only trouble is that, in case she makes a mistake in her choice, she never has a chance to make him over. He has been cut down and relined and faced and patched already to his limit."

"And his seams are apt to be shiny and his temper frayed at the edges," declared the bachelor.

"And you have to be very sure that he fits your disposition."

"And matches your taste."

"And that he won't pinch on the bank account."

"Nor stretch on the truth."

"And that the other woman hasn't botched him."

"And even then he's a hand-me-down—and may shrink or run or——"

"Oh, widowers don't shrink or run," retorted the widow. "Matrimony is a habit with them, and they feel like a cab horse out of harness without it. They long to feel the bit between their teeth and the gentle hand on the reins——"

"And the basting threads," added the bachelor. "I wonder what it's like," he went on, meditatively.

"You'll never know," said the widow setting her cup on the tabourette. "You're too old."

"Yes I've got my second teeth," sighed the bachelor.

"And your bald spot."

"And I've sown my second crop of wild oats."

"And yet," said the widow leaning her chin in her hand and looking up thoughtfully under her purple feather, "it would be a great triumph——"

"I won't be put in harness!" protested the bachelor.

The widow considered him gravely.

"There's plenty of material in you," she declared. "You could be trimmed off and cut down and——"

"I'm too tough to cut!"

"And relined."

"I'm almost moth-eaten now!" moaned the bachelor.

The widow leaned forward and scrutinized him with interest.

"It would be a pity," she said slowly, "to let the wrong woman botch you. The next time you propose to me," she added thoughtfully, "I think I'll——"

"Did I ever propose to you?" broke in the bachelor, with real fright.

"Oh, lots of times," said the widow; "it's almost a habit now."

"But you refused me!" pleaded the bachelor. "Say you refused me!"

"I did," said the widow promptly. "I wasn't looking for—remnants."

"Never mind!" retorted the bachelor. "Some day you may find I've been grabbed up."

"You'll have lost all your—starch and style by then," said the widow, as she patted her back hair and started for the door.

The bachelor followed, putting on his gloves.

"How do you know that?" he asked, when they had bidden their hostess good-afternoon and stood on the portico saying good-by.

"Well," said the widow, "it would take an artist to make you over. The wrong woman would utterly ruin you."

"And who is the wrong woman?" The bachelor tried to look into the widow's eyes beneath the purple feather.

But the widow only glanced out over the lawn and swung her parasol.

"Who is the wrong woman?" persisted the bachelor.

The widow studied the tip of her patent-leather toe.

"Who is the wrong woman?"

The widow looked up suddenly under her violet feather.

"The other woman," she said softly, "of course."

HOW TO BECOME A BARBER.

A LESSON TO TONSORIAL ARTISTS FROM A NEW CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL.

By a Special Contributor.

Almost any man can become a barber if he will but take time and his customers by the forelock. All he will need to do is to begin young, and study this lesson, and commit to memory the rules herein laid down—and after doing these things, if you do not make a success it will be because you have not got a chair.

All you need to start with will be a razor, a strop, a pair of shears, and a fancy for some special breed of chickens or dogs.

A razor is a thing with a sharp edge. It might be called a hair razor, and on occasions might be called a hair raiser. A strop is a business to sharpen the razor on, but in some shops it is rarely used. The chair used in a barber shop is somewhat different from the chair in a theological seminary. The chair in the seminary is endowed, but the one in the barber shop is upholstered and is easier to sit in.

Before starting on your career as a barber, you should equip yourself with a book on dogs or poultry, and should spend a year in profound study. Along with this study you should conduct a series of experiments with the different breeds, in your back yard at home. These experiments will doubtless cost you considerable money, but do not be discouraged if you "go broke" several times, for in no other way can you hope to attain success in your chosen profession.

At the end of a year's experience you will be able to decide on what you are going to adopt as your fad, and will be able to converse intelligently with any of your customers on his or her favorite breed in the dog or poultry line, and never fail to put in a strong indorsement for your own favorite breed.

The next two months should be spent in acquiring a conversational knowledge of women's dress, for in this day of rapid and numerous changes in fashion you cannot tell at what minute women may take to shaving, and you want to be posted on their favorite topic, so that you can get their patronage.

The next month should be spent in acquiring a complete and exhaustive knowledge of dentistry, dogmas, doormats, pendulums, pinching bugs, pancakes, agriculture, astronomy, axle grease, blood, boots, bacon, hogs, hugs, horticulture, hydrants, hypocrites, horses, lamps, lumbago, lemons, capital, crowbars, catfish, labor, larceny, politics, poison, pilfering, undertaking and a dozen other subjects, so that you can without a minute's notice carry on a conversation with any customer who happens to get into your chair.

Having conquered all these subjects thoroughly, you will be ready to wield the razor, and only a few rules governing your conduct in the shop are necessary.

Before starting to amputate the hair on your customer's face, the prevailing custom is to apply the lather and rub it in. The rubbing-in process should be kept up for at least five minutes, regardless of how it feels—to you.

In lathering, be very careful not to get any of the lather into the patient's mouth—always put the surplus in his eyes. After a little practice you will be able to put it into his eyes while you gaze uninterruptedly out of the window.

If your customer is only a man, and a stranger at that, open the conversation by asking him if he wants his hair cut. Also open the shop door at the same time, for you may need the open door to facilitate your hasty exit in case you have tackled the wrong man.

If he wants only a shave, and wants it in a hurry, wait about two minutes, and then run your fingers through his hair and make an audible remark about his hair needing cutting. He may be a business man who has been too busy to notice how long his hair has grown.

If he makes no response, repeat your question every two minutes, until you are successful, or until he shoves your head through a plate-glass mirror. If he gets his hair cut, charge him 25 cents for the cut and 5 cents additional for each time you have had to ask him. If he starts to depart without letting you cut his hair, charge him 15 cents for the shave and 5 cents for each time you used the persuader on him. If you stick to this scale of prices, within six months you will own the finest shop in town.

If, while shaving, you should accidentally cut your man, apply alum to stop the flow of blood. If the cut should happen to be a bad one, finish the job by cutting off his head to stop the flow of his remarks. In this way you can prevent his circulating the report that you are not fit to be a barber.

QUINTIN A. GRAVATT.

WORSE THAN A CYCLONE.

The spacious park presented a scene of devastation—shrubs broken, paths obliterated, flower beds destroyed, trees uprooted.

"Have you been visited," we asked, "by some terrific cyclone?"

"Oh, no, sir," replied the under gardener. "The boss is just learning to run an automobile."

ELDER TREEHEART'S COURTSH AND WHAT CAME OF IT.

By a Special Contributor.

NOT the shadow of a cloud flecked the limitless of the summer sky. Not a sparkle of dew ened on the stubblefields, or on the green that bordered the ditches. A tingle of the night's coolness lingered in the air; but the sun, just sli over Greyback's peak, was already sending heat through the awakening valley.

Early as it was, Denicia Bradburn was trudging the dusty path that led across the fields from the whitewashed adobe, under the clump of sycamore the long, wavering line of drooping willows and up ing cottonwoods that marked Mill Creek zanja.

The weekly wash, tied in a sheet, bobbed up and with every sturdy step, and the girl swung it from back with a sigh of relief when she reached the spreading willow, shading a deep pool, which serve the family laundry. She tossed her sunbonnet branch and leaned her bared arms upon a low while she caught her breath for a moment. Then began to gather up the dry brush, and soon had a burning under the big iron pot that was used for "bilin'." Presently she knelt beside her tub of stean water and began the patient application of soft and elbow grease which was the only cleansing pro know to her.

As she rubbed and scrubbed, she hummed a ripp melody that had clung to her memory since the dance of the saints in the council house. She came a pause in the middle of a measure, when her ear cau the paddling of a horse's hoofs through the sand of road, a few rods distant. Through the tangled gr and yellow of the tall, nodding primrose thicket saw a black horse, ridden by a large man whose fla avoirdupois shook loosely with every jolt of the mal.

He heard her voice, evidently, and after a glance and down the zanja, he caught sight of her fire turned his horse in her direction.

"Well, well, sister Denicia," he greeted her with condescending attempt at playfulness, "you are an ea bird—yes, an early bird!"

And Elder Zenas Treeheart settled his bulk comfo ably in the saddle and looked down into the rour flushed face of the girl with unctuous approval.

"Oh," Denicia replied with instinctive contradictio "it's not so very early. We had breakfast two hours a at our house."

It was community gossip that Elder Treeheart, one the leaders of the colony though he was, did not alwa rise with the sun.

"Ah—that is good—yes, that is good," the elder r sponded heartily, and continued without pause:

"You're an industrious girl, Denicia. I don't kno of a harder-working girl in the settlement! Nor"—h leaned forward and adopted a confidential air—"nor don't know of a handsomer girl; no, I don't know handsomer one."

The girl flushed to a deeper red than that dealt to he by sun and outdoor living and moved away from him t replenish her fire. The elder continued to watch he speculatively, while even Denicia's untrained percep tions recognized that he was casting about desperatel for something more to say to her. An inspiration came just as the silence was growing awkward.

"And you have a good voice, too, sister—a fine voice I have noticed your singing at worship. Won't you sing me a little song now? Come, just a little song"—he paused expectantly.

Such a request from an elder was, among the saints, equivalent to a command. But the girl hesitated, and then protested:

"I ain't got time, Elder. I got to do out all this big wash before noon, fer maw an' me aim ter go to San Berdino this evenin'."

The elder, after a moment of genuine surprise at her refusal, remarked with somewhat grudging assent:

"Well, well! you are a good girl to think o' your maw's wishes, and I'll come again, some other time, and then you'll sing like a bird fer me—eh? eh?" And he smiled again, with a fatuousness that was meant to be fascinating, and after some inquiries rode away toward the Bradburn dwelling. With her bright face darkened by resentment, the girl looked after him.

"The old pig!" she commented. "I'll never sing fer him 'long's I live! Does he think I want ter be his fifth wife?" She asked herself the question uneasily. "Well, I don't—ef he does give 'em all good clo'es and good feed, as they say. I don't want to be sealed to no ol' man, not even if he's an apostle, let alone an elder!"

She wondered anxiously why Elder Treeheart had gone to her home. But presently she laughed at her own foolishness. The elder was known to have a sharp eye to his own interests. He would never look at the daughter of a poor man, when he could have the pick from the wealthiest families of the colony.

By the time the last rags were hung upon the willow and alder bushes, her naturally buoyant spirits and healthy young appetite had driven all thought of the morning's disturbance from her mind. She had satisfied her first hunger before she noted that an added shade of dejection rested on the mother's toil-marked, work-hardened countenance, and that her father's usual jocose remarks were portentiously absent.

When Lucas Bradburn had drained his last drop of coffee and carefully scraped the last bean from his plate, he shoved back his chair and, after an ominous weighing of his words, began:

When Lucas Bradburn had drained his last drop of coffee and carefully scraped the last bean from his plate, he shoved back his chair and, after an ominous weighing of his words, began:

"Denishy, Elder Zenas Treeheart was here this mornin'."

"Yes," replied the girl, "I know that."

"Do you know what he come fer?" her father inquired, with sudden hopefulness in his tone.

"No, I don't know! an' I don't want to know," she returned, rising and beginning to gather the plates and cups with a clatter.

"Tut, tut! don't be too brash, gal," her father warned. "Elder Treeheart wants you to be sealed to him."

"Fer his fifth wife!" Denicia cried scornfully, "that ugly, fat, ol' man! I won't do it!"

Her mother spoke soothingly:

"There, Sis, o' course that's the way you feel at first. But when you look at it, it's a mighty fine thing fer you, honey! He's the richest man in the settlement, they say, an' everybody says he's fair good to his women folks."

"Yes," the father hastened to confirm, "an' he stan's high in the church, nex' to Apostles Lyman and Rich, and"—he moved out of the range of his daughter's clear eyes—"ye know—our land ain't paid fer—yit——"

The girl turned in dismay from one parent to the other.

"Oh, Paw—Maw!" she cried, "you don't really think I ought to marry that ol'—hog?"

"You ought ter be powerful glad ter be sealed ter a good man, high up in the church! Why, he's a friend o' Brigham's," her father answered with rising enthusiasm.

"Ef it was his first wife—but the fifth! An' the rest is all ol' women now——"

Her mother, with a strong touch of bitterness under her urging, said: "It's better ter be the last one, Denishy. She allers has the best o' it—fer a while, enyway."

"Ef it's such a good thing ter have five wives, why ain't you got more'n one?" The girl turned sharply on her father.

He flushed and glanced apprehensively across the table, as he answered: "Well, I reckon yer maw an' me was too ol' when we jined the true church o' Zion. We'd kin' o' got uset ter the ol' ways, an' I ain't never felt no call ter seal no other woman. Though the elders do say it's my bounden duty! Mebbe, when you're gone, an' this farm is paid fer——"

"Ye'll hev to be a sight spryer'n what ye ever hev been yit, befo' ye kin take care o' two wives and two families," his wife remarked dryly. Yer second wife won't put up with one kaliker an' one pair o' shoes ev'ry two or three years."

"Well, that ain't here ner there," the husband interrupted, and rose. "But, Denishy, Elder Treeheart is comin' to talk ter ye, tonight, and you'd better make it 'yes,' an' no more talkin'." And he went outside.

The girl dropped her head upon the rough board table and began to cry. Tears of sympathy stood in the mother's eyes, as she advised:

"I b'lieve it's the bes' thing fer ye, honey. Ye'll have good livin' an' ye'll never hev ter slave an' moil yerself to the bone, the way I hev. You better make up your mind to it, child."

Elder Treeheart rode away, that night, with a well-satisfied expression on his heavy lips. His newly-selected bride-to-be had frankly asserted that she only consented to his suit to please her parents. But the elder had had too much matrimonial experience to worry over such a statement.

All of his wives, except the first one, had been acquired with more or less opposition from within or without. A few weeks of his family discipline would set Miss Denicia straight, he felt confident.

A night or two later, as the Bradburn family sat about the supper table, spread under the big sycamore for coolness, they saw a man approaching through the falling dusk. When the dogs had been quieted, a stalwalt young stranger dropped his roll of blankets to the ground and asked permission to sleep on the hay and to purchase a meal.

As Denicia served the new-comer, he watched her plump figure and handy movements with a concentrated attention that sent an entirely new sensation surging through her, when she met his eyes. At the same time he talked with the free open-heartedness of the frontiersman, explaining to her father that he had crossed the plains to seek his fortune in the gold diggings, but had wearied of profitless mining and had come to the lower country to prospect for a new layout.

The next morning, Jim Slocum stood long and looked over the gently-rolling valley that swept from one mountain range across to another. He noted the freshness of the young orchards and cornfields, the gold of stubblefields, the green paths of the natural streams and the zanjas, the slender threads of smoke that betrayed the dwelling-places of men, the sunlight on the clustered robfs of the town—and then he cried:

"This makes me homesick! It looks more like back in Jo Davies's county than anything I've ever seen in Californy. How comes it?"

Bradburn explained that the valley had been settled by a Mormon colony, and much of the farming was done on the community plan.

"An' we ain't lookin' fer all the earth, like the Californians an' the Americans that's got to have a thousand acres of land an' ten thousand head o' cattle ter git a plain livin' out o'. We are satisfied with a small farm apiece an' water enough to keep things a-growin'. We raise our own livin' out o' the ground."

"Gosh-all-fish-hooks! but this is the place fer me!" Slocum declared. "My dad an' gran'dad before him was farmers, an' that's what I was cut out fer. There ain't no minin' fever in me—I found that out. Can a poor cuss that ain't a saint git a show here?"

"Some land has been sold to gentiles, but the elders don't greatly hanker ter do it," Bradburn admitted cautiously. Then he explained that he needed a hand to help him with the ditch he was digging to irrigate his potato field, and the young fellow gladly shouldered a pick and shovel and kept the dirt steadily flying through the long, hot July day.

After the day's work was done, he sat under the sycamores, and Denicia came out and sat near him. They talked together and looked into one another's eyes with the never-old attraction of normal, healthy youth—and were happy. A couple of nights later, the girl sat on a bench by his side and sang to him, accompanying herself by an accordion, the most treasured possession of her girlhood. He was rumbling a bass purr to her clear treble, when the thud of horse's feet startled them into silence.

"Elder Treeheart!" she gasped in alarm, and ran away into the house. The elder dismounted heavily, and followed her, after peering scowlingly through the darkness at the stranger.

The next morning, when Slocum went into the house to breakfast, he could not help feeling the changed atmosphere of the household. Denicia's eyelids were red and her whole bearing was a mute appeal for his sympathy and help. Mrs. Bradburn met his cheery salute with a furtively apologetic look while she gave him a stiff good-morning that meant anything but "good" morning. Bradburn ate the meal with uneasy taciturnity. When the two men had gone outside, he began, with a conspicuously lame attempt at ease:

"The elder was here last night, Slocum."

"Yes," Slocum answered, "I saw him."

"He says that I hadn't orter hire a gentile to do work that there's plenty o' saints needin' the pay fer, and so—I reckon——"

"You want me to mosey," Slocum finished.

"Yes. I'm sorry. You're a good hand to work—but we have to respeck the wishes of our heads."

"Well!" the young man broke out, "I never heard tell o' the church, before, that interfered with a man's hirin' his own help! 'Twouldn't take me long to git out'n a religion that meddled with my affairs thataway."

"I ain't a-goin' to hear nothin' agin my church," Bradburn answered doggedly. "It's the holy church o' Zion, and whatever the elders says is right."

"All right—we won't fight—ef you want to be a meachin' fool—but—I want to speak to Denicia before I go."

"What fer?" her father demanded angrily. "You ain't got no truckle with the gal.'

"I'm goin' ter ask her ter marry me.'

"Ye'll do no sich thing! Bradburn clenched Slocum's arm. "She's goin ter be sealed ter Elder Zenas Treeheart nex' week; she's set apart fer a high place——"

"Sealed? What's that? Married, do you mean? And to that ol' stiff? How many wives has he got now?"

"That's none o' yer biz'ness!" Bradburn was beside himself with fear and rage, now. "You git out'n here as fast as yer legs'll carry ye," he ordered, and attempted to block the door, which they were nearing in their struggle. But Slocum, with one shove of his beefy arm, hunched the elder man out of the way, and stepped through the door.

"Denishy!" he called; "Denishy!"

The girl, now openly weeping, came from the bedroom.

"Yer dad tells me yer goin' to marry that ol' devil that was here last night."

"Yes," she answered faintly.

"How many wives has the ol' party now? Four? An' you are goin' ter be number five in his string o' women? I wouldn't 'a' believed it—I don't believe it! Denishy, marry me, honey, an' you'll be my first wife an' my last one so long's we both live. Won't you?"

The girl's face, sodden with tears and girlish grief, lighted as quickly as though an electric button had been pushed. She turned toward her mother, whose face was also aglow with sudden relief and hope.

"Yes, darter," she cried eagerly; "yes, marry him. Ye'd better be the only wife o' the poorest man on earth than the fifth wife o' Brigham himself——"

"Air ye plumb crazy, Maw?" Bradburn stormed, but his rage lost much of its effect, coming as it did from behind the massive form of the new suitor, which shut the irate father from the room and obscured all but the slouchy top of his old hat from view. "Air ye crazy?" he shouted again. "Denishy's promised to the Elder Treeheart, an' ef she goes back on her word now, he'll ruin us all; he'll——"

"Don't you worry about that, dad," Slocum, with Denicia in his arms, interrupted. "I'll tend to the elder. One punch in that bloated bread basket o' hisn'n 'll settle him fer a spell, enyway. An' this is a free country! He can't hurt me."

"Denishy, git your bunnet an' we'll borry yer dad's horses an' jest slip down to Chino. I reckon Col. Ike Williams can seal us so tight that no Mormon elder in this country can pull us apart."

An hour later the lovers rode through the town of San Bernardino at an easy lope. As they passed the closed doors of Elder Zenas Treeheart's long-drawn-out 'dobe, Denicia threw a happy, scornful glance at the house.

"The elder'll have to git up earlier in the mornin' ef he's goin' to catch a fifth wife in this country," she laughed.

VARIOUS HOW-ARE-YOU'S.

"How are you?" in German is "Wie befinden sie sicht?" ("How do you find yourself?") It is also "Wie geht's."

The Dutch say "Hoc vaart gij?" ("How do you fare?") The Italians ask, "Come state?" ("How do you stand?") The French, "Comment vous portez-vous?" ("How do you carry yourself?")

The Greeks ask what you are doing; the Chinese want to know if you enjoy your rice; and the Russians inquire how you are living.

The Arabs, a devout people, say "God grant His favors to you!" The Turks, no less devout, say, "Be under God's care!"

The House Beautiful—Its Flower Garden and Grounds.

WILD ASTERS.

DESCRIPTION OF LOCAL SPECIES BY AN EXPERT.

By Ernest Braunton.

IN all the world there are about 300 species of asters, which, by the way, does not include the common garden aster, which belongs to the genus Callistephus. Our subjects are true asters and very closely allied to the garden sorts, all being worthy of a place in the front yard. The descriptions of our local species presented below were kindly given the writer by S. B. Parish of San Bernardino, who of all our botanists is probably best qualified to write of their various charms and peculiarities.

One of our showiest asters (A. tortifolius) is peculiar to the Mojave desert, where it grows on stony hills, or even in rocky crevices. The flower part of the stem is so woody that this species might almost be called a shrub, and, like most of the desert shrubs, it is rather an unsightly one. But it bears, each swaying on a long, slender stem, great flowers two inches in diameter, with bright, golden centers, and a circle of rays of an uncommon and very handsome shade of lilac. I have heard it called "Desert Daisy," but there are other desert flowers for which that name would be more appropriate, and a better name would be "Mojave aster." It is exceptional in the genus in its time of flowering, which is spring and early summer.

Anderson's aster (A. Andersoni) is equally beautiful, but in a different way, and its home is the very opposite of that of the desert species. It has really strayed to us from the northern Sierras, and the only place where I have seen it in Southern California is in the high valley of Tauquitz, in the San Jacinto Mountains. Here it stars wet sub-alpine meadows with its bright blossoms, each on its own stem of a span in height, just enough to lift it above the grasses amidst which it grows.

It almost seems a waste that such lovely flowers should bloom where so few eyes can be gladdened by them; but nature is lavish of beauty, and perhaps by these rewards seeks to stimulate the arduous study of her riches. And she has not neglected to provide in more accessible places, other asters, and very pleasing ones, although quite different from the rare beauties of desert and mountain.

There are three of these, more or less common in meadows or by streams. The flowers, which are borne in panicles, are individually very much alike in all three species. They are about half an inch in diameter, and vary from a bright blue-purple to nearly white, and vary as much in beauty, specimens with large and well-colored flowers being quite showy. They are, however, most readily distinguished by habit and foliage. Menzie's Aster (A. Menziesii) has roughish foliage, and seldom exceeds a foot in height, and its panicle is usually somewhat spike-like. It grows in rather dry adobe soils, in which its presence indicates the existence of a moderate amount of alkali.

The Western Aster (A. hesperius) is a strong growing plant of damper soils, meadows, stream banks and the borders of swamps. It is often six feet or more in height, has stiff, erect stems, terminated by a generous panicle of flowers; the leaves are long and narrow, and the whole plant is smooth.

The last is a common species in Southern California, but there is another, somewhat like it, that seems to be confined to the neighborhood of Pasadena and Los Angeles. This is Greata's Aster (A. Greatai). It attains as great a size as the other species, but the stems are not so stiff and erect, the leaves are broader and somewhat clasping at the base, and the herbage is slightly roughened. It is, perhaps, the handsomest species of the three.

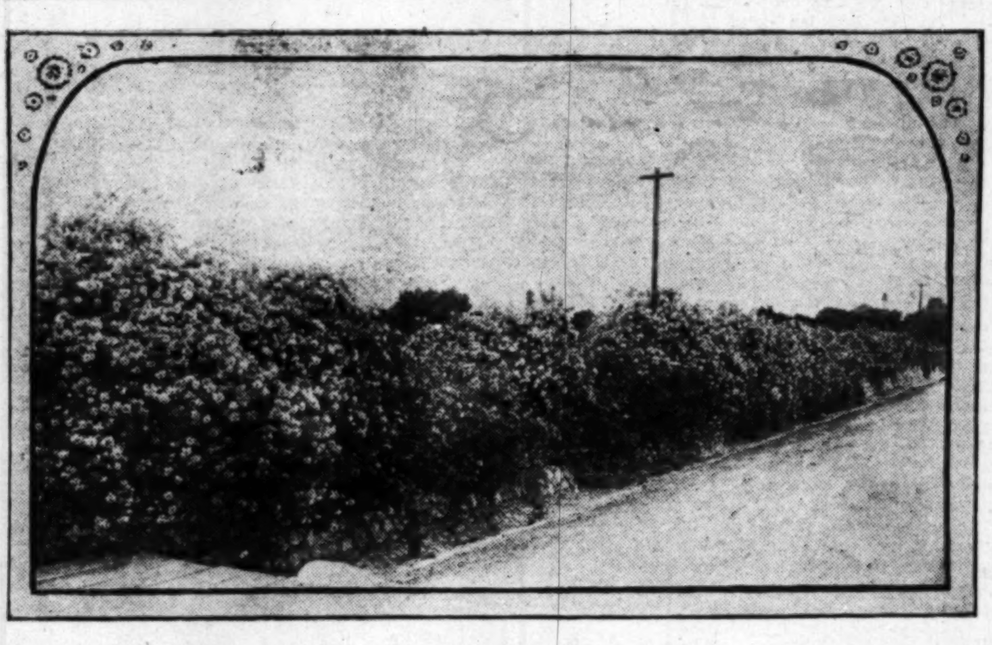
There is a weedy annual which is common in low grounds which has such small flowers as hardly to be taken for an aster, but their resemblance is apparent on close examination. Its slender, few-leafed stems have given it the name of "Slim Aster" (A. exilis).

We have four or five other asters, but they are so rarely to be met with that it is unnecessary to farther extend this article in order to notice them. Perhaps a pretty species that grows along streams in the higher mountains ought not to be omitted, as it may attract the attention of summer visitors. It is a foot or more in height, and has bright blue-purple flowers, and is a variety of Fremont's Aster (A. Fremonti.)

A Gold of Ophir Hedge.

Mrs. Charlotte Belle of Monrovia writes as follows:

The incoming traveler over the Santa Fe Railroad sees no prettier floral view than is afforded by the beautiful rose hedges that surround the home of Mrs. Alfred Ottoway, who lives on the corner of Buena Vista avenue in the little town of Duarte, twenty-two miles east of Los Angeles. Paralleling the tracks of the Santa Fé 150 feet is a trellis eleven feet high which blooms all the year. While the bleak, bare East in March yearns for spring's touch to start the sap running in the trees to bring out the earliest leaves, the blossoms of the Gold of Ophir hedge which borders Buena Vista avenue for 200 feet is furnishing wagonloads of roses for the general public. So thick is the bloom and the roses are of such magnificent shades of copper and gold that they seem iridescent in the sunlight. The vines run over a stone wall and mass solidly for eight feet in height and run over half that distance on the top of the stones. There is no lessening the number of flowers by cutting, it seemed, last spring, and the owner of the hedge dispensed them with a lavish hand upon every request.



GOLD OF OPHIR HEDGE, DUARTE, CAL.

I don't think the little lady knew how many roses a wagonload contained, but it made no difference to her how many she clipped. Her maxim was to give roses while they lasted, and as the blooming season of this rose is short compared to the season of other roses in California, she hurried to give them away. The camera cannot reproduce the hedge of roses with any justice to the view of March. The hedge that borders the Santa Fé track is of La Marque and Marie Henriette roses, and is notable for the individual perfection of the flowers and buds as well as their profusion. All the vines were planted five years ago, and have received most careful culture.

Budded Roses.

The only objection that can be raised to using budded or grafted roses is that in the hands of the beginner they are very apt to cut away the portion that they ought to save. For instance they notice a strong sprout coming up near the roots, and thinking it the same as the rest of the plant, will cut away the top and allow this to form the plant. As a result they get a worthless rose. When, however, this matter is clearly understood, it will be found that the budded or grafted roses are much superior to those on their own roots, and some of the weak varieties, which are not at all satisfactory on their own roots, will give good results when grown on some vigorous stock. A little care on the part of the beginner will soon make him sufficiently skilled so that he can tell the sprouts of the stock from the rose wood which he wishes to grow. If he buys his roses of a reputable firm he will not be apt to find any suckers springing up, for our best nurserymen "blind" their stock, that is, cut out all the buds so that the root part is dead so far as branching is concerned.

Arrangement of Flowers.

By the Japanese methods of flower arrangement you can hide a homely dish with the foliage belonging to the flowers themselves or other trailing vine-like forms.

It has been said, and justly so, that the Americans a too much in the habit of arranging their flowers i bunches, crowding as many of one kind into a vase a it will conveniently hold, forgetting that each individual bloom has a beauty of its own well worth showing. With us a bowl of roses is a soft mass of pi a bowl of phlox is also a mass of pink, only a tri more severe in contour; poppies make a tall bunch o redness, and geraniums a low bunch of similar hue.

How often is the grace of the sweet peas lost in th crowd of its fellows. The Japanese set us a better pattern, for they remember each flower has an intrins and peculiar loveliness that is a joy to the beholder; s the Japanese florist or artist or home decorator tak three peonies perhaps instead of a dozen or two, all th same length, and sets the three up in a vase at irregu heights, with plenty of the peony foliage attached t the flower stem to keep it in its natural position, w the result that he has, as you may have, a more gra ful, if somewhat novel, effect, where each separate blo shows its whole form and the fine detail of its ma petals.

Of course, we often want a good mass of color, a then our usual method is suitable, but take the exam of our mistreated pansies; most of the time you s several put closely together in a little vase, or all spr out even and flat in a shallow dish; the Flowery Kin dom artist, or his imitator, would undoubtedly gat such blossoms with a stem, bearing some of the folia and arrange them in a clear crystal cup, so that w might see each flower distinctly, its velvety colo thrown in relief by the dark green of the leaves. If y cannot spare any of the plant stem and leaves, use fi ferns or other soft green stuff.

School Gardens.

If a child has attended school regularly and has been able to care for his garden in the summer he has seen performed under his eyes a complete cycle in the vegetable life. Add to this the correlation with his other school studies, and the garden becomes a real part and a valuable part not only of his life, but of the life of the world.

In his arithmetic he can find the area of his own garden instead of an imaginary field; from his window box he can study a right angle; in his manual training class he makes the window box, the markers, and sometimes even the tools; in his geography he learns in what part of the country is grown the hemp, flax and grains, specimens of which he sees in his garden instead of one brought by the teacher; in the cooking class the girl cooks her own vegetables; in the language class the boys and girls write letters to the seedmen for catalogues or to the agricultural department for seeds, and keep diaries of what goes on in the garden. Thus the garden and all pertaining to it mean something. So many are its advantages that it seems to demand a place in the school.

Improvement Work.

The higher the culture the more harmony and beauty demanded by all the senses, and we are well into the century which will see the beautifying of cities, city gardens, country homes and villages with flowers brought to marvelous perfection. Flowers are within the reach of the poorest. A rich person may buy beautiful objects of art and hide them away in his house, but his flowers must grow in the sunshine, where we can all see them. They grow as finely for the cottage as the mansion. Nothing tells more quickly of refinement within the house than flowers outside it.

Village improvement work is one of the most beautiful thoughts of the day, and there is no end to the work it opens up. In small towns it may well take the place of the board of trade of the cities. It lies with the people themselves to say to what extent this improvement work shall go. In the midst of all a few may decline to join the work, and thus become an eyesore to the tireless little company of workers who have done so much for them.

The go-ahead, progressive part of the population of a district or town will withdraw one by one, leaving the lazy ones to their weedy streets and tumble-down fences, and the progressive element will welcome purchasers for the property of their less thrifty neighbors. Will it pay you to let your property deteriorate for the lack of a little exertion on your part? Not in this age.

The Green Ash for Streets.

The following letter has been received from a reader of these columns living in San Bernardino:

You presented a cut on page 17 of the Magazine edition of The Times of Sunday, September 30, representing "The Green Ash as a street tree eight years old," but, you made no comment on this beautiful, quick-growth tree, or gave any description of it, or how propagated, or how it can be obtained.

This tree is a native of Northern Mexico and Southern Arizona, and is propagated from the seed that ripens in October. I recognize the picture as one taken from a view at the northwest corner of the city park, in San Bernardino, it being the northwest corner of F and Sixth streets, the home of Dr. J. M. Hurley. These trees are now full of seeds that are falling with every gust of wind, and any person desiring to propagate this magnificent tree can obtain all the seed needed free of cost, by applying to Dr. Hurley, this city.

The United States government forestry agents have gathered each year, for some time, seeds of this tree, at this place, for the purpose of reforesting the mountain cañons in Southern California.

Co-operative Improvements Needed.

Activity among the citizens must be the keynote of efforts in all places, large or small, in order to make the most of surrounding advantages and to improve conditions; for just so soon as activity ceases, a place will surely retrograde, and many of the inhabitants, not recognizing their own responsibility, will move to a "live" town.

The smaller cities, towns and villages will need to attain results through different methods. Their location may preclude the possibility of phenomenal growth; but above all, the schools, churches, public buildings, public grounds, and homes can be kept in the best condition, so as to bring into the social and home-life of the residents content, even enjoyment, in their environment. These smaller places are fast becoming recognized as ideal for the true home life.

In order to accomplish this attractiveness, much personal effort is required. Individuals must assume responsibility, must feel that the general weal is their own concern, and that they must cultivate an interest in affairs pertaining to the well-being of their neighbors.

Etta: Nor you! You have the same red cheeks, the same bright eyes and the same hat!"—[Translated for Tales from Les Annales.

Poke of Possum Hill.

A MOUNTAIN DEAL IN WHEAT AND ITS RESULTS.

By a Special Contributor.

POKE HAMM was in no degree a prophet, but he had one of a prophet's disadvantages, being without honor in his own country. The distinction—or extinction—fell upon him like a comfortable blanket, even in the plodding days of his babyhood, and became clinched during his brief, spasmodic hours of somnolency in the schoolroom, and longer, more lingering hours upon the mountain side. And when he sauntered reluctantly into manhood, it was a sign manual that separated and marked him as one apart.

And yet energy was without premium on 'Possum Hill. A man could sit upon his own doorstep from daylight to dark, from Monday to Saturday, from the first to the thirty-first, and not lose caste. He could even smoke his corn-cob pipe while his wife and daughters gathered berries or calamus roots or chestnuts to sell, and still be a reputable Hiller in good standing. No, it was not that. Rather was it the unthrift of non-accumulation. As a baby he had gurgled his content with the world, even while his brothers and sisters were purloining and misusing his rag dolls and rude toys; in boyhood he had gone a step farther and turned over such belongings as unwittingly came to him to whoever expressed a desire for their possession, accentuating this in early manhood by even going out of his way to do things he would never have dreamed of doing for himself.

So his brothers and sisters, and the youth in general in the neighborhood, grew up and branched out into little shacks of their own, built in such natural wrinkles of the mountain side as promised immunity from wind or sun or shade, according to varying temperament; and their housekeeping beginnings of three chairs and a table and stove and bedstead accumulated to other bits of furniture inside, and perhaps to a cow and mule, and, in rare instances, two mules and "kerridge" outside. Hiller prosperity never aspired beyond two mules and buckboard "kerridge." But Poke remained the same, and by the time he was 25 his name was commonly spoken with a drawling prolongation that sought to express a double and sarcastic meaning.

But for all that, Poke was not so slow as their insinuations would convey, or his lack of material accumulations declare. He had neither a rood of land for a holding, nor a mule to back, nor a shack to share with some fair Diana of the mountain; but his old muzzle-loader brought in more game than the modern Winchesters of his associates, and there was no cabin raising, or shucking, or bee, or deer stalking, to which he was not the first invited, and where his broad shoulders, or deft fingers, or good-natured humor, or keen eyes, were not in eager demand. He was indefatigable in the service of another, and gave of his strength and knowledge with unstinted generosity; but there his industry faltered; for he had no need of these things for himself, so did not seek them.

One day he was engaged in his favorite occupation of watching white clouds drift across the blue disk of the sky, and to do it to the best advantage was lying upon his back on a bed of moss with his hands clasped behind his head. It was mid-October, and among the chestnut branches was a "chickareeing" and scampering of squirrels intent on their winter stores; and of kinglets and sparrows and thrushes deploying and forming for their journey to the south; and, farther away the "caw, cawing" of black sentinels patrolling the sky. An odor of autumn foliage was in the air, a rustling of falling leaves, a sense of complete isolation and content. And then she came.

He was hardly conscious of her intrusion at first, she fitted so well into it all, with her soft gray calico dress and chestnut-gold hair; and she, on her part, was not aware of his presence. The clinging moss rose half up about his form, and he was so motionless and entirely a part of the surroundings that a bird was chirping contentedly from the very toe of one of his great boots only flying a few feet away as she approached.

They were on the brow of a slope that dropped rapidly down into the valley, and she paused and threw her hand above her eyes with a quick motion which he recognized as expressing anxiety and hope. He could see her face plainly from where he lay, and could read in the glances which flashed from point to point something of the terror of their owner at not finding what she sought.

"What is hit, Miss Laurel?" he drawled, as, with a slow, muscular movement of his body, he threw himself upon his feet and moved forward to her side. "Can I be any he'p?"

"Oh! hit's you, Poke? Thank God! Hurry! hurry! Pap's knocked down by a tree an' bein' crushed. I couldn't lift hit."

"Where?" asked Poke tersely.

"To Coon Flat. He was choppin' a bee tree, an' hit fell 'fore he thought. Please, please do hurry!"

Poke nodded reassuringly. Coon Flat was three miles away by a circuitous path around craggy points, and up and down declivities, or one mile by going straight over the ridge and meeting a precipice by crawling out upon a branch for twenty feet and sliding down the tree trunk for thirty feet more. Poke wondered if Laurel had come by this route. But as he sprang up the slope he swung his hand toward the circuitous path, knowing full well as he did so, however, that the girl would do exactly as she pleased, for that was her way.

He had met Laurel occasionally during his rambles on this part of the slope, and thought her a remarkably plain-spoken, clear-headed girl, with none of the silly pranks and giggles which he commonly attributed to young women.

But matters feminine were of slow growth in Poke's unpracticed brain, and the sweet personality of the girl, as she stood there on the brow of the slope, gazing down at him with anxious, appealing eyes and flushed face, did not penetrate fully to his consciousness until he reached the very summit of the ridge. Then he stopped with a sudden, appreciative, "By Jock! wa'n't she purty!" ending with a lingering drawn-in whistle, this time intermitting with a chuckle; and the whistle and chuckle, translated, intimated that, were he thinking of setting up a shack of his own, this was the sort of girl—or queen—he would install within its sacred precincts. "An' I wouldn't keer a durn if her paw was the best fixed man roun' hyer," he chuckled, as he hitched his body along the branch toward the tree trunk. "I'd jes' go in to win. A gal like that's wuth fightin' fur—yes, an' dyin' fur." This time the chuckle preceded the whistle, and the whistle was blown out with a mournful quaver that declared he was not one of those who thought of setting up a shack of his own.

Coon Flat was the wonder and chagrin of all the mountain side, for was it not the climax of brazen industry? They all had their patches; but beside Coon Flat, these were as barren fields to a land of milk and honey. Jake, the father of Laurel—as he was called, in contradistinction to another Jake of the same name, who was father of Meg—grew potatoes that stood him from the October digging to the May planting; his onions and cabbages were always above family needs, and flowed over into envied sales for ready money; and, to cap it all, behind his cabin was a four-acre field that every fall showed green with sprouting shoots, and every spring grew heavy with swaying, golden-headed wheat. No wonder he had two mules and a buckboard "kerridge," a "peazzer" in front of his cabin, and a kitchen with real window-glass windows behind! And, no wonder he carried his head high as the mighty man of the Hillers, and looked askance at the valorous "pore trash" youth that dared to raise eyes to his daughter! But of Poke he had not even thought as an object of suspicion.

So now, after that stalwart youth had removed the heavy tree trunk from his body, and had lifted and borne him to his bed in the cabin as gently as a mother might her child, he welcomed with cordial gratitude the offer to remain and look after things until he could get out. Laurel was strong and willing; but her hands would be full in looking after him, and there were the mules to care for, and the dozens of pigs, and a cow to drive up from the valley and milk; and, besides, it was high time the four acres were again seeded, in order that there should be a succession to the sacks of golden grain which were now stored in the shed loft waiting for the higher quotations which rumor promised. Yes, a strong man was needed on the place; for Coon Flat, even in its splendor, was isolated. The nearest neighbor was too far away to be reached by even the report of his rifle. Poke entered upon his new work with unwonted energy. A great heap of wood was cut and piled near the back door, where it would be handy for Laurel; he brought water and fed the pigs, and in spite of her protests, insisted on doing the milking himself; and he brought out the big, unwieldy plow and swung it in behind the mules and went merrily around the four-acre lot in lessening parallelograms. And it may be that his energy and cheerfulness was in no whit diminished by the fact that he knew Laurel was always somewhere about the cabin, and that it was she who would prepare his meals, and sit with him at the table; and that in the evening he could be near the invalid, with whom she would talk.

He was not in love, of course. Such an absurdity did not even occur to him. It was the novelty of seeing a woman about that was pleasant. He had no sisters, and his mother had been long dead. It was just the novelty and the neatness and contentedness of it all he liked. And this idea, if his thoughts took such definite form, remained with him for a month—until the invalid began to hobble about on crutches—when suddenly the truth came home to him, as had her beauty that day on the ridge. He was clearing new land below the four-acre lot, when the shock straightened him up with a half-wondering, half-frightened "I'm one of 'em! Yes, sir! I'm—one of 'em!" Then his indrawn whistle began, and was blown out with a chuckle, and they, with the straightening up, were repeated every few minutes during the next hour. When he returned to the cabin, the half-frightened look had left his face, but the wonder still remained, and with it was an ecstatic diffidence that seemed strangely at variance with his usual bluff frankness.

Laurel noticed the change at once, and her face grew puzzled; but only for a little while. Then an odd twinkle of humor came into her eyes, as though she understood. And mingled with the humor was a tender, flickering light which had been gaining strength in her eyes these past few weeks, a light which Poke had not yet seen.

As he entered, Jake looked up with angry impatience, and Poke raised a hand defensively before his face; but the invalid was not thinking of that.

"Heered anything 'bout wheat today?" he grumbled. "Goin' down, of course."

"Goin' up," Poke answered promptly. "A man hollered to me from the aige o' the hill this mornin', an' said 'twas seventy."

"Seventy!" Jake grabbed his crutches and rose totteringly to his feet, but sank back with a snarl of mingled rage and pain. "Seventy cents! and I've got ninety bushels. Dum the ole back! By the time I'm out ag'in hit'll be down to fifty, like 'twas last year, an' that'll be a clean loss o' eighteen dollars. Blame hit all!"

"Cayn't I go, pap?" suggested Laurel.

The gloomy face cleared slightly, then lowered. He loved the profits of his industry, but not so much as he loved Laurel. It was thirty miles to Staunton.

"No, ye cayn't," he snarled.

There was a brief silence, then:

"Thar's Poke, pap. He's mighty strong an' willin'."

The face darkened, then grew lighter. Evidently the idea, at first scouted, was being tolerated. That meant Poke had been making giant strides forward during these few weeks.

"I—dunno," doubtfully.

Poke saw his opportunity, and rose to it like a man—like a man of industry. He was developing rapidly.

"I'll take hit down all right," he said confidently; "I've sold wheat to Staunton afore." He was thinking of two bushels he had once taken to market for his father, the proceeds of which he had lost on the way home. He did not mention the loss, however; but the thought of it made him hesitate in the face of this vast enterprise which involved ninety bushels.

"Wouldn't ye better wait a little?" he suggested weakly. "Signs seem to 'low wheat's still risin'. Maybe hit'll be wuth while to hol' back till ye're out."

Jake snorted.

"Thar's more fallin's than risin's in wheat," he snapped. I've found that out. I reckon ye'd better go; an' min' I want ye to git hit all down tomorrer."

Poke's head was whirling. But there was Laurel looking at him confidently, and her father already beginning to lose some of his newly-acquired confidence. He must brace up.

"All right," he said, as steadily as he could. "The mules can draw half on the long waggin; an' I'll borry Tom Stuart's mule an' Ike Brown's ole hoss, an' hitch 'em to Bill Coyner's hay waggon. That'll take the other half. Ike's boy Sam can drive ahind me so I can keep an eye on him. Oh, yes; we'll get on fust-rate."

Jake nodded approvingly; it was a good plan.

"Seventy cents," he admonished warningly; "try an' get hit."

After the wheat was loaded the next day, Poke entered the cabin for a few last instructions. Before leaving he contrived to draw Laurel into the back kitchen for a moment. There he was seized by a sudden inspiration.

"Say, Laurel," he began eagerly, "I—I—say, would ye min' me gettin' a ring to Staunton, a gol' ring, for you an' me?"

She looked at him quickly, understandingly, her face flushing. She could not remember a single one of her married acquaintances who had been given a gold ring.

"Why, no, I wouldn't min', Poke," she said simply. "I'll be real glad."

"An'—an' would ye min' speakin' to your paw 'bout hit while I'm gone, Laurel? Hit might be a good time now I'm a-totin' his wheat."

"No—no, I don't min'."

She watched him from the doorway until the heavy wagons rumbled out of sight. Then she went in to her father.

"Pap," she announced abruptly, "Poke's ast me to marry him."

"An' you?"

"I've said yes," composedly.

Jake controlled himself with a mighty effort. With Laurel he must be diplomatic.

"Wall, ye know bes'," he grimaced affably. "But ye know how 'tis with Poke. Ye'll have to wait till he's able to keep ye. I don't reckon he's saved enough to buy a runt pig yet."

But Laurel smiled to herself contentedly. People were easily mistaken, she thought, and were apt to be prejudiced. Was not Poke the best-natured and the best-looking man on the slope? And had he not promised her a gold ring out of the plentitude of his riches? So she said softly:

"I won't go ag'in ye, pap; don't ye fear. We'll wait till ye say yourself that Poke's able to keep me."

But curiously enough at that very moment Poke was wondering dismally how he would be able to combine the purchase of a gold ring with the 25 cents which represented the accumulation of his twenty-five years.

They expected to be back by the end of the third day; it was the afternoon of the sixth when he returned. When he dismissed young Sam, and attended to his mules, there was a look of beatific joy upon his face, which remained there until he opened the cabin door and saw the expectant face of Jake. Then he whitened and staggered to the nearest chair.

"You pore boy!" cried Laurel tenderly, "you're plumb beat out."

"Did ye get the 70 cents?" demanded Jake eagerly.

Poke gasped and tried to collect his thoughts. What was he here for? What did they want him to say? It was about the wheat, wasn't it? He had almost forgotten that unimportant matter after the gold ring had taken possession of his mind. He remembered the wheat had been taken to the storeroom of a big flouring mill, and that he had told a clerk he would be back later and attend to its sale; then he had hurried away in search of a job of hauling with the mules, and had carted [illegible] two days for $6, and had bought the gold ring. Yes, that was it; and he had given Sam the 25 cents to pay his fare to a cousin's at Fisherville, to get him out of the way for the two days. That was all—only he had forgotten to go back and sell the wheat.

"Did ye get the 70 cents?" demanded Jake for the second time.

Poke felt that it was a crisis with him, and he drew a long, hard breath. Then his gaze steadied.

"Ye see, hit's this way," he said, "signs are fur the risin', an' I ain't sol' yet. Ye mout jes' as well have 75 or 80 cents as fur anybody else. But I'll go down—" he was about to say "to onct," but restrained himself, for that might betray him; he added instead—"in a few days an' see how the risin's comin' on."

Under ordinary circumstances the invalid would not have controlled his astonishment and wrath; but this was an extraordinary opportunity, and Jake, the father of Laurel, was nothing if not diplomatic. So he forced himself into a semblance of composure.

"Wall, hit's your lookout, Poke," he said significantly. "I ordered ye to sell, an' of course I'll hol' ye responsible for all fallin's from the 70 cents. Min' that!"

It was a very miserable Poke that went out to attend to the evening chores. He had half a mind to run away to Staunton to remedy the evil before it g worse. He imagined all sorts of fallings, to 60 cents, perhaps 40; to a life of toil spent in atoning for carelessness; to the probable loss of Laurel. But stuck it out until the third morning; then he left cabin with steady, confident strides, which, howev changed to frantic haste as soon as he was beyond vi of Laurel in the doorway.

But the mills of the gods sometimes turn out accountable grist. Every moment since Poke had be told from the hill that wheat was "goin' up," the mi of the Chicago pit had been grinding out good flour his chaff; the West had been scoured, the markets the world invoked, and the many-tongued lines of te graph brought into the game. Going straight to Jake, the father of Laurel, handed him a roll of bills.

"The risin' was even better than I 'lowed on," he sa nonchalantly. "I sol' for a dollar. Ye see, thar w signs o' breakin', an' I 'lowed I better not hol' in an longer."

There were varying signs of wonder, chagrin, incre ulity and satisfaction; but the mingling of them a which gathered on Jake's face was of the kind tha cannot be put into words. He gazed at the money; a Laurel, smiling a few feet away; and bowed his head i surrender.

OLD EGYPT UNEARTHED.

THE TOWN OF THE SHEPHERD KINGS DUG FROM SANDS OF MANY CENTURIES.

[London Graphic:] At University College this year the annual exhibition of the year's work that has been done in Egypt by the British School of Archaeology and the Egyptian Research Account has very wisely been so subdivided as to present distinct foci of interest, so that the intelligent visitor, in surveying the tokens which Prof. Petrie and Mr. Duncan and Mr. Gilbert Smith have brought home, is conscious of the meaning and the implications of the discoveries. The exhibits are elucidated by plans and models; and the rather formal and concentrated descriptions offered by the published reports are supplemented each day by little lectures, which are delivered in the morning and afternoon by some one or other of the archaeologists. Last year the chief work of the British school was along the eastern side of the delta between Cairo and Ismailia; and it has brought to light, after many centuries, the habitations of the ancient shepherd kings of the Israelites, the Hyksos and one of the cities that they built. At Tell-el-Yehudiyer the excavations laid bare a great camp which is certainly older than the eighteenth dynasty and enshrines within its confines many graves and tombs which are of the period of these shepherd kings of Israel, who ruled 2500 years before the coming of Christ. The defenses of the camp, not unlike a great "fonduk," such as now exists in the Sahara as a refuge for traveling caravans, were chiefly earthworks; and it is evident that its dwellers relied on their archers and slingers to keep off the enemy on the long "glacis" of the approaches to the walls. But the camp reveals that the relations between Israel and Egypt were not always such as have been supposed; that time brought its revenges, and that a great wall was built round the camp by the skilled masons of Egypt—a wall of finest limestone, in blocks brought from the hills twenty-five miles away. Truly, when one contemplates this link of continuity of labor between the pyramids and the Assouan Dam, one begins to sympathize with the Egyptians as a race who have never been allowed to cease from their building. A very interesting model of this primeval camp is among the exhibits. Not less fascinating is a piece of temple sculpture representing Rameses II slaying a Syrian before the god Atmu. Beyond, beyond the mountain line,
The gray stone and the boulder,
Beyond the growth of dark green pine,
That crowns its western shoulder,
There lies that fairyland of mine,
Unseen of a beholder.

Its fruits are all like rubies rare;
Its streams are clear as glasses;
There golden castles hang in air,
And purple grapes in masses,
And noble knights and ladies fair
Come riding down the passes.

Ah me! they say if I could stand
Upon those mountain ledges,
I should but see on either hand
Plain fields and dusty hedges;
And yet I know my fairyland
Lies somewhere o'er their edges.

The Ryan Family.

HAS ITS PATRIOTS, STATESMEN, DIPLOMATS, AUTHORS, POETS.

By a Special Contributor.

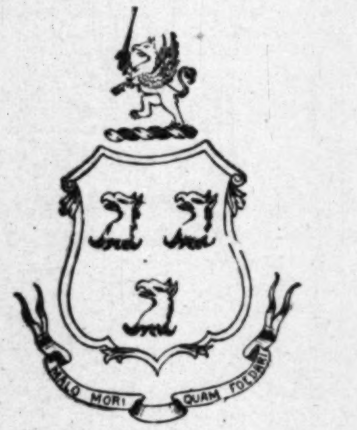
THE first mention we have in history of the Ryan family is in 1170, when we read of Ryan, Prince of Idrone, who was slain by Raymond le Gros, avant-courier of Strongbow.

The Ryans for centuries were called Lords of Idrone, in County Carlow.

The family has always been noted for its learning, and numbers many authors, poets and prelates. "Poems, Patriotic, Religious and Miscellaneous" of Abram Joseph Ryan, have had great vogue, for they came "warm from the heart." William Thomas Ryan is known as an author under the name of Carroll Ryan; "Picture Poems" is the title of one of his books of verse.

The family has an astronomer in Sir Edward Ryan, who was knighted in 1826, and appointed Chief Justice of Bengal. His acquaintance with Herschel led him to join the Royal Astronomical Society. After his return from India to England he was a Privy Councilor, and served as assistant Controller of the Exchequer. He is noted for the sagacity and rare tact which he always displayed.

Lacy Ryan was an actor whom Garrick, in his early and saucy mimicries, derided on the stage, but whose excellent acting he in after years applauded, and in the part of Richard III. He found much by which he profited and improved his own impersonation.



Ryan

The family has another actor, in Richard Ryan, born in London in the eighteenth century; its dramatic and musical critic in Desmond Ryan, whose "Christopher Among the Mountains," was a clever satire upon Prof. Wilson's criticism of the last canto of "Childe Harold." Ryan wrote the libretto of Macfarren's "Charles II," and the words of a large number of songs, and he also fitted old melodies with new words.

Daniel Frederick Ryan, born 1762, was an Irish loyalist, who lost his life when arresting Lord Edward Fitzgerald. His son, Daniel Ryan, became a barrister, and found a patron in Sir Robert Peel.

The statesman, legislator and diplomat of the American branch of the family was Thomas Ryan, United States Minister to Mexico, and afterward Assistant Secretary of the Interior.

Two pioneers were William Redwood Ryan, born in England, and Edward Ryan. The former was a writer, who lived in California, about sixty years ago, and whose works give many interesting details of the early days of that State. Edward Ryan made a home in Wisconsin, and was a prominent jurist.

Another pioneer was John Ryan, who with his wife, Elizabeth, and children settled at Stanwich, Conn. Col. William Ryan was their eldest son.

The family has been prominent in South Carolina since earliest days.

Revolutionary rosters give the names of Capt. Michael Ryan, of Pennsylvania, and after the war Inspector-General of Pennsylvania; and Lieut. William Ryan of Massachusetts.

One of the most scientific navigators of the United States Navy was Lieut. George Parker Ryan. He was organizer of one party for observation of the transit of Venus in 1872.

The arms reproduced is emblazoned by Burke as follows: Gules, three griffins' heads, erased, or.

Crest, a griffin segreant azure, holding a sword erect proper.

Motton, "Malo Mori Quam Foedari" ("Death Rather than Disgrace").

The colors gules and azure in heraldry signify, the former courage, bravery, military fortitude and magnanimity; the latter loyalty, truth, integrity. The metal or (gold) denotes generosity and elevation of mind.

The chimerical beast, the griffin, with the body of a lion, and head, wings and talons of an eagle, is as old as the time of the Phoenicians, and has always been considered one of the principal bearings in heraldry. It signifies valor, magnanimity and vigilance, and one who dares all dangers, even death itself, rather than become a captive.

The sword points to a crusader ancestor, and is an emblem of military honor, and should incite the bearer to a just and generous pursuit of honor and virtue.

The term "segreant" is applied to a griffin when erect, with wings indorsed, or placed back to back.

ANIMAL TRAINING.

TEACHING AN ELEPHANT TO TELEPHONE AND BOWL—TRUNK WORK MOST DIFFICULT.

Elephant trainers are ever on the lookout for new tricks to teach their beasts, says A. W. Rolker in the course of an interesting article in Appleton's for October. Just now it is the fashion to show "trunk work," the most difficult of tricks taught by the trainer. This is not because of the elephant's awkwardness, but because this sort of trick is entirely foreign to the animal. Another drawback to the teaching of trunk tricks is that the elephant does not begin to realize how almightily powerful he is.

Tom, one of the Luna Park herd, is a three-fourths-grown young tusker of ideal proportions, and a remarkably knowing, affectionate beast weighing 3800 pounds. With his mates, Jennie, Queenie and Fannie, he comes lumbering onto the stage and after the usual preliminaries walks to the corner of the platform, where stands a big telephone box mounted on a substantial tripod. So perfectly is this elephant broken that he works by cues imperceptible to the audience. The trainer merely raises his shoulder and the young bull strides toward the telephone box, turns the crank ringing the bell, picks up the receiver in his long trunk, and holds it to his great flap ear. Then he hangs it up with the suddenness of disgust, rings the bell a second time, and again holds the receiver to his ear while he listens with the sage, bland expression which only an elephant can assume. When finished he hangs up the receiver and "rings off."

For something like two minutes this performance last. Yet it required a month of steady hard work to break the elephant into this simple, ludicrous trick. More than two thousand times, actual count, Barlow had to grasp Tom's trunk, apply it to the bell crank, and teach the circular motion of ringing the bell, by leading the trunk just as you might lead the hand of a young child when teaching it to wind a music box. More than a thousand times the trainer had to lead the tip of the big trunk to the receiver of the telephone to teach the beast to holr it to his ear and hang it accurately back on its hook. And when these details were mastered it took more than five hundred trials to teach the succession of winding the crank and listening before Tom understood and knew enough to twist the crank without breaking it into halves at every contact.

Another apparently simple trick requiring untold physical labor on the part of the trainer is that of Queenie in her bowling turn. The young cow, with tidy ruffles about neck and each ponderous ankle, is stationed thirty feet from a set of tenpins. She curls the tip of her trunk about a bowling ball, glares at her target as if taking careful measure, and with a single upward toss of her head and a throwing forward of the trunk sends the ball like a stone out of a catupult straight at the pins. Then, to complete the remarkable performance, she picks up a stick of chalk big around as a policeman's club and marks her score on a blackboard, making a single stroke for each pin downed, beginning to mark when given a cue and continuing until the following cue, which means "stop."

No one that has not actually witnessed the teaching of this trick can imagine the ceaseless patience and perseverance required to perfect the performer. More than fourteen lessons of two hours each were necessary to get Queenie to hold the ball not as she herself wanted to hold it, with trunk curled sidewise, but as the trainer wanted her to hold it, with tip undercurled. Then, almost three thousand times the trainer had to take the trunk actually in his hands, swing forward with force enough to hurl the ball, an assistant receiving it and rolling it back, while each time Barlow again had to grasp the trunk to teach the cow to gather up the ball when it was rolled toward her. To teach Queenie to mark her score it was only necessary to guide the trunk into making vertical lines against a blackboard held by a "super," the chief difficulty consisting in getting the animal to obey the cues when to start and when to stop.

Other tricks and their manner of teaching are described with picturesque detail in this article in Appleton's, and enough is told to give an understanding of how the elephant trainer may teach any kind of trick to his remarkable pupil, next to man the most intelligent, the most affectionate friend and the most vindictive enemy under heaven.

SOME BIG TUNNELS.

The completion of the Simplon tunnel, twelve and a quarter miles in length, at a cost of £3,100,000, and at an average rate of two miles a year, has induced Mr. Lewis M. Haupt to publish in the Journal of the Franklin Institute some comparative notes on other great tunnels. The Hoosac tunnel, in Massachusetts, five miles in length, was begun in 1854 and completed in 1876, with an average progress of 5.5 feet per day. The Mont Cenis tunnel, eight miles in length, was begun in 1857 and completed in 1871, with an average progress of eight feet per day. The Sutro tunnel, in Nevada, four miles in length, was begun in 1869 and completed in 1878, with an average progress of 10.24 feet per day. The St. Gotthard tunnel 1872-81—nine and a quarter miles in length, was driven at the rate of 14.6 feet per day. The Arlberg tunnel—1880-1884—6.38 miles in length, was driven at the rate of 27.8 feet per day.—[London Engineer.

Missionaries in Sudan.

One of Them Writes of Cruel Native Habits.

Correspondence London Standard.

THE natives here were much afraid of elephants, though, as a rule, they can easily escape their rush by dodging round a bush or getting down wind from the beast, who can smell better than see; yet they say that after the rains, when the grass is long, the elephants lie in wait near the paths, snap them up with their trunks, and, throwing them on the ground, trample them underfoot. When some one of the party who had been in the country before, laughed in unbelief, the chief was rather annoyed, and said, "Look at this man; his father was killed last year—that man's brother, too; this man's son," and so on. As there was no gainsaying this, the interpreter of the party remarked that it might be dangerous for the missionaries in the time of the long grass to move away from the river. "Oh, no," replied the chief, "when you go out you will be perfectly safe, for I will go with you." This remark was a little resented by the interpreter, who assured the chief they had no fear of elephants, having rifles. But the chief explained his method of preserving a whole skin for himself and the missionaries by saying: "When I go out in the long grass I always send two or three old women in front. When they scream, I run back." This clever method was, to say the least of it, rather a shock to the missionary band, and when, in anxious tones, the interpreter asked: "Are they ever killed?" this unsophisticated naked heathen answered: "Who cares; they are only old women; they are no use."

I really think it would do some critics of missions much good if they would come out and study the native simplicity of these wild people on the spot.

A globe trotter, passing by in a boat; or a sportsman, merely on the track for game; or a very young soldier man, who has never thought seriously for ten minutes on the meaning of Christianity, comes home and talks glibly on the uselessness of missionaries and the charming manners of these simple children of nature.

The strongest of all the Nile tribes in the upper Nile have a charming manner of flaying alive their enemies; this has been done within the last seven years. Two Englishmen, paying a peaceful visit to this tribe, about four years ago, escaped almost by a miracle from death by the same "charming manner."

It was not long before the doctor of the mission had some experience with this native cruelty. He was attending a poor old woman, too weak to leave her hut, who showed signs of improvement after treatment. On going to the hut with the medicine, he was much surprised to find a man in the hut forbid admission. Being a hefty Christian, the doctor made a show of determination to save the woman, at which the men rose up and barred the way with their spears. After expressing himself as strongly as possible in the Dinka language, he left the medicine near the hut and went away. When he went next day they said she had died, and that they had thrown the body in the river.

It has often been said that mankind everywhere has some idea of life after death; but a branch of the Bari tribe, which inhabits the country south of Darpug, seems to be an exception to this.

Native Customs.

In marching along the river bank north of Mongalla, two of the party came to a small fishing village where the people seemed to be of a low organism. Questioned as to what happened to them after death: "We throw them into the river." "Ah, but after that?" "The crocodiles are many." "But then; what can happen after crocodiles?" Laughter. Yet they did have an idea that there were spirits, most of them evil, but they were not sure whether these were the spirits of the departed.

When the camp was arranged, and there was breathing time enough to look round and see the kind of place in which they had cast anchor, the missionaries found themselves in the midst of a very scanty population (only a hundred and fifty within a radius of eight miles).

This was disappointing, but what troubled them more were the myriads of malaria-breeding mosquitoes which infested the camp. The outlook was not promising for six healthy young Englishmen—not much scope for work by day and worried by mosquitoes by night. Two of the older hands at the work determined to march inland and spy out the land, and after six days' journey they came back like Joshua and Caleb, with an excellent report. Thirteen miles inland they found a high plateau, about 150 feet above the river level, where they saw thousands of Dinkas, with large herds of fine cattle and miles of cultivated ground, and, best of all, no mosquitoes. They received a great welcome from the people, who, though stark naked and simple in their ways, perfectly understood the difference between the Turks and the English. In fact, three British officers at different times had visited them, and impressed these people by their justice and kindness, and these had told them that some day white men would come and tell them of the white man's God. The doctor was much in request, crowds of people attending him at every stopping place, bringing their sick and maimed. It was pathetic to see what confidence they had in the doctor almost from the first, the chief reason being that the doctor had some eighteen years' of experience with Africans, and knew how to deal with them. There were a few drawbacks, one of which was the scarcity of water. Having no idea of wells, the native resorted to the primitive and simple method of forming huge pools of rainwater and scooping out the clay as the water became exhausted. The pools were hedged in by thorn bushes to keep out the cattle, but the Dinkas themselves perform their ablutions in these reservoirs. It was rather disconcerting to be hailed in a most friendly way by a Dinka splashing about enjoying a bath in what you knew to be your only supply for drinking and making tea. But Joshua and Caleb declared they grew quite used to the taste of Dinka and water.

The Sacred Spear.

In their wanderings they had found out something of the religion of the people, which was most interesting. In a hut especially set apart there is a spear which the natives declare came down from the clouds in a thunderstorm many years ago.

The people stand in great awe and dread of this spear; only two people are allowed to go near—the chief, Beor, and the "luol," which, in the Dinka language, means a "speaker." These two only can interpret the messages of the sacred spear. In times of danger from raids or drought or disease or cattle plague the "luol" seeks counsel of the sacred spear. From what the "luol" himself said, he evidently goes into a kind of trance, and during this trance his utterances are the messages of heaven through this sacred medium.

The luol, or priest of the sacred spear, promised to ask and declare the counsel of the spear concerning the visit of the missionaries on a certain night. In the fitful light of a wood fire, the chief and his warriors sat round the missionaries awaiting the promised revelation; but, to the disappointment of all and the anger of the chief, the priest failed to put in an appearance, either through dread of detectives of his fraud or fear of the white man.

A message arrived late, pleading illness as an excuse.

The report on the country inland and east of Bor decided a most important question. The river station was to be the jumping board for the interior, a place where stores and goods were to be landed for work inland. This has become an accomplished fact by this time. Humanly speaking, this move is answerable for the wonderful health of the missionaries in what has been considered a most unhealthy part of the Sudan.

The continual change from river bank to high ground—the splendid scope for continuous effort—the freedom from the dreaded mosquito, have all combined to keep the men fit in body and soul.

One great difficulty at the commencement of any work amongst these black races is the lack of labor.

Traders in some places have brought alcohol, and created a craving, pointing to the work they want done with one hand, while in the other they hold up as an inducement the whisky bottle. Governments have sometimes forced labor-producing effort by the lash of the whip—although the latter plan is infinitely superior to the former, they are both bad—demoralizing and weakening that which is the most important factor in creating character, and that is will power.

From time immemorial this particular savage, the Dinka, has been idle. He carries a spear and a club, and now and then he will exert himself in hunting or war. Besides this he looks after his cattle, or scrapes the surface of the ground with a curious-shaped wooden hoe, and scatters a few seeds (the extraordinary fertility of the soil produces plenteous results.) For the rest, he usually stands on an ant-hill with a spear in one hand, placing the sole of one foot into the knee of the other leg. Whether he has learned this from the long-legged solitary stork, which stands all day in the shallow marshes, or whether the stork has learned it from the man, is not known—their attitude is very much the same.

The women are the real workers, doing all the building, the thatching, even cutting down the grass. The doctor from Uganda fortunately brought with him some Baganda carriers, or we should never have been able to leave the river. When the Dinkas saw other beings not women carrying loads, they were prevailed upon to carry (a prospect of meat also attracting them;) although there was much grumbling and quarreling every morning over the ridiculously small loads. On their return after six days' carrying we paid each man his wages in beads and cloth. Their joy was unbounded. They performed a weird sort of war-dance, with beads and cloth instead of spears and clubs, to celebrate the earning of their first wage.

Labor Difficulties.

However, it was one thing to carry small loads for a few hours every day with the excitement of seeing game shot and helping in the stalk, but it was quite another thing to take on a job of work which meant digging and hewing and carrying for hours every day. It was my work one morning to act as interpreter between the chief and our up-to-date technical man. Eight men were needed to work on the mission station. This was the first attempt at getting the natives to work. There they were, eight stalwart, naked natives standing before us.

The employer entered all the names (such break-jaw names) in a large business-like looking book. Terms explained, working hours, weekly payment, wages in kind, etc. The work was not hard, merely clearing the ground preparatory to the erection of huts.

All seemed to start working most vigorously. Ten minutes after, employer in difficulties, interpreter called. There were the laborers walking at a snail's pace, each giant carrying a small twig a few ounces in weight. The interpreter, pleading with the employer for patience, proceeded to show the workmen how to cut down a barassos palm. At the first attempt a Dinka, missing the palm, struck his shin, rolled on the ground in great distress, while his friends laughed and shook their heads, saying, "No good."

Persuaded to go on working: not a quarter of an hour passed before the interpreter was called out again.

The disappointed employer, trying his best to exercise Christian patience, pointed out his men standing idle. "They have stopped work again." When asked to explain, the men pointed to the sun, saying, "It is hot now; surely time to rest?"

After much difficulty, through the medium of the chief, they were told plainly, "No work, no wages." With much patient persuasion, they condescended to try again. This time they did their record shift, and actually worked for twenty minutes.

When the interpreter was called again by the technical missionary, who was now almost tearing his hair to find out why they had struck work, he was told the laborers had already formed a union, and refused to work until they had their wages first!

Pity the sorrows of an industrial missionary among the dark-browed savages of Africa.

Rudyard Kipling draws the picture clearly:

> "To wait in heavy harness,
> On fluttered folk and wild,
> Your new caught sullen peoples,
> Half devil—half child."

After all is said and done, it is the doctor who takes the lead at the start in missionary work. He heals the wound and "puts the pain to sleep," as the natives say. He sets the bone, and makes the maimed a [illegible] He takes the dread terror from the natives' eyes; he stems the spread of the serpent's sting and [illegible] the scorpion's bite. Those counted dead he brings [illegible] health and strength. When others have to wait [illegible] before they begin their work, and must learn the language first, the doctor wins their confidence straight off. As they feel their sickness go and their pain relieved, they understand more than volumes of words can tell them, "This man is our friend." Before [illegible] time was up the doctor had scored heavily, and brought the mission a great name, and gained the affection of the natives to a remarkable degree.

An Operation Performed.

A tiny girl of about four years was brought into camp by her father. He pointed out a large lump on the neck which the doctors decided could easily be removed. As far as possible an operation under chloroform was explained; the child was to be sent to sleep while that bad, evil lump should be removed, and in a few days the child would be quite well again. After a long consultation with his friends the father asked whether a certain number of his friends should be allowed in the room. His request being granted, the operation was performed in the large room on the [illegible] in the presence of the chief and the leading men of the village. Along the bank there was great excitement. At the windows of the boat, like huge blackberries, were clustered masses of black heads. Now and then they were shouting what they saw to those in [illegible] suspense and agitation on the bank.

Now the child was asleep, and the father thinks it [illegible] dead, and has to be restrained from interfering [illegible] the operation is being performed. Now the operation is over, the wound cleaned, and the neck bandaged, and the child has come to life and sits up. Presently the parent, with his little child cross-legged on his shoulder, emerges from the boat with the rank and fashion of the village close behind, and the [illegible] company fall in behind as they march to their village, such a chattering and jabbering crowd!

Wonder and surprise is written on every face as they turn round now and then to look at the missionaries who have done to them so great a miracle. For [illegible] months the missionaries have been at work among the Dinkas. Though not much can be expected in so [illegible] a time, yet, as far as can be judged by the confidence of the natives, or their readiness to help and their willingness to learn, things look hopeful.

The doctor always has his hands full. The farmer has a garden on the bank, where he is finding out what [illegible] vegetables, etc., will grow. The industrial missionary, with others, is studying the best kind of permanent house to build, the meanwhile erecting temporary dwellings, after the native style.

The clergy have already printed their first little book in Dinka, containing an alphabet, a few rules of grammar, and the Lord's Prayer.

When farewells had been said, and the boat that was to take me north, rushing down stream, went round a bend which shut out the mission station [illegible] my heart was glad indeed. It was mine to [illegible] know that nineteen centuries of years had not [illegible] the power and influence of Christ; that the call to service was heard clearly amidst the conflicting [illegible] of modern life; that when it comes, some of the best of the breed spring up, flinging away all else the world can offer, obey the command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."

ALL KINDS OF OATHS.

The witness in the adulterated food case, in taking the oath, placed the thumb of one hand [illegible] over the forefinger of the other, and muttered some unintelligible jargon.

"He is a Spaniard," said the crier. "Spaniards always take the oath like that. With thumb and forefinger they make a cross, murmuring: "By this cross I swear to tell the truth.' Now let us hope the don will [illegible] who really sold him those fruit syrups made of [illegible] alcohol, aniline dye, saccharin and citric acid.

"All kinds of queer oaths are taken here," the crier resumed. "A Chinaman will break a plate, put out a candle, or cut off a chicken's head. And even [illegible] that he will lie when hard pushed.

"I once saw a Ceylonese witness swear on a tiger [illegible] and a lizard skin. He said that if he lied in his testimony he prayed to be eaten by a tiger, and to be covered with scales, like a lizard. Then the lawyers [illegible] hold of him, and the things he said would have scandalized Ananias."

Simplifying Grammar.

Reflections Growing Out of the New Spelling Reform.

Andrew Lang in London Post.

THE existence of good fairies of finance like Mr Andrew Carnegie naturally tends to stimulate th growth of schemes of benevolence. If the fairy o the fairy's favorite did not possess the inexhaustibl purse of Fortunatus the philanthropic scheme for simplifying spelling could not go forward, because it coul not be financed. Whatever else there is in the simplification of spelling there is certainly no money in it. The ordinary capitalist, who, like the pirate, is "rather a beast than otherwise," finds no outlet for his dollars in a plan of spelling reform. With that excellent Scottish fairy Mr. Carnegie, it is otherwise. He pities the sorrows of persons who cannot take the trouble to master the wayward and difficult art of spelling, and finances the philanthropic enterprise of Prof. Brander Matthews, Mr. Roosevelt (I spell the name in the simplest terms), and other scholars.

Like Mr. Carnegie, I am benevolent and good, but only in my heart, for I have not the purse of Fortunatus. Surveying mankind and its environments, I see many things which I would instantly finance if I had the dollars. For example, there is the archaeological exploration of Colophon and other early Ionian colonial sites in Asia Minor. Without being financed that exploration remains a dream unfulfilled. In the same way I would found chairs of aboriginal philology in all the universities of Australia, thus supplying a deeply-felt want. It is improbable that any good financial fairy will extend a magic wand over disinherited adventures like these, but such a kind enchanter might at least finance the Simplification of Grammar.

Anglo-American grammar is still complex, though, thanks to the practical qualities of the race, it is comparatively simple. Our forefathers, unaided by any capitalist, dropped such things as the dual number, the optative mood, particles at large, perfects in Ka, and almost all inflections. We still say "oxen," not "oxes," though if money enough be shelled forth we may either say "oxes" for "oxen" or "boxen" in place of "boxes." The subjunctive after "if" "is going, to let it go," but it might go more rapidly if Mr. Carnegie, the professor, and the President combined, with the assistance of an able staff of philologists, to stamp out the feebly-glowing embers of the subjunctive. Again, all plurals are complex. We say as a rule "those men," but some living Scots still say "that men," and this simplicity was current among Highland letter writers of the eighteenth century. I may give as an instance Mr. Hugh Macdonald of Balishair, in North Uist. A scheme properly financed for the simplifying of grammar might get rid of "these" and "those" and many other pedantic complications.

In reading modern literature one remarks that the old grammatical pedantries connected with "thou" are going out of use. Poets and novelists say, for example, "thou are the man," and, without financial support from the benevolent or the chief magistrate, they take many similar liberties. A mother and a poet in one of Thackeray's tales thus addresses her slumbering infant:

> How beautiful, how beautiful, thou seemest
> My boy, my darling one, my sleeping babe!

She then wished to add something about "thine eye which gleamest," but, oh, cruelty! she was not quite sure that "thine eye which gleamest" is grammar. Moreover, she could think of no rhyme for "babe" but "Tippoo Saib," and the wings of her fancy drooped, her inspiration died. Now, by simplifying grammar she could have written "thou seems," and got in "thine eye which gleams." Again, why stop short in a benevolent career: why simplify spelling and grammar only? Why not simplify rhyme? Our ancestors long ago used assonance, not rhyme, and for "babe" they found a satisfactory assonance in "gave," "shave," "flame," "age," or any word in which "a" sounded as in "babe." Let Mr. Carnegie finance a scheme for the restoration of assonance in place of rhyme; then poetry will become an easy and a common thing; every mother will be a poet in fact, as well as in intention and sentiment.

No doubt the other arts may be simplified in the same way. How easy and pleasant will be the teaching of art when drawing goes for nothing and color does not count! Already we see that simple children will paint a man with a blue face and design a green cow in a meadow of crimson lake. It is in this direction that reformers of the arts should work, and benevolent capitalists can advance the movement by purchasing pictures executed on these principles by les primitifs of the nursery and the kindergarten.

But perhaps I am going too far and too fast in applying the principles of the President, the Professor, and the fairy financier to all the arts at once. The principle clearly is that the artist may make anything trumps that he pleases. In old-fashioned whist he may not do this: in modern bridge (if my information be correct) he may. In spelling let him put "ceems" for "seems," in song let him rhyme "babe" to "cascade," in grammar let him give "oxes" for "oxen," in marksmanship let an outer count as a bullseye, and so on.

My principles have already been adopted by a poet, Mr. James Lumsden, in his "Edinburgh and Country Croonings" (Macdonald & Co., Edinburgh, 1905). I open the volume at page 231 and find "squirrel" rhyming to "world," which, for the sake of simplicity, is spelled "warl'." "Vault" also rhymes to "thunderbolt;" here is a singer who greatly dares, without state encouragement!

"Vault" also rhymes to "thunderbolt;" this is a singer who greatly dares, without state encouragement!

Let me quote at least part of an ode to that angel of liberty the great Scottish reformer

JOHN KNOX.

> Like lion-fronted isle sublime
> That sheer from ocean seek'st the sky
> Above the leveled waste of Time
> Thy record towerest huge, and high
> Between this light and yon dark past,
> An adamantine barrier cast!

Here all, as Milton recommends, is simple. Addressing Knox, and having "thou" present to his subconscious self, the poet boldly transfers the grammar appropriate to "thou" to things in general. The isle "seek'st the sky," the record "towerest." This is unusual, but is of a noble simplicity. For breadth of handling this grammar has never been excelled and rarely equaled. What follows is "dark with excess of light"—

> And as such isle, sun rising east
> Hangs in his Orient o'er the sea,
> Art thou, o'er all time set amidst
> The gratitude of all the free! . . .

Here "east" rhymes to "amidst," and Mr. Knox is at once over and amidst the ocean, owing to the polarization of light perhaps—> and evermore

> A glowing orb amid the gloir.

"Glory" becomes "gloir" in an impulsively simple effort to rhyme to "evermore." Thus, in place of saying that

> Sunset fades in glory

one might put it that

> Sunset fades in gloir
> Above the Bay of Tobermoir.

With equal simplicity did Knox himself win "the gratitude of all the free" by insisting that nobody should be a Catholic except on pain of death. He thus simplified religion, as his admirers simplified grammar and rhyme. Following this example we may go far on the track of freedom.

JELLYFISHES OF THE CHANNEL ISLANDS.

It would doubtless be a surprise to many a gatherer of pretty sea mosses to be told that animal life formed an important part of their collection.

It is true, however, that although the "weeds" suggest only vegetable life, the microscope will show many living in little cups set along branches in a manner resembling real sea mosses.

These hydroids, as they are called, exemplify all the division of labor found in animal societies on land; there are certain ones to obtain food; others are reproductive creatures and, at maturity, liberate small jellyfishes. They live a real communal life. Through the trunk and branches of the "tree" runs a "life line" connecting the whole into one.

Those polyps that gather food are provided with tentacles with which to seek it out. The reproductive polyps are long, cylindrical and covered. When matured, the cover bursts, and the little jellyfish are seen to be piled up like dishes, one upon another.

Inside the watery "bell," which is alive, the tiny creatures possess a stomach with a four-cornered mouth at its free end.

From the attached end of the stomach four tubes diverge and run through the creature into a circular canal which extends around the edge of the umbrella.

All this can be clearly seen in any small jellyfish, and constitutes the organization that so often excites all sorts of questions when one is picked up on the beach.

No further development is reached, as the jellyfish is at this stage mature. Remember, however, that you are at present considering the small jellyfishes, those which never come to be large ones.

It is a remarkable fact that medusae (jellyfishes) are thrown off from the reproductive buds of hydroids, but such is the case. Some jellyfishes in their maturity lay eggs which are really spherical bodies covered with cilia by means of which they swim about and at last attach themselves to some object and grow into hydroid colonies. Their life term lasts about a year and consists of these two different forms, the medusa state occurring in the spring.

It is then that our seas are almost full of jellyfishes in all their transparent beauty, from those just large enough to be seen to wondrous ones twenty to thirty feet long. Not all jellyfishes, however, return to the hydroid form of life, some lay eggs which produce their own kind.

Some medusae, besides laying eggs, also produce the buds from which small jellyfishes grow, either on the margin of their umbrella or about their stomachs.

Indeed, hydroids have been called "the nurses of jellyfish," and it must be borne in mind that the close relation which they bear to jellyfishes would never be suspected from even more than a casual observation. It is only by patient watching and long hours spent in pursuit of their various stations, that conclusions have been reached.

BLANCHE TRASK.

BEFORE THE RAIN.

We knew it would rain, for all the morn
  A spirit on slender ropes of mist
Was lowering its golden buckets down
  Into the vapory amethyst.

Of marshes and swamps and dismal fens,
  Scooping the dew that lay in the flowers,
Dipping the jewels out of the sea
  To scatter them over the land in showers.

We knew it would rain, for the poplars showed
  The white of their leaves, and the amber grain
Shrunk in the wind—and the lightning now
  Is tangled in tremulous skeins of rain.

Mr. McCann's Surprise.

THE TRUE STORY OF A RECENT OSLERIZATION.

By a Special Contributor.

"MY sakes, but we had th' time, last night, Mrs. Gavigan!" said Mrs. McCann, as she put the clothes pins in a sheet she had hung on the wash line.

"Come here an' tell me about it," urged Mrs. Gavigan, leaning against the fence. "We ain't had a good talk fer a long time."

"It was th' greatest git-up I iver did see!" began Mrs. McCann, meeting her neighbor half way. "You see pa was sixty years ol' yesterday, an' a foine an' hearty ol' man he is, too. He can swing his club as high, an' hold himself as straight as any policeman as iver walked a bate."

"I've watched 'im many a time," remarked Mrs. Gavigan, "an' thought jus' as y' say, meself. It's a grand ol' man he is."

"Well, it was this way; Pat an' me was invited ter ma's house by some iv th' neighbors as was goin' ter have a birthday surprise on Pa. I sent word over ahead iv time that me an' Pat an' Pat's cousin was a-comin' over ter spend th' evenin', so they'd be dressed up. I hate ter be surprised whin I've got me ol' clothes on."

"An' so do I," broke in Mrs. Gavigan; "an' I do be thinkin' that them people ain't got much sense as surprises y' in yer workin' rig, whin y' don't know they're comin'."

"The ol' folks acted kinder quare whin thirty instead iv three come, but Ma was game, an' dragged th' chairs from all over th' house an' seated all she could in th' parlor an' sittin'-room. Th' rest stood up. Then out comes a tall man with long coat tails an' begins talkin'. 'Mr. O'Shay,' sez he, 'a great man by the name iv Osler sez as how, whin a man gets ter be sixty years ol', he ain't no longer iv use ter the people at large, an' it is time fer 'im ter be clorerformed an' give his place ter some younger an' abler man.' Pa clinches his fists an' starts up, but Ma puts her han' on his arm an' tells him ter keep still. 'In ither words,' goes on th' tall man, 'you bein' sixty years ol' terday, it is time fer y' ter leave this earth, an' we thought it'd be pleasanter fer ye ter end yer life with kind neighbors an' friends aroun', than ter go stumblin' out alone. We've got a fine doctor here, an' he will give y' th' chloroform an' do th' business up in grand style.' "

"Well, I do declare," ejactulated Mrs. Gavigan, "an' did yer pa stand fer that?"

"He started up agin, but Ma pulled 'im back. I could see that Pa was gittin' mighty hot all over, an' I saw him feelin' around his hip pocket."

"It pays ter protect yerself, even if ye be among them as calls themselves yer friends," commented Mrs. Gavigan.

"Yes, that's so," agreed Mrs. McCann. Well, then th' tall feller rings a bell, an' sure as ye live, in comes a doctor—he's one iv Pa's neighbors, too—an' a-follerin' him comes a nurse, all dressed up in stripes an' a white apron an' a cap, carryin' a bottle that looks big enough ter hold two gallons of stuff. An' it was marked 'Clorerform,' in great big letters. An' tied to it was a sponge as big as a bushel basket. Th' tall feller pulls a chair out in th' middle iv th' rooms, an' he stands behind it, an' th' doctor on one side, an' th' nurse on th' ither. Then th' tall feller sez: 'If th' patient will now come forward an' sit in this chair, we will end his life in a grand an' beautiful way, without pain or trouble on his part!' "

"Seems ter me it was time fer some one ter stop such disgraceful doings," expostulated Mrs. Gavigan, greatly excited. "Yer Pa should 'ave called the patrol an' given them fellers a ride!"

"Pa jus' couldn't stand it any longer. He stands up straight—he's six-foot-one—an' looks thunder. 'I'd jus' like ter know,' sez he, 'if I've lived ter be sixty years ol' ter be insulted by a pack of fool neighbors in me own house! I don't care a damn what that man Josler or Hosler or any other blame fool sez, I can lick any two iv ye as wants ter stand out.' Pa was takin' off his coat an' me heart was in me throat. The womin began a-squealin', but th' doctor didn't pay no attention; he took th' cork outer th' bottle, an' dumped some quare-smellin' stuff on th' sponge, an' started fer Pa! Just then th' doorbell rings loud, an' in dashes a foine-lookin' young feller, all dressed up in soldier's togs, a-wavin' a paper in th' air. 'A reprave! a reprave!' he yells. Th' Mayor has sent a reprave!' Then, unfoldin' th' paper, he reads, 'On account of th' long an' faithful years Thomas O'Shay has spent in th' services iv his city, an on account iv th' foine way he do be doin' his duty at th' present time, I th' Mayor iv this city, do grant 'im a reprave, an' may he live long ter enjoy it, an' continue ter be a walkin' honor to his city!"

"Well, well, do y' really be tellin' me th' truth, Mrs. McCann?"

"I sure do be," replied Mrs. McCann. "An' then th' soldier boy goes out an' comes in agin with a big box, an' han's it ter th' tall feller. 'In behalf iv yer neighbors an' friends,' sez he, 'I present you, Thomas O'Shay, with this silver set—a little gift ter show th' respect an' love we all feel fer y' in our heart. May yer years be many an' yer tears be few' "

"Bless my soul!" chimed in Mrs. Gavigan, "what a roundabout way of givin' a present! An' how did yer pa take it?"

"Poor ol' Pa, y' could jus' have knocked 'im down with a feather, an' there was really tears in his eyes whin he shook han's all around, an' axed 'em ter 'scuse 'im fer makin' thim fool remarks."

The Information Fiend.

A SAN FRANCISCAN was talking about the humorist, Jerome K. Jerome.

"I crossed the Atlantic with Mr. Jerome," he said, "the last time he visited America. There was on board an information fiend—one of those bores with a lot of information o ntap about everything under the sun—and Mr. Jerome had a horror of him.

"As we leaned over the rail one morning, the information fiend joined us.

"'Gentlemen,' he said pompously, as he waved his hand out over the great expanse of water, 'if the earth were flattened out, the sea would be two miles deep all over the world.'

"'Well,' said Mr. Jerome, 'if you catch any man flattening out the earth, shoot him on the spot, for I can't swim.'"

DISCUSSING the question of Harry K. Thaw's insanity, Dr. Mandsley Knight, the noted allenist, said:

"That reminds me of a politician who has a morbid love of visiting insane asylums and talking to the inmates. Though this is bad for the mental health of the man, I must admit that his journeys often yield him the oddest little stories.

"Wandering through a certain asylum's wards one day, he came upon a man who sat in a brown study on a bench.

"'How do you do, sir?' said the politician. 'What is your name, may I ask?'

"'My name?' said the other, frowning fiercely. 'Why, Czar Nicholas, of course.'

"'Indeed?' said the politician. 'Yet the last time I was here you were the Emperor of Germany.'

"'Yes, of course,' said the other, quickly; 'but that was by my first wife.'"

Beating Nature Herself.

MISS MARY CASSATT, the noted Philadelphia artist, lives in Paris. Several of her pictures have the great honor to be hung in the Luxembourg, and Miss Cassatt's studio teas are extremely popular in the American colony.

Miss Cassatt, at one of her teas, talked to a Philadelphian about an English animal painter.

"He painted last winter," she said, "a number of pictures of dead game. They were highly praised. The man's head was turned. Among the pictures was a group of dead rabbits. A critic commended these rabbits.

"'They are remarkably true to nature,' he said.

"'Nature!' the artist exclaimed. 'Yes, I flatter myself that there is more nature in those rabbits than you—ah—usually see in rabbits.'"

He Thought Wrong.

SEYMOUR EATON, ex-secretary of the International Policy Holders' Committee, is a firm believer in women's intelligence, and in many of his enterprises women have held important posts.

Apropos of women's wit, Mr. Eaton said at Atlantic City:

"As I was strolling the other day on the boardwalk, a wheeled chair containing two ladies trundled slowly by me. I heard one lady say:

"'What has become of that blonde with whom Harry Hawke was flirting all summer?'

"'Thought he was flirting, you mean,' said the second lady. 'She married him last month.'"

The Disgruntled Novelist.

"IT is whispered," said a magazine editor, "that Mark Twain will tell in his autobiography a story about a famous novelist.

"This novelist loves praise when he is sure of its sincerity. Sincere praise, indeed, is dearer to him than untold gold. And sometimes, in the hope of getting a little of it, he hides his identity and talks to people in book stores and libraries about his own works.

"One day he went into Brentano's to get some novels for summer reading. The salesman, who didn't know him, after bringing forth Howells's latest, and Conrad's and Tarkington's and George Moore's, threw down one of the man's own books.

"'Will you try this, sir?' he said.

"The novelist, eager for praise, threw up his hands before his own book, exclaiming:

"'Dear me! I can't stand that man's stuff.'

"'Can't you, sir?' said the salesman. 'Well, to tell the truth, I can't, either.'"

Anent the Terrorist.

A. C. JONES, the Prohibition candidate for the Governorship of South Carolina, upbraided, in a speech in Columbia, the unexampled cruelty of the Russian terrorists.

"If it was themselves," said Mr. Jones; 'if it was their own wives and families, their own little children, then they'd sing a different song before all that blood and horror.

"Whenever I think of the terrorists of Russia, I am reminded of another terrorist whom I knew in my boyhood.

"This man wore a red necktie and long hair. He sat day and night in a saloon, smoking a huge pipe and drinking one beer after another, and to hear him talk about what he and his gang were going to do to the kings and princes and potentates of the world was enough to curdle your blood.

"One afternoon, as I was hurrying home from school, I saw some one being carried down the street on a stretcher.

"'Who've you got there, Peter?' I said to one of the stretcher bearers.

"'Biermug the anarchist,' Peter replied.

"'What's the matter with him?' I asked.

"'He was making a speech on the corner,' said Peter, 'and just as he was offering to lead the mob till the streets ran with blood to his waist, a little dog got away from a lady and bit him on the ankle, and the poor fellow fainted dead away.'"

On a Famous Links.

"AT the famous St. Andrew's links," said Andrew Carnegie, "the Sabbath is respected. Indeed, all over Scotland, the Sabbath is respected in a remarkable way.

"Golfing one day in the autumn on the St. Andrews links, I said to my caddie:

"'Angus, man, the leaves are falling. The green is turning red and brown. Winter will soon be upon us. And do you get much caddying to do in the winter, Angus?'

"Angus frowned gloomily.

"'Na, na,' said he, blowing his nose. 'There's nae muckle caddyin' in winter. If it's no snaw it's frost, if it's no' frost it's snaw; if it's neither frost nor snaw it's rain, an' if it's fine it's sure to be the Sawbath.'"

The Height of Conceit.

AFTER Gov. Stokes of New Jersey had signed the beneficent "Barber act," a bill that will do much to prevent the future watering of stock, a Trenton statesman said to him:

"So-and-So, the millionaire, was sure you wouldn't sign this act. He is a conceited chap. He believes that his way of thinking is always the right way."

"He is conceited truly," said the Governor, smiling. "He reminds me of another conceited man I used to know.

"Two mutual friends sat near this man at lunch one day.

"'What makes him look so glum this morning?' said the first.

"'Why,' said the other, 'he visited an Egyptian palmist last night, and the fellow told him his wife would marry twice, and the second hsband would be a remarkably fine chap.

"'Aha! He thinks that's rather a reflection on himself, eh?'

"'Not at all. He thinks his wife was married before, and never told him.'"

New Idea on Baldness.

MISS MARY LEE, the daughter of Gen. Robert E. Lee, is one of the staunchest supporters of the Confederate Women's Home at Richmond. Indeed, in order to help the home, Miss Lee is going to sell a collection of Washingtoniana that includes two of the great patriot's campaign tents.

Miss Lee is the home's best-loved visitor. She often devotes a day to its inmates, and many are the odd anecdotes and stories that she thus picks up.

"A little boy and his father were visiting an aged lady in the house one day," she said recently. "The little boy was so bright and handsome that I stopped and talked with the group a while. As I stood there, the child, rubbing his hand over his hair, said:

"'Paw!'

Money Changed Him.

ALEXANDER AGASSIZ, who has been reëlected to the directorate of the great Calumet and Hecla mine, was congratulated in Newport on this mine's success.

"Yes," said Mr. Agassiz, with a smile, "it is a wonderful mine, a mine to make men cheerful and optimistic.

"There is nothing like a good investment, you know, to improve a man's disposition. There is a farmer near Newport who is today, thanks to some excellent stock, a perfect well of bubbling good humor, and yet this man, a year or two ago, would answer you, when you spoke to him, like this:

"'Fine weather, James.'

"'For them as ain't got to work, sir.'

"'Your potato field looks well.'

"'To them as ain't got to dig in it.'

"'Well, James, I'm glad your wife's better.'

The Baby's Defeat.

MISS DOROTHEA KLUMPKE, the famous woman astronomer, was talking, on her last visit to San Francisco, about a quarrel between two great mathematicians.

"So," she concluded, "the one came out on top first, but the other came out on top afterward. It was like a young couple I knew of and their baby.

"The baby gets the better of his parents in the night. On toward 4 o'clock in the morning it is a common thing for his mother to say despondently:

"'I can't get baby to take this medicine at all.'

"And the weary father will answer:

"'I suppose he's afraid it's something to make him sleep.'

The Americans were comparatively late in entering eters and his successor, Dr. Haynes, uncovered 70,000 scribed objects of clay, stone, and metal, dating from 00 B.C. down to the beginning of our era. The greater art of them are tablets which furnish a vivid picture of e life and the business transactions of the people.

At Bismya, where the writer was in charge of the ex ations in 1903-4, the number of inscribed objects did ceed 3000, yet many of them were of an exceed light upon the earliest known civilization of man.

y of the inscriptions discovered date almost from

At Nippur, Dr. [illegible] and his successor, Dr. Haynes, uncovered 70,000 inscribed objects of clay, stone, and metal, dating from [illegible] B.C. down to the beginning of our era. The greater part of these are tablets which furnish a vivid picture of the life and the business transactions of the people.

At Bismya, where the writer was in charge of the excavations in 1903-4, the number of inscribed objects did not exceed 2000, yet many of them were of an exceeding great antiquity, and have thrown an abundance of light upon the earliest known civilization of man. Some of the inscriptions discovered date almost from the early days when men wrote by drawing the pictures from which the wedge-shape writing of Babylonia developed. Marble statues from 4500 B. C., more ancient than any other statuary in the world, were discovered. The only perfect Babylonian statue known, represents the costume of that day as a short plaited skirt hanging from the waist to the knees; it is but a slight advance upon the hip-rag of primitive man. The head, like that of the old King David, whom the statue represents, is shaved; the eyes are large holes in which eyeballs of ivory were once set. The shoulders are square, and the figure short. The art displayed is not inferior to that produced during all the 4000 years until the fall of Babylon.

A Heap of Riches.

By the side of the ruins of the ancient temple was the dump heap upon which the temple priests of 6400 years ago discarded the broken and worthless utensils; from these fragments of alabaster, onyx, and marble, carved and inlaid with ivory and bright stones, are specimens of great value. The temple was the oldest in the world, or rather the mound contained the ruins of several temples, each of which was built upon the ruined walls of an earlier one. The structure nearest the surface contained brick inscriptions dating from [illegible] B.C. Just beneath it was an inscription upon a vase written a thousand years earlier; a little lower were vase inscriptions from 4500 B.C., and still little but the surface of the mound was touched. Down beneath these ancient ruins digging for thirty feet through still earlier structures, below them all, on the sand of the desert level, was a layer of crude pottery fragments left there by the first settlers of Mesopotamia. How long ago these settlers encamped in that spot, no one can tell, yet it appears that more than 10,000 years ago there was an advanced civilization in the valley of the Tigris and the Euphrates.

While searching through the ruins of those early ages, objects which showed the workings of the mind of early man were specially valuable. A conch shell from which a section had been cut so that it formed a dish, while the valve became a groove for the wick, was the first lamp of primitive man, adopted when he learned that mutton fat would burn, and the camp fire was no longer sufficient for his needs. Later, when the shell was not at hand, he cut his shell-shaped lamp from blocks of marble and alabaster. Thus the sea shell is the ancestor of all lamps.

At Babylon, the Germans are still continuing the work which they began six years ago. The history of Babylon and the nature of its fall are such that antiquities of great age or value are not expected. The excavators are content with the few late Babylonian inscriptions, and with the plan of the city and constructions of Nebuchadnezzar which they are patiently revealing.

Excavators' Hardships.

The work of the excavator, fascinating as it may seem, consists of little more than a series of hardships, alleviated occasionally by a discovery of importance. In the Ottoman empire the first and often the most difficult step is to obtain from the Sultan the permission to excavate, and years and large sums of money are often spent for this purpose. The greater part of those who seek the excavator's irade, abandon the quest in despair; permission to excavate at Bismya was granted after three years of constant application, and then only when an American fleet was in Turkish waters. The irade when once granted remains in force for two years. The excavator is required to deposit a sum of $200 as a guarantee of good faith, and to pay a salary of about $100 a month to a commissioner who is appointed to accompany him to the field, and to take charge of the antiquities which may be discovered. All antiquities belong to the Turkish government, and the excavator has the right only to take photographs and copies of them.

In Italy, Greece, and Egypt, the excavator may prosecute his work with perfect safety, but when he enters the remoter parts of Babylon, he is in one of the most dangerous portions of the world. In the interior of the desert, as at Bismya and Mugheir, the Bedouin are as wild as ever they were, and the excavator who would go among them is required to take protection from the government. At Bismya we had a guard of eight soldiers, all armed in some mysterious way with the discarded Springfield rifles of our Civil War. The guard was supplemented by an equal number of watchmen selected from the tribe of Arabs in whose territory we were, and in addition, every man employed at the excavation was required to own a gun which was always lying ready at the side of the trench where he was working. Even with this strong guard we were frequently attacked during the early days of the excavations, and at night the firing of guns to frighten away the robbers was almost incessant, until the lawless wanderers had learned that we were strongly protected.

The finding of water in the desert is always a serious matter, for though it may be found by digging into the sand, it is generally salty. Sometimes it may be brought by caravan, but this is generally impracticable, for the desert tribes waylay every passing traveler. At Bismya, two wells which had been dug into the sand to the water level, caved in, nearly burying the men at the bottom; a third well yielded, at the depth of thirty feet, a slightly bitter water.

Arab Laborers.

The fear of being unable to obtain workmen from among the desert Arabs is always a cause of anxiety to the newly-arrived excavator, but such fears are groundless, for Arabs, most of whom have never done a day's work of any kind, flock to him and clamor to be hired. Custom has fixed the price of labor at the excavations. The men are divided into gangs of nine or twelve each. At the head of each gang is the pickman, usually a native who has been trained by some of the earlier excavators. With a one-sided pick he loosens up the ground and searches through it for antiquities; his pay is five Turkish piasters, or 20 cents, a day. With each pickman are two or three natives provided with triangular hoes, with which they break the chunks of dirt into finer pieces, and, searching through it, scrape it into baskets to be carried to the dump. Their pay is 16 cents a day.

To open the excavations a gang of men, placed upon the sloping side of the mound toward the summit, digs a trench toward the center. When the trench is brought to the wall of the buried building, it is turned to follow it to a doorway, then through the doorway into the interior, and from one chamber to another until the entire structure has been cleared. The roof of every Babylonian building has long ago fallen in, and seldom do more than three feet of the thick walls remain. It is upon the floors of the chambers, especially in the corners, that the antiquities are found, and there, protected by the clay of the decomposed bricks of the fallen roof and walls, they are perfectly preserved. As the finely-inscribed clay tables are dug from the débris they are so soft that they break at the slightest touch, but upon exposure to the air they harden, and may be handled with impunity. As the various chambers thus excavated have been cleared, designed, and photographed, the remaining walls are removed, and trenches are dug at a lower level, revealing the structures beneath. Everywhere scattered among the walls of the earlier houses are the graves of a later date, still frequently in a perfect state of preservation. As they are opened one finds arranged along the walls pots once containing food for the spirits of the dead, and in the dust of the decomposed bones is scattered jewelry. An exciting work of the excavator is to sift the dust through his fingers and collect red and blue stone, or gold beads of the necklace, the bronze, silver and gold rings of the ears, nose, and fingers, and the larger bracelets and neck bands. If the grave is that of a man, the jewelry is lacking, but in its place is a beautifully engraved cylindrical seal which the owner wore upon a string about his neck, and with which he sealed his contracts and letters.

In general the work of excavation resembles that of the gold miner. He may dig for months without reward other than most commonplace objects, and again a single stroke of the pick may reveal some rare antiquity which, if it does not bring wealth, may bring more enduring fame to its discoverer.

UNDERGROUND GARDENS.

COL. POSEY OF EVANSVILLE WILL INTRODUCE THE TROPICS INTO INDIANA.

[Indianapolis Star:] Frank B. Posey, surveyor of the port at Evansville and a Republican leader of prominence, is about to undertake in this country a remarkable experiment. He proposes to plant gardens under the earth's surface and to raise the fruits and flowers of the tropics. The hanging gardens of Babylon ranked as one of the early wonders of the world, but the people down here say they will not be in it with the underground gardens of Spencer county.

A few years ago Col. Posey, who formerly represented the First District in Congress, bought 260 acres of land on Pigeon Creek, lying partly in Spencer and partly in Warrick counties. On the place is a coal mine that was abandoned seventeen years ago. Recently Col. Posey caused the shaft to be reopened, and to his surprise found that, unlike nearly all abandoned mines, the interior chambers were intact.

Col. Posey organized an exploring party and investigated all of the ramifications of the abandoned mine. He found it covers an area of fifteen acres, subdivided into chambers 200 feet long and of varying width. These chambers are about 100 feet below the surface of the earth.

It at once occurred to Col. Posey, who delights in experiments, that here was an opportunity to test the feasibility of underground gardening. He was satisfied that if he could raise fifteen acres of garden truck 100 feet below the earth's surface, he would perform an achievement that would arrest the attention of scientific circles all over the world, and at the same time prove immensely profitable. He learned by taking temperatures that the interior of the mine remains constantly at 55 degrees, the even temperature of the earth. This temperature is unvarying, winter and summer, and is the temperature most conducive to the growth of plant life. Furthermore, the air is surcharged with carbonic gas, upon which plants thrive.

In order to grow, however, plants require light, and how to light his underground gardens has been a problem that was difficult to solve, but Col. Posey is convinced that he has at last found the solution. He will illuminate the various chambers and passageways with acetylene gas, which furnishes a very brilliant light, and is inexpensive.

"I had heard," said Col. Posey, "that some experiments conducted at Cornell University proved conclusively that sunlight is not necessary to the growth of plants and that acetylene gas furnishes a very good substitute. I wrote to Gifford Pinchot, chief of the United States Bureau of Forestry, for information on the subject, and I have just received his reply. He says that he participated in the experiments at Cornell, and that while they could not be called completely successful, they showed that plants can be made to grow and mature by the aid of acetylene gas. The cost of generating this light is nominal. Ten cents will pay for the illumination of a room or chamber 200 feet long and fifty feet wide for twenty-four hours. It has been proved time and again that electricity is a good substitute for sunlight in raising plants, but it is entirely too expensive for ordinary use."

Col. Posey expects to spend a good many thousands of dollars in preparing his underground gardens for cultivation. He will import into the mine hundreds of tons of rich soil and shape it into beds, such as are found in greenhouses. He has already arranged to plant a crop of mushrooms about September 1, and he expects to have mushrooms for market by Thanksgiving. His intention is to raise large quantities of lettuce and celery for the winter markets, and he will devote much attention to the cultivation of figs and oranges. He also expects to grow roses on an extensive scale.

Col. Posey's farm is near the Ohio River, and an electric line has been surveyed within the distance of half a city block from it, so that he anticipates no difficulty in marketing the produce of his underground gardens.

MAKES HIS OWN TEETH.

Charles Bennett, aged 60, a Franklin county convict serving five years in the Ohio penitentiary for burglary, not only pulls his own teeth, but he makes new ones and puts them in himself.

He makes the teeth out of rosin beef bones obtained in the kitchen, using only a little saw and a penknife. He has been using two of the teeth several months and is now at work on others.

He pulls his old teeth by means of a fiddle string and then makes the new teeth the shape of the ones pulled out. They are grooved so they fit to the gum and also to the teeth on each side.—[Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Practical Poultry Culture in the Southwest.

DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF STANDARD-BRED POULTRY AND THE PEOPLE WHO GROW IT.

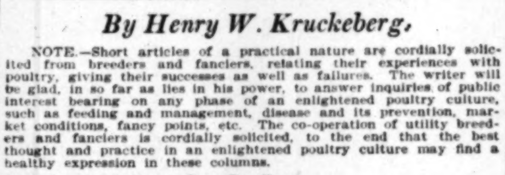
By Henry W. Kruckeberg.

NOTE.—Short articles of a practical nature are cordially solicited from breeders and fanciers, relating their experiences with poultry, giving their successes as well as failures. The writer will be glad, in so far as lies in his power, to answer inquiries of public interest bearing on any phase of an enlightened poultry culture, such as feeding and management, disease and its prevention, market conditions, fancy points, etc. The co-operation of utility breeders and fanciers is cordially solicited, to the end that the best thought and practice in an enlightened poultry culture may find a healthy expression in these columns.

Additional Light on Dry Feeding.

C. A. DICKINSON, in response to the request contained in these columns, kindly sends us the following bearing on the dry-hopper system of feeding:

"I have just read the inquiry from Mr. Arthur Little in The Times of September 30, regarding dry feed hoppers. For the benefit of all who wish to try that system of feeding I desire to state that having tried and discarded several forms of hoppers, I concluded to adopt the style used by N. W. Sanborn, Bellingham, Mass., with slight additions. As I have not practised dry feeding through the breeding season, I cannot answer definitely regarding the fitness of the system for breeding pens, but I have no fears as to its practicability. It is known that human beings with food before them much of the time are not so apt to overeat as those who are limited, hence I find that if I want a real fat fowl I must resort to other methods than dry feeding. Regarding exercise, I can, by judicious use of the grain feed, give the birds plenty of it.



C. A. DICKINSON'S DRY HOPPER.

"My mixture for dry feeding is as follows: One part each cracked corn, shorts or middlings and whole wheat, with two parts bran and about one-tenth as much of the whole of beef scraps. In the morning I feed in litter, whole barley, which has been sprouted, which is eaten eagerly, and sets the birds to work.

"My hopper is a box one foot wide by three feet long by five inches deep. In this box is a frame made of 1x1-inch pieces, about one inch less in size than the inside dimensions of the box and covered with one-inch mesh wire. A little gable roof over the box, supported by two pieces nailed onto the ends of the box completes the outfit. I fill the box two-thirds full of the feed and put the wire frame on top of the feed. It sets out in the yard and the roof keeps out rain and dirt while the wire screen keeps the birds from wasting any feed. This box is large enough for thirty birds, and will be found convenient if one side of the roof is made to raise to enable the feed to be put in without trouble."

Under date of October 2 Joseph Beadle of the Brooklyn Heights Poultry Farm writes as follows detailing his experience in dry feeding

"About fourteen weeks ago I decided to try the dry ration hopper feeding system. I put 150 S. C. White Leghorn hens in two pens of ample size, with four cocks in each, with the result that I never had hens do better, nor eggs more fertile. From eggs out of these two pens I have raised 400 as fine White Leghorn pullets as one can find in this country. Eggs from hens fed in this way ran 92 per cent. fertile all through the hatching season, while in my public announcements I only guarantee 85 per cent. So well am I satisfied with this system that I shall adapt it to my entire poultry operations. By feeding the old system consistency of mashes I was compelled to keep an extra man and horse in caring for about a thousand head; now I do the work alone under the dry feeding hopper system, and am enabled to keep the place in much better condition."

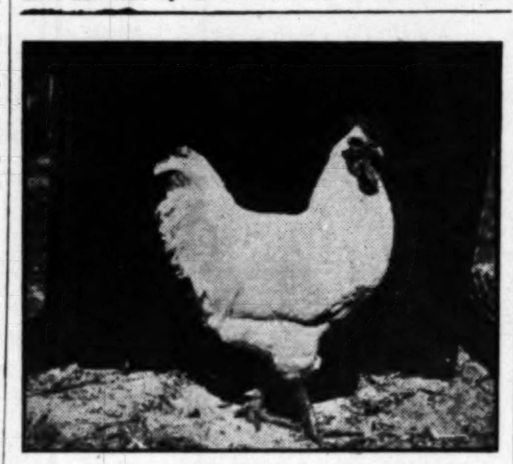
C. M. Walton of the Clover Lawn Poultry Yards at Glendale, sends in the following account of gratifying results with the dry feeding system, which seems almost conclusive as to its economic importance

"After feeding mashes for thirty years, I decided about six months ago to try the dry hopper system, although I had the same doubts as yourself as to the hens becoming overfat. I experimented at first with a pen of fifty year-old pullets, and a pen of fifty three-year-old fowls, using a hopper similar to the one illustrated in The Times of September 30, and feeding one of the balanced rations now on the market. The results have exceeded my expectations, for in two weeks the egg yield in both tests had jumped from 24 to 26 eggs a day to 38 to 42, and more especially so in the case of the old fowls, and this yield was kept up until the moulting season. The fowls did not become overfat, as I had feared, but remained at about the normal weight for egg production and health.

"I was so well pleased with the result that I at once introduced these hoppers into all my yards, containing nearly 3000 White Leghorns and over 100 White Rocks with the further satisfactory result that my fowls have moulted much earlier than usual, and are coming through it in better shape than ever before, while the mortality at this time is practically nothing. Also my loss from indigestion and sour crop has entirely ceased. Heretofore with one-third this number of fowls on the old mash system, I would at times lose two or three a week. It is also a great saving of labor, as my hoppers will hold over a ton of grain. I am able to drive the team directly from the station to the hoppers and fill them up once in about every two weeks. I also use this system on my young chicks after the first few days, keeping constantly before them one of the balanced forcing feeds in one-half of the hopper and beef scraps in the other. If 'Mrs. M'. will visit the Clover Lawn Poultry Yards at Glendale, she can see over fifty of these hoppers in practical use. All others interested are also cordially invited."

The Survival of the Fittest.

"Blow your own horn" has become a maxim in poultry culture much as it is in other lines of business endeavor. In fact, it has become so general that we expect it at every turn. "My breed is the best," "My birds are the best—if it were not so I would discard them and take up the varieties that are better." And so the lines of argument run, generally honestly put, but for the most part based on individual experience, which is frequently a limited one at that.



WHITE ROCK COCK "TROJAN," GREAT GRANDSON OF "QUEEN BEE." OWNED AND BRED BY WILLIAM M. HUMPHREYS.

"It is more of a matter of environment, attention, and food," remarked W. M. Humphreys, the White Rock breeder and fancier to the writer one day last week, "that makes the success rather than the breed, though there are half a dozen different breeds that under ideal conditions give evidence of an inherent "best" quality. For instance, if I were catering to a high-class egg trade, and eggs alone, I would breed Black Minorcas for the reason that as layers they are as good as any, but in addition thereto, they lay a large and superior quality of hen fruit, possessing a higher selling value than the regular run of eggs. And so we might go on mentioning some inherent "best" quality in other breeds. My particular hobby is the White Rock. I believe it the best net result breed; that as a commercial proposition from start to finish (food and care against egg and carcass) the greatest margin is obtainable. Prime as table fowl; unexcelled as layers; as chicks strong and rugged; broad and plump, ready for the block at any time, rapid growers, taking on flesh quickly in the development of a long, broad, deep and juicy yellow-skinned carcass.

WHITE ROCW HEN "QUEEN BEE," SCORE 96½. WINNER OF SEVEN FIRSTS. OWNED BY WILLIAM M. HUMPHREYS.

"If you are breeding for layers, you must counteract this natural tendency to take on fat, as no fat fowl is ever a prolific layer. To do this, regulate and restrict the kind and quantity of feed and enforce exercise. No breed demands so much green food as the White Rock, which is certainly in favor of the poultryman, as it is the cheapest ration obtainable. In feeding it is advisable to keep the birds just a little hungry during the daytime—make them work in the scratching pens for all the grain they get, but at night give them a plentiful supply.

"No fowls will make a better response to intelligent treatment than the White Rocks. They lay a standard-size egg of medium color and in such numbers that many of the commercial egg farms are adopting them. They thrive in confinement, are quiet in disposition, easily handled, and in every way an ideal fancier's Indeed, in my judgment, in no other variety do we beauty and utility so largely emphasized."

The above modest tribute to one of the most varieties in the American class voices the spirit love of the fancier for his favorite breed. It a love for bird life that in its final analysis stands success. For poultry breeding, like all successful dertakings, calls for heart and soul quite as much any other industrial pursuit. The reader, no matter he breeds the English, American, Mediterranean or atic class of poultry, will appreciate the optimistic of Mr. Humphrey's opinions and apply his enth and hearty application to his favorite breed.

The Orpington Club of Southern California is a robust organization of upward of forty members, all of whom are going to exhibit their favorite breed this coming show season.

The National Department of Agriculture, division of Animal Industry, is about to inaugurate a series of experiments bearing on the mash versus the dry hopper feeding, about which we hear so much of late. White Plymouth Rocks will be used, and the test repeated twice to confirm results of the two systems on vitality and profitableness.

What "Times" Readers Want to Know.

D. M. O., Los Angeles, writes that he has a fine White Leghorn cock seemingly in good health, but who squats down on the ground and acts as if in pain.

Your bird is suffering from constipation, due possibly to a want of a sufficient quantity of green food, or a want of healthy exercise. Give a laxative like castor oil, or any that happens convenient. Correct conditions.

W. T., Prospect Park, writes for some remedy to "up," the sitting propensities of his Rhode Island hens. This, like most of the American class, are as sitters, hence some allowance must be made for nature's demands. A simple plan is to place the hens in slatted-bottom coops so they cannot "nest," for a few days; this very often proves effective, and the bird soon goes to laying again.

ANIMALS WHICH WASHED DISHES.

Beckmann gives a delightful account of a coon which used to amuse itself by washing various odds and ends in a bucket of water. An old pot handle, a snail shell, or anything of the sort would do.

But the thing he loved best of all was an empty bottle. Clasping it in his fore paws he would waddle slowly to the bucket with the bottle clasped close to his breast and then roll it and rinse it in the water. If any one ventured to disturb him he was furious and threw himself upon his back, clinging so tightly to his beloved bottle that he could be lifted by it.

Groos says that bears will do the same sort of thing. He relates the case of a polar bear which used to roll an old iron pot to and fro in his tank, and then, lifting it out, rub it up and down in a trough of running water. He stood on his hind legs and used his fore paws exactly like a washerwoman washing clothes.—[Strand.

A MESSAGE THAT CAME FROM THE DEAD TO THE LIVING.

By a Special Contributor.

MR. COTTON closed the door softly. He went straight to his revolving chair and sat down, leaned his cheeks in his hands, and peered without seeing anything into the quaint openings of his desk.

Josiah Cotton was the product of six generations of self-restraint; he was the extract of a hard-headed, warm-hearted Northern ancestry. There was no bend in his square chin. There was no quarter in his rapier-steel eyes. There comes a time when the iron bands of habit which confine emotion must break. To Josiah Cotton the time had come now. How could he blame his wife? His was the fault. The system in which his family had trained him was the assassin of love. A wall of steel had been cast before him, and advance was an impossibility. He saw no outlet. He could not forgive himself; therefore he could not forgive her.

Mechanically he fumbled at the drawers of his desk, trying in vain to order his mind. The young lawyer would not have acknowledged it to himself, but he was blindly groping for a solution of his difficulties and relief for his distress.

The desk had once belonged to his grandfather, Josiah Cotton, after whom he had been named, and whom he was said to resemble when he was in his sternest moods. It was one of those mahogany desks, the object of modern mania, filled with many secret drawers and unexpected receptacles. As a boy he remembered discovering these in turn. He knew there were just twenty-one places in it where a burglar would not be apt to find a document. One by one he opened these. Some were cunningly hidden behind obvious drawers, some responded to a secret touch, and there were a few that seemed to be a part of the solid, carved woodwork itself. Years ago in one of these latter he had discovered a bundle of old letters. They were yellow with age, and written in a crabbed hand, hard to decipher. He had not read them, but had replaced them carefully, with the instinct of reverence due to family belongings.

As Josiah's hand passed from one secret drawer to another it fell upon the quaint carving which separated two pigeonholes. It was like the back of an octavo volume, and was made to pull out. As he drew this to him his eyes dropped upon the familiar package of dusty letters. Wearied with conflict and languid with curiosity, ready for any momentary diversion, he untied the faded ribbon and spread the papers before him. Casually he selected one from the many in the bunch and opened it. It was one of those antiquated letters in which the envelope and the missive were one and the same sheet. These were much used before the days of postage stamps, and were sent on a personal frank.

It was dated "York, June 25, 1756," and read as follows:

"My Honored Wife: It is my duty to advise you of my safe arrival in the city of York after a long and perilous journey. Although in hourly danger from highwaymen, I have had time for self-examination. I know that I am a hard man and have an unbending nature, and I can see with some clearness that a young female who has not a prayerful nature might find it hard to conform to my austerity. While I have rejoiced in the ways of the Lord, you have rejoiced in the ways of man. It may be that I am too old or that you are too young for the Sacrament of Marriage. But, like Saul of Tarsus, even as I journeyed with great anger in my heart toward you, a light from heaven smote me in the eyes and blinded me for a moment, but now I see clearly. God has dropped the scales from my vision, and the long and perilous journey has not been in vain. This letter I write to tell you that I do not blame you for your innocent pleasantries with that young man. Had I made my own home more agreeable, possibly it would not have occurred. But, Abigail, my dear wife, I took you to my bosom because I loved you. I love you more today than ever, and I shall always love you and pray for your best happiness, wherever it may be found. May the blessing of God rest upon you. I am,

"Your obedient husband,
"JOSIAH COTTON."

The young man turned the yellow paper over. It was addressed to "Mistress Abigail Cotton, High Street, Andover." The letter dropped from his nerveless fingers and fell upon the polished mahogany. The husband started at this voice from another world as if it were the whispering of a ghost. From out of his fixed stare the handwriting of the next letter below arose as if it were embossed. It was a different script from that of his great grandfather. Instinctively he felt that here was the answer to the heart throb that he had just touched. At first he dared not handle the letter. It seemed a desecration to disrobe a heart long dead, a heart that had erred, that had suffered the anguish of remorse, possibly the penalty of a broken home. He knew nothing of it. Ah, here was tragedy like his own! No matter in what century one lives, love is the same, vanity is the same, fidelity is the same, and the anguish of their combination is the same.

Josiah reached out his hand and touched the letter tenderly. It was addressed to "Josiah Cotton, Esquire, Hancock Tavern, York," and began:

"My Honored Husband: I have received your esteemed letter. I find it hard to answer. You never told me before that you loved me. Why did not you let me know it? I thought you married me because it was the Word of the Lord. If I had known that you loved me I would not have been so frivolous. I have loved you since I was a little girl of 10, and all I wanted was to make you jealous.

"The strawberries are beginning to ripen. Jennie has a little calf, and something else may happen some time.

"Your loving and obedient wife,
"ABIGAIL."

Josiah Cotton kissed the letter and put it sacredly back in the hiding place where it had so long rested. This cry from a past century moved him greatly. He went to the window and drummed upon the pane, and looked out upon the green trees. The strawberries were ripening; the buttercups and the daisies were blooming, and all the birds nesting. He felt a queer sensation in his heart, and wondered if he was going to be ill. Then all at once the cap of the mountain was blown off; the volcano had burst.

"Great God!" he cried aloud, "what a brute I've been!" And like a river of lava he rushed from the room.

He found his wife in her own room, staring distractedly out of a window. She was in that desperate state when she might have done anything. She felt it in her to commit undreamed-of crimes. In such a consciousness of frenzied injury a woman may fling herself away, body and soul. She stared at her husband haughtily as he burst into the room.

"What is the matter?" she said coldly. "Have I done anything else?"

"No!" he exploded.

He seized his wife in his arms and carried her to the sofa, laid her down tenderly upon it, and then knelt beside her.

"No!" he repeated, "you haven't done anything else—you have never done anything. I wanted to tell you that I love you—I love you, and I want you to forgive me if you can."

Then with great reverence he bent over and kissed her wedding ring. He did this with the ardor of an oriental lover.

His wife, amazed, stared at him.

"Why, Mr. Cotton!" she said faintly. "Why, Josiah!"

This was one of the inadequate replies which great emotional scenes often arouse. But it seemed to mean all that it did not say.

"I love you! I love you!" he urged with the embarrassment of a man who has repressed expression until it becomes almost impossible.

She lifted a wistful face.

"I thought lately you married because it was—convenient. And I made a good figurehead in your house. I tried so hard."

"It is all my fault," interrupted Josiah, fiercely. "I couldn't—I was brought up not to show my feelings. Can't you understand?"

The young wife looked at her husband with fast brimming eyes. His reserve had been an impenetrable steel girdle against which she beat in vain for admittance up the stairway of his heart. Now it was open before her.

"Oh, Josiah!" she cried, as her arms, rigid for so long, curled themselves tenderly about his neck; "If you had only told me this before! Do you suppose"—she started up—"that I would have flirted with that little callow fool, or that I would have looked at any other man but you——"

The sentence was never finished, for the man took his wife madly in his arms. C. N. P.

"REINCARNATED" QUAIL.

"I was dining last night at one of our best restaurants," writes Mr. Frank Richardson in the Pall Mall Gazette, "and on analyzing my quail, I found that it was only a scenario, that the skeleton existed, but the bulk of the bird had been 'made up' with potted meat. My neighbor's quail, I noticed, lacked a leg. Now, what happens is this. During a long dinner, the chances are that one only cuts off the breast of the bird. The rest remains intact. The quail is then carefully collected, taken to the kitchen, and reconstructed.

"Most of the best hotels and restaurants are run in connection with cheaper restaurants, and to them the quail reincarnated is sent. It may then, provided it has not been too seriously damaged by the diner, be sent on to a third, fourth, and even a fifth restaurant."

Neither in London nor in Paris is it prudent, we imagine, to inquire too closely into the vicissitudes of fortune undergone by any dismembered bird or beast on the table, even though the restaurant be one which is beyond suspicion of its food coming from Chicago. Curries, minces, salmis, fricassees, and viands in aspic are rarely made of fresh meat, and the wooden, savorless taste of the meat in them is among the least of their disadvantages. They are quite out of fashion, it may be added (with the exception of the aspic) in most first-class restaurants.

Mr. Richardson's quail might, however, be a perfectly honest bird. To pick the flesh from a quail, pound it up, replace it on the skeleton, and serve the bird in aspic is a common, if foolish, effort of cookery, utterly ruining the two or three delicious mouthfuls of which a quail consists. Chickens are sometimes served in this fashion, and in the familiar "caneton rouennais" certain parts of the duck are pounded up into a sauce for the rest.

One likes, however, to be well acquainted with the restaurant where these dishes are presented. At a cheap table d'hôte dinner in Soho or the Palais Royal they are best left alone.—[London Mail.

FIELD NOTES.

The Best Shade Tree.

IN a table of sixty points of merit for shade trees, the following allowances of points are made for the different qualities of the tree: Shade, 20 points; resisting drought, 15; cleanliness, 10; strength and durability, 5; rapidity of growth, 5; making tap root, 5. In summing up the merits of our common shade trees the Spanish chestnut is given first place, being perfect in shade, drought resistance and strength, 9 in cleanliness, 3 in growth and 4 in tap root—a total of 56 points in a possible 60. The golden wattle and umbrella are accredited with 48 points each; cork bark elm, 47; black wattle, 40; sugar gum, 42; pepper, 31, being marked zero for cleanliness and the same for tap root; Moreton Bay rubber, 34, and so on down to the dracaena palm which is given but 16 points out of 60. It would seem from the above schedule that tree fanciers do not allow enough points for tap-rooting qualities. But they answer with the statement that good planting in deep, well-prepared holes make good the rooting qualities of almost any tree.

Pickling Ripe Olives.

WHEN the time comes for preparing the season's supply of olives, have the following or some other good recipe for pickling where you can find it. The successful production of pickled olives is a matter of experience and depends almost altogether on the individual judgment and skill of the producer. No method can be given which is suitable to all cases, and the best method must be modified according to the nature of the olives to be treated. The following scheme, therefore, is to be considered as a mere outline, to be carefully adapted and modified by the operator at each stage of the process:

1. Place the olives in a solution, composed of two ounces of potash lye to one gallon of water, for four hours. Repeat this once, or twice if necessary to remove the tartness.
2. Rinse the olives thoroughly and replace the lye solution with fresh water. Change the water twice a day until the potash has been removed as judged by the taste.
3. Replace the water with brine composed of four ounces of salt to a gallon of water, and allow to stand two days.
4. Put in brine of six ounces of salt to a gallon for seven days.
5. Put in brine of ten ounces of salt to the gallon for two weeks.
6. Put finally into a brine containing fourteen ounces of salt to the gallon of water.

Poisoning Gophers.

A RANCHER came all the way from the lower Cahuenga Valley to find an easier method of killing gophers than that of poisoning. He went away with a bottle of bisulphid of carbon. But at this time of the year poisoning is one of the most effective means of getting free from these pests. The bait is not put out in a proper manner, usually, or better success would always follow this means of destruction.

"Poisoning is an easy method of destroying gophers, and it is very satisfactory if faithfully done. The poison is strychnine in crystal form, which can be pulverized in the small bottle in which it is bought, by using the head of a nail. Take out a very small amount upon the tip of a knife blade and insert it into raisins, or pieces of carrot, potato, alfalfa stems, or almost any succulent vegetable substance which is handy at the time. Find where the gopher has been at work last, and remove the earth from the surface to find where it came from; then dig down to find the main runway, generally from six to twelve inches. The runway being found, clean out any dirt that may have dropped into it, and place the poison a little distance from the opening. Then close up the hole with a lump of earth or sod, being careful that none drops in on the poison, and put the dirt back as before. It is often useless to put poison in holes left open by the gophers when at work, as they shove the poison out with the dirt, and it becomes lost. If a hole is opened and the poison placed therein it should be closed up again, as the gopher seeing the light and feeling the air where it was not intended, goes to work to remedy the evil by shoving a load of dirt against the opening, thereby covering up or throwing out the bait."

Coming the Farmer's Way.

ONE of our greatest financial writers frankly acknowledges that the changed condition of things, industrial and altogether, makes it very difficult to predict the date of the next financial crash, or whether another panic may be looked for at all. Among the bothering circumstances he finds in the way of forecasting hard times is the remarkable prosperity of the farmers, for however dire may be the croakings of a political year, the fact remains that the States of the middle and extreme West are out of debt and do not ask "no odds of nobody." The double decade intervening between 1837, 1857, 1873 and 1893 would make the next "unpleasantness" due in 1913, but there is something in the wind now that makes the statistician wary of predictions. He says it is the unlooked-for affluence of the farmer. Whether the farmer's picnic is to terminate suddenly or continue indefinitely no one knows, but I can see signs of the farmers coming to their own upon a permanent basis. Whenever deep, sustaining principles, and new ones at that, come to the assistance of an industry that may give hope of better things right along.

Better freight regulations under the new rate bill is one of these. The reclamation of millions of acres of desert lands costing to date $40,000,000, and most of it Eastern money, is having a great regulating influence in the financial balance. Rural telephones are said to be saving the farmers of the country in time-saving and marketing intelligence, $50,000,000 annually. The discovery of a dry-farming process or practice is doing wonders for the semi-arid lands of the country. Denaturizing alcohol may add hundreds of millions to the value of waste and unmarketable products of the farm. A process of making all grades of paper from cotton stalks will cause the paper trust to sit up and take notice of another wonderful industrial change. Even Kansas, with her almost unbearable prosperity, has discovered how to make soap from sunflower seed, and wherever we follow the wonderful inroads of steam, electricity, gasoline highway improvement, we find some new invasion of good things for the farm. Science is turning to the land, because it may have exhausted some other lines of investigation; practice has improved, because it pays. People are returning to the land because it is healthful and fashionable. It is little wonder, with so much going landward, that we cannot predict the future from the past.

Fumigation Failures.

EVERY one conversant with the present status of fumigation knows that the use of cyanide in orchard work has been brought down to a state of efficiency never before reached since this method of scale control was discovered. This, with the high business capacity of a majority of the contracting fumigators and the willingness of the growers to pay for first-class work, will make a most satisfactory showing when the fruit is ready for the packing-house this season. Hence we may look for unusually clean fruit the coming year. But with all this there are contracting fumigators in the field who seem to have learned nothing of the better methods of doing this work and are grinding away upon the old hit-and-miss lines that brought the use of cyanide into such disrepute a few years ago. As an example of this slack work, an orchardist came to the horticultural officers of Los Angeles county recently stating that he had an offer to fumigate his trees at 15 cents each, the contractor to furnish the material and cover the trees for that price. He was told that this was a fair offer provided the contractor used enough material. He further requested that the whole proposition be investigated by the officers, and it was done, with the following results:

Investigation showed that 9 cents' worth of material at wholesale prices should be used on an average for each tree to do thorough work, and that the fumigator could make good profit at the rate of 6 cents for covering each tree. This would bring the price to 15 cents per tree—a fair price to the grower and the operator. But see what the fumigator proposed to do. When asked the dosage he would average to the tree, he gave it in material that would cost him 5¼ cents per tree, leaving him 9¾ cents for covering each tree—a charge of at least 50 per cent. more than a fair price. The grower having in this case asked the commissioners to interfere, the duty of the latter was plain. But further than this, there is something to say upon this burning question for the protection of growers. The horticultural laws make the commissioners the custodians of all trees and plants infected with insect pests, prescribing the duty of requiring the destruction of damaging insects, and the laws giving the officials the right to go upon any premises at any time to make inspection without becoming trespassers. This gives the office a public capacity, and hence a general supervision over anything relating to the disinfection of trees. If there may be any doubt upon this point, it may be removed by a further perusal of the law. After trees have been treated and the process has not been satisfactory to the officials, they are specifically authorized to serve notice at once to have the work done again. Hence the commissioners have a right to know in advance whether in their judgment a process or dosage may be effective in the destruction of the insects, and they become ex-officio a party to every contract that may be made within their territory for the disinfection of trees. Happily a large majority of the contracting fumigators are trying to do the right thing by the orchardists, but there are enough of the ignorant, or careless, or the dishonest contractors to make sad work with the shipping qualities of hundreds of carloads of oranges and lemons the coming season, and not only bring unnecessary expense and loss to the individual grower, but bring down the general reputation and price of the whole output of fruit. Happily the growers themselves are taking notice of the delinquencies of some of the fumigators, and better work may be exacted from even the poorest of them.

Controlling Tuberculosis.

TUBERCULOSIS is one of the most prevalent and destructive of cattle diseases. It is an infectious, specific malady, the tubercle bacillus after its introduction multiplying enormously in the lungs, lymphatic glands, the intestines, liver and other parts of the animal affected. The course of the disease is of a few months, a year or longer as the surroundings or resistant qualities of the animal affects the progress of the attack. It is fatal in most cases in time, but occasional recoveries occur without treatment. The most successful method of handling tuberculosis originated with Prof. Bang, [illegible] scientific veterinary of Copenhagen, and the world [illegible] him a debt of gratitude for discovering a means of eradicating this dread disease without total loss to the stockman in whose herd it may get a hold. Without tuberculin it would be impossible to apply the [illegible] method of eradicating the disease.

Tuberculin is not a cure or a preventive of tuberculosis; it is merely the vehicle for testing the presence [illegible] absence of the malady. Tuberculin is the concentrated liquid in which the real bacteria have multiplied [illegible] no more can be produced. After the cultures that produce the disease have multiplied in the media to [illegible] fullest extent the media is heated thoroughly and [illegible]tered by a process that removes all the bacteria, the [illegible]trate being condensed over a water bath. This [illegible] is tuberculin, and it cannot produce tuberculosis [illegible]cause all the tubercles have been killed, or removed [illegible] filtration. Tuberculin thus produced has the power [illegible] test the presence of the disease when injected into [illegible] circulation of the suspected animal. If the animal [illegible] tuberculosis a decided rise of temperature will [illegible] a few hours after the injection; if there is no disease [illegible] the animal, no increase of temperature is ever observed. The tuberculin has never been known to produce [illegible] bad effects upon the animal, and is the most [illegible] test of disease that is known to medical science.

As to the Bang method of eradicating tuberculosis, [illegible] herd is first tested with the tuberculin. The animals that are in bad condition are killed. The reacting (diseased) animals that show no physical evidence of [illegible] malady are isolated and kept for breeding purposes. The offspring from the reacting cows are promptly removed from their dams and fed milk from the [illegible] reacting (healthy) cows, or the pasteurized milk [illegible] the reacting ones. The milk of the reacting cows [illegible] pasteurization is used for human food.

If any of the isolated cows give evidence of the disease advancing, such as enlarged glands or emaciation, they are slaughtered. The non-reacting animals [illegible] tested from time to time, and if any individuals [illegible] they are placed with the isolated ones. The calves [illegible] are raised from the reacting cows and which fail to react to tuberculin are placed with the sound herd. [illegible] this method the disease of tuberculosis has been [illegible]tirely eliminated from some of the largest dairy [illegible] in Europe. The prevalence of this disease may [illegible] known from the records of one section. Before the Bang system of purifying the herds had been applied the tests showed that out of 39,140 animals 14,25[illegible] were afflicted with tuberculosis. After a period of five [illegible] of this method, only 4181 were tainted in any degree with tuberculosis.

Hill's Ominous Future.

JAMES J. HILL, the great railroad magnate [illegible] sounded an alarm that is of peculiar interest to the American farmer, and well might its principal note [illegible]ceive the attention of the economists of the country [illegible] people generally. His predictions that the [illegible] coal supplies will not last fifty years, that the [illegible] may not last a half century, and that the present [illegible]eration may see the exhaustion of the iron mines [illegible] entirely probable, for the disappearance of these [illegible]modities may be measured with reasonable [illegible] But his prophecy that we shall have a wheat famine [illegible] a few years, or at least not enough wheat for our [illegible] consumption, should be received with great allowance. Mr. Hill, though a practical farmer, is evidently [illegible] acquainted with the possibilities of our American [illegible] or the progress of the last few years in nursing it [illegible] to its old-time productiveness.

The fact is, land has gone out of the productive [illegible] more from physical debility than from [illegible] exhaustion. Lands farmed for 100 years have probably lost less than 10 per cent. of their potash from [illegible] usage. The soil may have been washed away, [illegible]mus carried off and many of its available elements [illegible]moved, and yet contain in the subsoil a practically [illegible]exhaustible supply of plant food. If these [illegible] mines of fertility can be made available by [illegible] the introduction of humus and the soil bacteria [illegible] leaven and prepare the supplies for crop feeding, [illegible] Hill's predictions will never be realized. That is [illegible] the farmers are beginning to do, and what they [illegible] accomplish with greater achievement to meet the [illegible]gencies pointed to so forcibly by the great [illegible]man.

The farmers of the country are learning that [illegible] of the soil, and crop productions are merely [illegible] and not one thing. A soil may be as rich as in [illegible] days, and yet not produce even fair crops under [illegible] best extraneous culture possible to give it. This [illegible] illustrated in one great agricultural practice with [illegible] I am familiar. In the early days the wheat land [illegible] Southern Illinois, with their ages of available [illegible]lation would not average 25 bushels to the acre. [illegible] seventy-five years of washing, and humus-dispelling [illegible]ture, these lands produced as high as forty-five [illegible] of wheat, and whole sections averaged over thirty [illegible]els to the acre. Lands with one year of green [illegible]nous manuring followed by two crops of wheat [illegible]ducing in the three years over sixty bushels, where [illegible] made about forty bushels in the same time under [illegible] old method of farming. This is the new culture [illegible] removes the fear of famine predicted by Mr. Hill; [illegible] new farming that is making the land more fruitful [illegible] it was when the earth was new; the new method [illegible] last summer produced wheat weighing sixty-five [illegible] to the "stroked" bushel.

Gardening

Mildewing Roses.

A ROSE grower of San Pedro complains of th usually persistent attack of mildew upon her plants this season. This fungus is more prev of some seasons than others, and the location has s thing to do with the virulence of the disease. much watering or the very irregular use of water induce the attack. Watering with cold water of a hot day is also conducive to the spread of the fu Regular, even treatment is good, yet if the trouble pears in spite of care an occasional spraying with deaux mixture will suppress it. Dry sulphur is easily applied and is as effective. When condit favorable to the growth of mildew are present cont ally, such varieties as the Reine Marie Henriett the Ramblers should not be planted at all. Form Californians did not plant roses unusually subjec this malady, but the use of fungicides has made most susceptible practically free from the disease

Parsnips not in Favor.

PARSNIPS are not largely grown in California. T considerations may be involved in an explanation this fact, one is that our winter supply of fresher ve tables relieves us from dependence upon root boili which is the staple resource of so many dwellers in c climates; another is that the parsnip, if sown early, not always content to remain dormant and crisp months, as it does beneath the snow. It quickly sponds to our winter warmth and moisture and sta a second growth, which renders the root woody a flavorless. It is quite possible for parsnip lovers warm, moist regions to overcome this by midsumm sowing, or it can be prevented in other places by d ging the roots and storing them in boxes or barrels sand in a dry, cool place, and it really should be urg that this be done more widely, because those who not fitted by location or inclination to start fall grow of vegtables for winter eating, should have a good su ply of parsnips, which are to most tastes delicious. is not to be expected in this climate that the parsn will be called upon to render the important service th it does in the East whenever the snow covers the grou in the winter or spring, because at that very time have abundance of fresh vegetables hardy in our cl mate.—[California Vegetables.

California Squashes.

WE have in California probably all the kinds o squash known to horticulture. Some amateur take special interest in such collections, and scores o varieties representing the whole gourd family hav been shown in State fair exhibits. And yet the bul of the product is made of a very few varieties. Of th bush form which are relied upon for summer squash the scollops comprise most of the crop; both the whit and yellow being grown—the former preferred. Th yellow crookneck is also grown to some extent. Th English marrow has a few warm advocates.

Of the winter squash for table use the Hubbard and Marblehead are used. The field squash is made of several varieties. The California Marrowfat, a splendid, orange-colored squash, takes the lead, while associated with it in the same field may be found the Mammoth Chile, which is usually the sort, more or less pure which yields the largest specimens. There is also a very large winter crookneck, very prolific and rather more hardy in trying situations, but not so good in keeping qualities as the preceding. Here and there may be found a field of old-fashioned New England pumpkins, and fair exhibits usually bring to light both the Etamps and Tours pumpkins, but the large orange and light olive fruits are named squashes in the California vernacular and are preferred. There is much confusion both in the term "squash" and "pumpkin," and there are many chance hybrids which await analysis by some cucurbitous specialist.—[Wickson.

Desert Plants.

A GENTLEMAN connected with the Carnegie Institute will leave this country shortly on an extended exploration of the deserts of Central and Southern Mexico to study the storage of water by certain plants growing in those regions. It has developed that in places where there is only a slight, irregular rainfall, plants peculiar to the district have no special reservoirs for the storage of water, while in regions where the rainfall is confined to brief regular periods, plants are found which are provided with various devices for storing water for consumption during dry spells. An example of this provision of nature has been discovered in a "guarequi," a relative of the squash and pumpkin, which flourishes in the desert of Sonora, a locality in which all the rain falls in a period of six weeks. The base of the stem of the plant is swollen to form a hard, woody structure, in time reaching the size of a large squash. The gray of the sands of the Sonora is imitated in the color of the covering of the mass, presenting the appearance of a worn gray boulder projecting above the sand, while the structure is as hard as stone. This structure catches the rain and holds it, doling out the precious drops to the plant during the dry spell following. At the close of the rainy season the vine-like stems of the plant die down, the small roots dry up, and the plant, in the form of its tuber, lies dormant on the burning sands throughout the long hot months following. When the rainy season again returns the plant reforms its roots, stems, leaves and flowers completes its short season of activity and then resumes its inactive life

Mildewing Roses.

A ROSE grower of San Pedro complains of the unusually persistent attack of mildew upon her rose plants this season. This fungus is more prevalent at some seasons than others, and the location has something to do with the virulence of the disease. Too much watering or the very irregular use of water may induce the attack. Watering with cold water of a very hot day is also conducive to the spread of the fungus. Regular, even treatment is good, yet if the trouble appears in spite of care an occasional spraying with Bordeaux mixture will suppress it. Dry sulphur is more easily applied and is as effective. When conditions favorable to the growth of mildew are present continually, such varieties as the Reine Marie Henriette or the Ramblers should not be planted at all. Formerly Californians did not plant roses unusually subject to this malady, but the use of fungicides has made the most susceptible practically free from the disease .

Parsnips not in Favor.

PARSNIPS are not largely grown in California. Two considerations may be involved in an explanation of this fact, one is that our winter supply of fresher vegetables relieves us from dependence upon root boiling, which is the staple resource of so many dwellers in cold climates; another is that the parsnip, if sown early, is not always content to remain dormant and crisp for months, as it does beneath the snow. It quickly responds to our winter warmth and moisture and starts a second growth, which renders the root woody and worthless. It is quite possible for parsnip lovers in warm, moist regions to overcome this by midsummer sowing, or it can be prevented in other places by digging the roots and storing them in boxes or barrels of sand in a dry, cool place, and it really should be urged that this be done more widely, because those who are fitted by location or inclination to start fall growth of vegetables for winter eating, should have a good supply of parsnips, which are to most tastes delicious. It is not to be expected in this climate that the parsnip will be called upon to render the important service that it does in the East whenever the snow covers the ground in the winter or spring, because at that very time we have abundance of fresh vegetables hardy in our climate.—[California Vegetables.

California Squashes.

WE have in California probably all the kinds of squash known to horticulture. Some amateurs take special interest in such collections, and scores of varieties representing the whole gourd family have been shown in State fair exhibits. And yet the bulk of the product is made of a very few varieties. Of the bush form which are relied upon for summer squash, the scollops comprise most of the crop; both the white and yellow being grown—the former preferred. The yellow crookneck is also grown to some extent. The English marrow has a few warm advocates.

Of the winter squash for table use the Hubbard and Marblehead are used. The field squash is made of several varieties. The California Marrowfat, a splendid, orange-colored squash, takes the lead, while associated with it in the same field may be found the Mammoth Chili, which is usually the sort, more or less pure which yields the largest specimens. There is also a very large winter crookneck, very prolific and rather more hardy in trying situations, but not so good in keeping qualities as the preceding. Here and there may be found a field of old-fashioned New England pumpkins, and fair exhibits usually bring to light both the Etampes and Tours pumpkins, but the large orange and light olive fruits are named squashes in the California vernacular and are preferred. Some of these plants have accomplished this feat five years in succession.

Vegetables Under Tents.

AN eastern agricultural professor evolved the idea of growing a number of vegetables under tent covering to determine the effect of such partial shade. With transplanted lettuce grown under the tent the average weight of each head was 6.57 ounces, while that grown in the open weighed 6.19 ounces. When seed was used, the weight of the heads grown inside the tent was 14 ounces and outside the tent 9.8 ounces. It was found much easier to transplant lettuce under the tent than in the open. It grew faster up to the point of heading, but did not form as firm a head as those grown outside, nor was the quality quite as good. Cauliflower grown under the tent made better growth throughout the season than when grown outside. The plants were higher and the growth of the leaves much stronger, while the yield was 140 per cent. greater inside than outside. Under the tent the cauliflower was less attacked by insects and the heads were not so likely to discolor if not tied up just at the proper time. With celery a smaller percentage of waste resulted from that grown under the tent than from that in the open, and the stalks were a little softer. Celery grown outside was a little shorter, and more stocky.—[Field and Farm.

Shipping Seed Corn.

THE classification committee of railways will soon have before it again the question of shipment of crated seed corn in the ear. At a former consideration of this matter the committee seemed to be opposed to crate shipment. Long ago seed corn buyers rebelled at shelled seed corn, finding it in that shape so mixed with poor seed as to make it very undesirable, and in late years refuse to order it except in the ear, so that it may be in shape to inspect. Practically there is no safe way of shipment of seed corn in the ear except by the crate method, for if packed in tight and unventilated methods there is great danger of damaging its vitality, and nobody understands this so well as seed-corn men. When crated, the ears go in the finest condition, and this method of freighting has become popular with buyers as well as shippers, because both know the value of ventilation so well. Certainly it would be a great mistake to discriminate in any way against this method of freighting corn in the ear for seed, and surely if these reasons are made apparent to the classification committee they would defer to the universal wishes of the corn growers, and "Corn is King," let it be borne in mind.—[Indiana Farmer.

California Roses.

CALIFORNIA field-grown, budded roses stand supreme for constitutional qualities, such as a strong root development, vigorous habit of growth, strong drouth-resisting qualities, and profuse blooming characteristics. Why? Because grown in the open field under a California sun, in a soil and climate that stands second to none for luxuriance and development in plant life; indeed, so marked is this that our field-grown roses evince a development and strength when planted under conditions possessed by no others grown under protection in the East or North. It is a well-known fact that a one-year-old California field-grown rose shows size and hardiness the equal of two-year-old plants in the East.

How to Plant.—The rose delights in an open, airy situation; all types are partial to clay loam, but will succeed in any ordinary soil if enriched with well-rotted barnyard manure. Dig up the soil thoroughly to a depth of twelve or fifteen inches. When the bush is planted, press the soil firmly over the roots. Make a basin around the plant, and water freely to exclude air, and settle the earth.

Pruning.—Operations are best performed during the dormant season. Most roses do better if moderately pruned. We usually remove from one-half to two-thirds of the past year's growth, and all weak or decayed wood should be entirely cut out. As a rule the more vigorous the variety the less it should be pruned. Besides spring pruning, many of the Hybrid Perpetuals require to be pruned as soon as their first blossoming is over, in order to grow new wood for later blooming. It is always the new growth which gives flowers.

If convenient to do so, it is a good plan to plant late in the day or during cloudy weather. To begin with, have your ground well prepared; good-sized liberal holes dug to accommodate roots without cramping or bending; make the hole considerably larger than necessary, and then partially fill it in with finely pulverized, mellow soil, so as to afford a good mellow surrounding for the roots to start in; the use of good surface soil or decayed sod or something of this nature is good for the filling in and to place about the roots, being a little richer and more mellow generally than the soil removed in digging.

Handle your plants in a shady spot and protect them from dry winds; keep the roots covered well with moist soil after unpacking until ready to plant.

Now set your plant in the hole prepared for it, sifting in with the hand finely-pulverized soil previously prepared, slowly and press down firmly as you go, that each root and part of root may come in firm contact with the soil; continue this operation in layers until covered to within a little less than the final desired depth as it stood in the nursery, and work up the surface soil nice and loose. If a few inches of mulch is now applied about the plants (old litter, leaves, leaf mould, clippings from the lawn) it will keep the ground of a more even temperature and prevent drying out; this is much preferable to continual watering. No manure of any kind should be used in the soil at planting time, as it is apt to burn off the new fibers as they start from the roots; manure may be applied from the top after plants are in full foliage. If planting is done in very warm weather it is a good plan to shade the plants for a few days, thus helping to prevent the tops from starting before the roots get hold of the soil. If you are troubled with alkali in your soil, you should prepare for proper drainage before planting. This may be done by making a good-sized excavation so as to permit of filling in at the bottom with eight inches to a foot of cobblestones—directly under where your roses are to be planted. This makes excellent drainage and will prevent the alkali raising.

Plant your roses where they will have plenty of sunshine; where you can control watering; where you can properly cultivate and where a good circulation of air is to be had; give them the best of cultivation.

Do not overwater your roses; keep the ground mulched, or at least, the soil worked up nice and loose, and water say once in ten days or a month, according to nature of soil, etc.; overwatering only produces mildew, rust and disease; water in the morning—never at night. Climatic conditions, sudden changes, continuous foggy weather, etc., will sometimes produce mildew, etc., regardless of every care, but even so, you can aid in warding it off by proper care. Flowers of sulphur applied dry when foliage is damp will check mildew if applied as it first appears. "Black Spot" and red rust are also caused by overwatering, or unfavorable weather; foliage once thus infected cannot be cured, and it should be removed and burned. Aphis or Green Fly is generally prevalent during the spring months; these are not serious, and regardless of the many "remedies" which can be applied, such as soapsuds, kerosene emulsion, tobacco juice, etc., they will return for the time being, and keep coming. The most simple remedy we know of is to use a good strong spray of water from the hose which easily washes them off; repeat as often as necessary.—[California Cultivat

SAND CASTLES.

Dolly, dear, you recollect,
How with childish hand,
We, fair castles, would erect
On the level strand?
You, in saucy pinafore,
I, with urchin spade,
Wondrous castles, those of yore,
By some wave low laid.

Back that was, full twenty years
(Pardon, if you will),
But you're partial, it appears,
To the pastime still.
True, no longer have you me,
Dolly, for your mate,
But you have a vis-a-vis
Whom you higher rate.

For I note you sitting there
By the pleasant tide,
Charlie Rocks, or Lord de Where,
Lolling at your side;
And your costume is as short
As I ever knew;
And you're faithful to the sport
Quite the summer through.

Dear, I do not recollect,
In those days of old,
You were such an architect
As I now behold:
Castles—Yankee, English, French,
Plan you; gilded, tall!
Sure, misfortune cannot drench
Shall not drench them all.

EASY WAY TO TELL A DIAMOND.

The jeweler made a small dot, like a period, on a piece of white paper with a lead pencil. Then he held a large diamond over the dot.

"Look through this," he said.

Through the diamond the dot looked precisely the same as before.

"Now look through this," he said, taking another stone.

Through the second stone the dot was transformed to three dots.

"There," the jeweler said, "is an easy way for the average man to tell a real diamond from an imitation. A dot on a piece of paper, looked at through a real diamond, is the same as before; but, looked at through a fake, it shows double or triple, or it appears blurred, scattered."

A BAD BREAK.

The famous actress in her rage was like a tigress.

"What do you mean," she cried, "by giving to the newspapers such a portrait of me as this?"

"But, madam," said the timid press agent, "is not that the 1882 portrait that you ordered?"

"Idiot!" she shrieked. "I didn't say an 1882 portrait. I said an 1872 one. Do you want me to look like an old woman?"

How to Be Young at Sixty-five.

THE following article is contributed to The Times by Myrtle Hyde Darling of Cambridge, Mass. The suggestions are worth far more than many high-priced instructions sold by teachers of physical culture:

How to circumvent the old gentleman of the glass and scythe? How, at 65, to look a score of years younger? These are the problems solved by Sanford Bennett of Alameda, Cal. With an athlete's muscles, the health of a Spartan, and greater vigor than others many years his junior, this hale and hearty old gentleman, free from the feebleness and wrinkles common to his years, laughs at the dogmatic statements of Dr. Osler, the originator of his own system, in his own words a "lazy man's system," Mr. Bennett has built himself up from a weak dyspeptic to his present state of abundant health and energy.

Alameda is a rapidly-growing city of some 20,000 inhabitants, near San Francisco, and is the home of an unusual organization known as the "Hundred Year Club," each of whose members is striving to attain the century mark. Mr. Bennett's remarkable development at 65, due to quiet methods of exercise, such as the weakest might undertake, bids fair to carry him past the mark.

Mr. Bennett, at 49, was in very poor condition physically, practically an invalid, and with fear of his approaching years decided to undertake methodically and persistently the system of exercises he follows today. The result has been that at 65, his body has regained all the elasticity it possessed at 35, with much greater strength and more perfect health than he had ever enjoyed before. In Mr. Bennett's own words "This improvement is possible to any one not organically wrong, who will follow faithfully the methods which I have adopted."

The remarkable result of Mr. Bennett's experiment does not lie in any extraordinary development to which he has attained, but in the rejuvenation at an age approaching the biblical three-score-and-ten, of his already aging body.

The human body is, in modern science, a vast cellular system, each little cell being a life by itself, brought into existence through the food and drink which the stomach assimilates and transforms. These little cells live a brief life and die, and, having become dead matter, should be thrown out of the system; for, if they should remain, the muscles and organs are clogged, and a body so loaded with dead cells, is an old body, whatever its age in years.

The secret of elasticity is thus to free the system of worn-out and clogging matter. There is a process provided by nature which does this far better than drugs or medicines. It is simply the alternate contracting and relaxing of the muscles. Mr. Bennett's explanation is simple. "When any muscle is contracted, the dead cells and worn-out matter are mechanically forced from the muscles, contracted into the glandular and venous structures, and thence carried off by the natural excretions of the body—the thousands of capillaries or microscopic arteries being cleared. Then, when the muscle is relaxed, the blood flows back through the arteries and capillaries, carrying with it new material to replace the wornout matter expelled. This new supply being in excess of the worn-out matter, it is easy to see how muscles grow through exercise."

To obtain the development which exercise brings, it is customary to resort to a gymnasium where a variety of motions of more or less activity and violence are necessary. For a man who has reached the half-century mark this requires considerable moral courage. This Mr. Bennett frankly admits he did not possess.

"It occurred to me, being a somewhat lazy party, that the process could be gone through without any mechanical appliance—even while lying in bed, or in a recumbent position. To test the theory I invented a series of exercises, consisting of muscular contractions and relaxations, which I practice while I lie in bed in the morning. These exercises are so designed as to exercise every part of the body, and I speedily found that equal benefit resulted as though they were practised in an elaborate gymnasium, and in athletic costume."

Mr. Bennett claims other advantages for his system beside its convenience and comfort. The heart is never overtaxed, for no abnormal strain is possible; a regular hour of exercise can be adhered to; improvement is much more rapid. The vital force required to keep the body erect if exercise is taken in a standing position can be thrown into any muscle you may be endeavoring to develop. Mr. Bennett also believes that growth is more favorable in a certain degree of heat than in the cold.

His routine of exercise is taken from 5:30 to 6:30 in the morning, and is as follows:

"Lying on my right side, I grasp my left arm between the elbow and shoulder with my right hand, and alternately contract and relax the biceps 100 times. Then clasping the hands over my left knee I strain upon it twenty-five times. The first exercise will speedily develop the biceps and triceps; the second the loins and shoulder muscles.

"Still lying upon the right side, I raise my head and feet at the same time fifty times, developing the muscles of the sides, also the abdominal muscles. Grasping the left foot with the left hand and straining the body in that position twenty-five times develops the muscles of the sides and loins. I have a parallel bar across the head of the bed. This bar I grasp with my left hand and strain upon it fifty times, exercising the muscles of the left shoulder. Turn over on the left side and go through the same process with the muscles of that side.

Then lying upon the back work the hips alternately fifty times. This will cure the most obstinate case of constipation, as it accelerates the action of the bowels. Grasp both elbows with each hand and strain the muscles in that position, which tends to broaden the shoulders. With the strain fully on, raise and lower the shoulders 100 times. Then catch the parallel bar at the head of the bed, straining or tensing the muscles fifty times—same motion as chinning a bar in a gymnasium, and the same effect, i. e., develops the shoulder muscles and upper muscles of the chest and back. To develop the muscles of the neck, place the clasped hands behind the head, fifty motions, straining backward. This will develop the muscles of the neck wonderfully in a very short time.

"At this point I usually rest about five minutes, and, catching my hair with both hands, vigorously pull and massage the scalp. I would say that my hair was falling out very badly when I began these exercises, and it was evident that I would speedily become bald. Upon investigation and a course of reading upon the subject, I was convinced that falling-out of the hair was due to weakness of the microscopic muscles which hold every separate hair in place, and also to defective circulation. I reasoned that all muscles grow when they are exercised, the same rule must apply to the microscopic muscles of the scalp, which are attached to every hair, and I at once commenced pulling the hair all over my scalp while resting from my exercises. The result has been more satisfactory than I expected. My hair has ceased falling out, a healthy growth has resulted, the scalp is perfectly healthy, and, while I do not believe it is possible to prevent the hair turning gray as the years advance, I am convinced that this is an infallible means of promoting the growth of the hair, and if the scalp is kept perfectly clean and so exercised, any one who will practise this method persistently will have the same satisfactory results. And now to go back to the exercises.

"Being troubled with a weak stomach, I decided to strengthen the abdominal muscles, and at the same time reduce a deposit of fat over the stomach, which was becoming somewhat weighty. I found that by alternately massaging these layers of fat and then tensing the abdominal muscles, and striking my stomach rapidly with my clenched fists, the fat readily disappeared and at the same time my digestion vastly improved.

"To increase the size of the lungs I practice filling them with air while lying on my back, striking my sides rapidly with my elbows. This is a capital method of accelerating the circulation and enlarging the lungs. I also practice deep breathing while I am walking."

Tiresome and complicated as this may seem at first, Mr. Bennett says emphatically that the system is toned up, the world seems brighter, elasticity and strength are acquired, and the exercises are soon accomplished with as little effort as walking.

Pedestrianism as an exercise Mr. Bennett believes overrated, since the part of the body where the vital organs lie, that part above the hips, is very little affected. As he has trained himself and others for numerous footraces many years before, and after beginning his present system, his judgment is worthy of consideration.

As to diet, he believes it is not a question of what one eats as much as of how it is eaten. We all eat too much, he says, but in his own case he is careful that every mouthful is thoroughly masticated. If food is not properly chewed in the mouth the stomach has no teeth to complete the process.

In spite of the fine physical condition maintained by this system of exercise, signs of old age are not kept by it from the face, and wrinkles will appear unless some method of prevention is adopted. Massage is commonly resorted to, but Mr. Bennett criticises it strongly. He says:

"The skin is not very elastic; say, rather, it is somewhat like a kid glove. When the glove is new it fits the hand closely, just as the skin of your face fitted the underlying muscles in youth; but after the glove gets worn for a while it falls into wrinkles and folds. It is evident that any rubbing or massaging of that glove on your hand would make it still more wrinkled. So the skin of the human face is liable to suffer in the same way from massage as usually practised.

"After shaving, I wash my face with a face brush, using the best barber soap. I dry it thoroughly and then take one-half teaspoonful of the best California olive oil, rub it into the skin, and then slap the cheeks vigorously with the palms of both hands, which will bring back smoothness of surface, as well as a healthy color. To obtain the smooth surface characteristic of youth, tense the skin by opening the mouth wide, which will give a firm surface; then rub vigorously with the palms of the hands; afterward rub dry with a soft towel. You will then find the skin very clean, and glowing with a healthy color. These facial exercises I practised as an experiment, and was astonished to find that my face rounded out and the wrinkles due to shrunken muscles disappeared.

"The daily tepid bath, I believe, as it does not lower

URICSOL
URIC ACID SOLVENT
A CURE FOR RHEUMATISM
URISCOL CONTAINS NO ALCOHOL
Uricsol is not only a cure for rheumatism, eradicating the disease and thus removing the cause of suffering, but it goes further, dissolving and carrying out of the system deposits in the joints where they have been accumulating for years. And this result is accomplished without the destruction or injury of sound, healthy body tissues, particularly those of the digestive tract. On the contrary, the general action of the remedy is tonic and strengthening.

Stuffing Consumptives.

THE following communication comes from He
A. Ross, of Pasadena (who should not write on bo sides of the paper:
"My observations among 'lungers' (of whom I
one) is that they have no appetite. Sanatorium tre ment is to stuff them every three hours. Can the sto ach be forced to digest by forcing food into it in exces
Both the Times and the 'Stuffed Club' claim that wh will make a well man sick, would make a sick m sicker. You stuff a well man with food every thr hours, and he will become sick. All sanatoria advoca stuffing. Do they achieve any cures, or good results stuffing?
"You will oblige very much a good many readers b sides myself, who also have no appetite, and who have use various other means of nourishing the body, by se tling the question whether a pound of steak heated suff cient to draw therefrom a cup of juice by a meat juic presser, is nourishing or not. The meat, after the juic is pressed out, is absolutely dry, and has a grayis color, and looks exactly like a piece of meat that ha been thoroughly masticated. Notwithstanding th above, ehere are quite a few doctors who claim tha there is no nourishment in it. Some claim that the al bumen remains in the meat. Others say it is only water, others say mostly uric acid, etc., etc.
"I take the liberty to say that this is a question con cerning the public in general, and not an individual case, as thousands like myself use it, thinking they are benefited."

"All sanatoria" do not advocate stuffing for consumptives, although, unfortunately, a great majority of them do. It is a most absurd and in the end a dangerous practice. For a time, the stuffing process adds weight to many of the patients. Then comes a reaction, clogging of the liver, general disgust of food, and a decline to a worse position than that of the patient before the stuffing began. Strange as it may appear to the reader, a fast is far better for a consumptive than stuffing. The editor knows of cases that have been cured by a fast with fresh air and subsequent correct diet. If the digestive organs are unable to assimilate food—and that is true of most consumptive cases—then what is the use of stuffing food into the stomach? The true course is to build up the system, by the breathing of pure air day and night, together with such gentle exercise as the patient is able to take, and plain, nourishing food according to appetite, including the important organic salts, so much ignored by dietitians. For this reason the patient should eat plenty of fresh fruit and greens, as they abound in these salts. The recently introduced vegetable cure has a sound basis. In this manner the system becomes gradually able to digest and assimilate more food, as the days roll by.

As to the other question, about the meat, it is true there is some nourishment, including most of the albumen, in meat from which the blood has been extracted, but most of the organic salts that are necessary to build up the body are found in the blood and bones. On the other hand, most of the uric acid is found in the blood. So there you are. If you eat the meat without the blood, you are ill-nourished, and if you include the blood, you generally fill your system with uric acid, which brings on rheumatism and other ailments. Even if you eat the bloody flesh, you lack the minerals contained in the bones, which you can't very well chew. Evidently, therefore, flesh food is intended only as a nourishment for the carnivora, who catch the animal, tear its quivering flesh to pieces, and chew it up, blood, flesh and bones, on which they are perfectly nourished, after their kind, although the lives of the carnivora are not long.

Sciatica.

SCIATICA belongs to the rheumatic family of complaints. It shows itself as pain in the course of the sciatica nerve, around the hip joint. Unusual exposures to wet and cold are usually the proximate causes of the complaint, in this, as in all forms of rheumatic affections, but no amount of exposure of the kind could produce sciatica, or rheumatism, unless the system was in a state of obstruction, exhaustion or congestion, brought about by errors in living.

The most potent treatment of this ailment is a thorough course of hydropathy, combined with light, nonstimulating diet, including a liberal proportion of the separating foods, such as fresh fruits and greens. Sci-the vitality like a cold bath does, is the safest, no matter what the reaction induced by the latter.

"To those who have a tendency toward acid rheumatism the method of eliminating the worn-out or dead matter from the system is of great benefit, for in the process of systematically exercising all of the muscles of the body by the alternate contractions and relaxations, the uric acid which the kidneys have failed to pass, and which is the cause of the trouble, finds no chance of lodgement, being compelled by the persistent agitation to 'move on,' and is finally expelled by the secretions of the body before it has found time and place to settle and form into the minute crystals which, like so many splinters, are the cause of the acute pains characteristic of acid rheumatism."

Mr. Bennett sums up most feelingly the results and advantages of his system. "If at 65 I have been able to preserve all of the elasticity and with it far more strength than I possessed at 35; in short, if I have rejuvenated a body that was once old, I am certain that any one who will practice it the same way can achieve the same satisfactory results. It has brought to me splendid health, strength, and elasticity, and I feel confident that the duration of my life will be greatly prolonged."

Stuffing Consumptives.

THE following communication comes from Henry A. Ross, of Pasadena (who should not write on both sides of the paper:

"My observations among 'lungers' (of whom I am one) is that they have no appetite. Sanatorium treatment is to stuff them every three hours. Can the stomach be forced to digest by forcing food into it in excess? Both the Times and the 'Stuffed Club' claim that what will make a well man sick, would make a sick man worse. You stuff a well man with food every three hours and he will become sick. All sanatoria advocate stuffing. Do they achieve any cures, or good results by stuffing?

"You will oblige very much a good many readers besides myself, who also have no appetite, and who have to use various other means of nourishing the body, by settling the question whether a pound of steak heated sufficiently to draw therefrom a cup of juice by a meat juice press, is nourishing or not. The meat, after the juice is pressed out, is absolutely dry, and has a grayish color, and looks exactly like a piece of meat that has been thoroughly masticated. Notwithstanding the above, there are quite a few doctors who claim that there is no nourishment in it. Some claim that the albumen remains in the meat. Others say it is only water, others say mostly uric acid, etc., etc.

"I take the liberty to say that this is a question concerning the public in general, and not an individual one, as thousands like myself use it, thinking they are benefited."

"All sanatoria" do not advocate stuffing for consumptives, although, unfortunately, a great majority of them do. It is a most absurd and in the end a dangerous practice. For a time, the stuffing process adds weight to many of the patients. Then comes a reaction, clogging of the liver, general disgust of food, and a decline to a worse position than that of the patient before the stuffing began. Strange as it may appear to the reader, fasting is far better for a consumptive than stuffing. The writer knows of cases that have been cured by a fast with fresh air and subsequent correct diet. If the digestive organs are unable to assimilate food—and that is the case of most consumptive cases—then what is the use of stuffing food into the stomach? The true course is to build up the system, by the breathing of pure air day and night, together with such gentle exercise as the patient is able to take, and plain, nourishing food according to appetite, including the important organic salts, so much ignored by dietitians. For this reason the patient should eat plenty of fresh fruit and greens, which abound in these salts. The recently introduced vegetable cure has a sound basis. In this manner the patient becomes gradually able to digest and assimilate food, as the days roll by.

As to the other question, about the meat, it is true that some nourishment, including most of the albumen, is left in meat from which the blood has been extracted, but most of the organic salts that are necessary to build up the body are found in the blood and bones. On the other hand, most of the uric acid is found in the blood. There you are. If you eat the meat without the blood, you are ill-nourished, and if you include the blood, you generally fill your system with uric acid, which brings on rheumatism and other ailments. Evidently, therefore, flesh food is intended only as a nourishment for the carnivora, who catch the animal, tear the quivering flesh to pieces, and chew it up, blood, fibre and bones, on which they are perfectly nourished, after their kind, although the lives of the carnivora are not long.

The Strenuous Life.

THE following excellent short editorial was published in The Times, on a recent week day. As many readers of this department only see the Sunday number, it is here reproduced. It is in line with remarks frequently made in these columns, on the shortsighted foolishness of people who claim that they have no time to take a rest:

"Yesterday you met a man on the street who was doing great things in the world. Today you mentioned his name and was surprised to hear some one say he is 'all in'—the common expression used to designate the fact the person referred to has broken down, that his nerves have snapped, that he has 'lost his grip.'

"If the man is not entirely lost sight of in the rushing, roaring, hurly-burly of the times, some day you may happen to hear that he is dead.

"Fierce and cruel is the pace that we set for ourselves in this mad, greedy age. Our lives pass away from us in a dizzy whirl. One year follows another in such swift succession that we are hardly aware of it until old age is upon us, if, indeed, we are enabled at all to call to our aid sufficient strength and vitality to carry us that far.

"It will do no good, perhaps, to point out the madness of this manner of living. No man seems willing to stop long enough in the race to listen to whoever would direct his attention to the suicidal policy he is pursuing. But if you will watch the passing crowd as it surges onward, day by day through the highways of the world, you will compare it to nothing so much as to a throng of madmen chasing a shadow.

"Now and then you will meet some weary man who tells you, as he rushes along, that he knows how foolish he is, and how tired he is, and how glad he would be to drop out from the race to rest and to think. But he doesn't dare do so. He must keep up with the crowd. You watch him a little farther and you see him stumble. The next man rushes over him. Poor fellow, he's 'all in.'

"Puck was wiser than all the philosophers when he said, 'What fools these mortals be!' "

A Sanatorium Site.

THE editor occasionally receives inquiries from people who think of starting a sanatorium in Southern California. There is certainly a good opening in this section for a score of such establishments—provided, always, that they are properly conducted, including in their methods of treatment all legitimate aids to nature, such as hydropathy, massage, osteopathy, exercise, rest, and suggestive therapeutics, with strict attention to diet, and the exclusion of all drugs.

Any one who might like to acquire a three-story building of sixty rooms, with over two acres of land, in one of the choicest sections of Southern California, thirty miles from Los Angeles, can obtain particulars by writing to the editor.

"Denaturized" Patent Medicines.

THOSE who have been using Peruna and Hostetter's Stomach Bitters for the sake of the alcohol they contain—28 and 48 per cent. respectively—will have to seek some other dope. Last December the Commissioner of Internal Revenue notified the makers of a large number of patent medicines that as their preparations contained too much whisky or raw spirits, they would have to pay a special tax. The American Wine Press says:

"In order to avoid the tax, the manufacturers of 'Peruna' added a cathartic, while 'Hostetter's Bitters' now contains ipecac; and the Internal Revenue Commissioner has ruled that both Peruna and Hostetter's Bitters are unfit for use as a beverage.

"If that is true, will it hurt the sale of Peruna and Hostetter's? How can they be advertised now to induce people to drink them? Do people who need a 'stimulant' want their whisky spoiled by ipecac? And do people who are constipated want the ipecac spoiled by whisky?

Cremation.

A VALUED correspondent writes as follows:

"I have been discussing cremation lately with a good many people, and have been surprised to find so many people in favor of it. Many of them, like myself, had never given the subject any thought until your articles appeared in The Times."

Some people, who have never given the subject any thought, are horrified at the idea of cremation. As recently suggested in these columns, they might, with more reason, be horrified at the idea of being buried underground, if they would only once sit down, and picture to themselves the changes that take place in the human body, soon after it has been confined, in a close casket, to the mercies of mother earth. Such a suggestion is unnecessary, in case of those who have seen a body exhumed, within a few weeks of burial.

Wise Old Hippocrates.

DR. A. N. STARR, of Pasadena, recently sent the editor an artistic booklet, printed in imitation of ancient parchment, entitled "Aphorisms of Hippocrates." It is published by the manufacturers of an "ethical" patent medicine. It is somewhat surprising to find drug manufacturers circulating literature relating to Hippocrates, because he, "the father of medicine," was opposed to drugs. He has recorded this written oath in regard to medical practice:

"No inducement will ever lead me to administer poison, nor will I ever be the author of such a vice."

Care of the Body.

His teachings were the foundation stone of medical science, but somehow the modern disciples of the Great Master have built strange superstructures upon this Hippocratean doctrine that poisons are an abomination to the body.

Hippocrates knew many things which his followers are only just discovering. The late Dr. R. F. Trall wrote:

"The doctrine of crises originated with Hippocrates. He noticed fevers evinced a tendency to terminate on particular days, which he called critical; and he observed that there is a tendency in all diseases to a cure by some eruption or evacuation. His practice was consistently founded on the indication presented by these phenomena. Modern physicians have been most unfortunate in overlooking or disregarding these funudamental truths, which happily are now being reëstablished by the water treatment.

Here are a few extracts from the "aphorisms:"

"When things are at the crisis, or when they have just passed it, neither move the bowels nor make any innovation in the treatment either as regards purgatives, or any other such stimulants."

"Those bodies which have been slowly emaciated, should be slowly recruited, and those which have been quickly emaciated should be quickly recruited."

"Bodies not properly cleansed, the more you nourish the more you injure."

"Persons in good health quickly lose their strength by using purgative medicines, or using bad food."

"An article of food or drink, which is slightly worse, but more palatable, is to be preferred to such as are better but less palatable."

"In persons who have been suspended by the neck and are in a state of insensibility, but not quite dead, those do not recover who have foam at the mouth."

"In autumn diseases are most acute, most mortal, on the whole. The spring is most healthy and least mortal."

"Those cases of epilepsy which come on before puberty may undergo a change; but those which come on after 25 years of age, for the most part terminate in death."

"If you wish to ascertain if a woman be with child, give her hydromel to drink, when she is going to sleep, and has not taken supper, and if she be seized with tormina in the belly she is with child, but otherwise she is not pregnant."

"If a woman do not conceive, and wish to ascertain whether she can conceive, having wrapped her up in blankets, fumigate below, and if it appear that the scent passes through the body to her nostrils and mouth, know that of herself she is not unfruitful."

"It is a bad thing to give milk to persons having headache, and it is also bad to give it in fevers, and to persons whose hypochondria are swelled up and troubled with borborygmi and to thirsty persons; it is bad, also, when given to those who have bilious discharges in acute fevers, and to those who have copious discharges of blood; but it is suitable in phthisical cases, when not attended with very much fever; it is also to be given in fevers of a chronic and weak nature, when none of the aforementioned symptoms are present, and the patients are excessively emaciated."

"Persons disposed to jaundice are not very subject to flatulence."

Hindoo Hocus Pocus.

A WOMAN correspondent, the daughter of an English officer, and born in India, writes that she derived great benefit from courses of lessons in the "science of breathing," from a noted Hindoo. She encloses the following remarks on "rhythmic breathing:"

"If for no other reason than to enlarge our sphere of individual liberty, to determine our psychic state regardless of physical environments, to develop and utilize a good and powerful aura, certain regular exercises are necessary, and primary directions concerning rhythmic, or harmonious breathing, are most useful, and are attracting general attention in America and Europe.

"This regular rhythmic breathing is most important, and in connection with the inhaling and exhaling of pure outer atmosphere, one must concentrate and dwell upon 'Prana,' which is the life force, and pervades the atmosphere, and apart from which, no living organism can be either produced or sustained, and to the extent this Prana or elemental force is rendered subject to the human will is any one enabled to control the elements external to humanity, these elements being no different from the constituents of the human organism.

"The somewhat intricate direction given for harmonic breathing by eastern teachers can be followed only in a measure by occidentalists, as oriental methods may not be well adapted to western students, whose temperaments are different, but all fundamental statements are identical when made by teachers of the true science of Breath the world over.

"Western scientists have been dimly aware of the great principle of Prana, with which the air is charged, but not finding any chemical trace of it, and being unable to make it register on any of their instruments, they treat the theory of Breath with disdain, for being unable to explain this principle, they deny its existence.

"Much science does not deal with the beginning of things, it only deals with manifestation after it has reached a certain point. It deals with nothing, until we have matter in a form which the physical senses can appreciate, or at least, which the imagination, following on the lines of the physical senses, is able to construe."

As the editor recently observed, he does not "take much stock" in these complicated series of breathing exercises, especially those that come from mysterious "Yogis" and others. Some time ago the editor published an article from one of these orientals, in which he claimed that, by exercise, the breath could be forced through holes in the spine!

Why is it that American women, old and young, who are apparently sane in other directions, will fall down and worship some oily "yaller" sensual-looking oriental, in a flowing garb, and rave over his meaningless expositions of mysterious mush?

Theosophy is a development of these oriental cults, although educated Hindoos laugh at American Theosophists. Mrs. Blavatsky laid the plot of her preposterous book, "Isis Unveiled," in the mysterious land of Thibet. Since a British army penetrated to the highlands of Thibet, and forced the priests to open the gates, it has been discovered that the Thibetans are, without any exception, the most filthy people in the world. They never wash themselves, and they live in windowless houses, that are permeated with the rank smoke from cow dung, while the streets are knee-deep in animal refuse, and putrifying corpses of animals. Perhaps, after this disclosure, some of the less enthusiatic Theosophists may look elsewhere for inspiration.

There was an expose of theosophy, a few months ago, when Charles W. Leadbeater, known throughout the world, among Theosophists, as one of the leading exponents of the cult, was expelled from the society, upon a charge of immorality, of the same type that sent Oscar Wilde to jail. This, however, did not seem to greatly feaze many of his deluded followers, who claim that he is able to project his "astral body" wherever he may please. Some of them say his soul will "waft itself thousands of miles, rescuing miserable human beings from spiritual and material perils." It seems as if his soul might occupy itself better in endeavoring to cleanse itself from its own filth.

What is there about these Hindoo teachers of mysterious cults that should entitle them to reverence and worship by us of the Occident? What have the Hindoos done, during thousands of years, beyond sitting, wrapt in contemplation of their navels, putting themselves to meaningless and often disgusting penance in public, and accepting money for the exhibition of the same, or erecting, at immense cost, temples, the carvings in many of which are so grossly indecent as to make even a man of the world blush on first seeing them, or in expending vast sums of money on more modern temples, to support which and their lazy priests dancing girls are kept, who sell themselves for money to any one who may choose to pay the modest sum demanded for their favors?

On the door of a great Jain temple, at Ahmadabad, is inscribed the following sentence: "Low caste servants and dogs are not allowed to enter here." Next look at this picture, from an article in Everybody's Magazine, of the condition of the unfortunate Sudras, the serfs and laborers of India, who can never rise above their miserable condition, nor can their children's children ever hope to be otherwise than they:

"Without defilement and loss of his own standing he may not come into contact with one beneath him, may not touch elbows with him, nor exchange greetings, nor the most commonplace courtesy; he may not succor such a one in distress, may not receive aid from his hands, may not eat from the same table, may not for an instant recognize him as a fellow creature. In the Hindu system the idea of man's brotherhood has no place; men are not brothers, but things differing among themselves far more than tigers differ from hyenas.

"Though a Hindu starve, he may not eat food prepared by one of a lower class than himself; though he perish of thirst he may not drink of a cup touched by an inferior lip or hand. To preserve inviolate the line of his class is the chief concern of his life. Incessantly he must be on his guard lest by some mischance he be defiled by contact with that which pertains to the lower orders, lest the end of a plebeian robe touch his in the street, lest an inferior person jostle him, or touch his hand, or win from him a word or look. From his first conuation or condition sometimes modify caste lines; upon the Hindu they have no effect. A low-caste Hindu family may have generations of wealth or of members distinguished in one way or another. It remains in its original caste, despised and abhorred by those above it, deferred to by those below. Among the native troopers in the British army are low-caste sergeants and high-caste privates. While these are on duty, the high-caste private receives and obeys orders from his low-caste officer. When the hour of duty has ended, the low-caste officer abases himself, head in the dust, before the high-caste private, and so he would abase himself if he were a lieutenant-general and the other an indistinguishable trooper of the rear rank.

"Around the neck of India the Prince did not see this hateful system hanging like a corpse to paralyze energy and frustrate progress.

"At the bottom of the lowest of the classes is the despised Sudra, the day laborer and street cleaner, the lowest creature that crawls—in India. 'Low-caste servants and dogs'—a Hindu of even middle caste would rather be touched by the pariah dog of the streets, covered with vermin and infected with plague, than to be touched by a Sudra. Even the consolations of religion are denied to the Sudra; he may not enter the temples to pray, he may not read or hear the sacred books, and one of the tenets of the Hindu religion is that the very gods spurn his petitions. Because he labors he is an outcast before the face of man and God.

"You may see thousands of Sudras in any Indian city, and when you have observed them well, you will burn with ineffable rage against the whole Hindu system. Those strange brown men, thin and sinewy, wearing a dirty rag about the head, a dirty rag about the loins, that you see ramming macadam in the streets of Bombay, are Sudras; those men with the vacant, pathetic, listless faces, that never speak a word as they work, never exchange a glance, never heed a passer-by, never look up, never for an instant turn their gaze upon the blue sky, or the flaming sunset, or a flashing bird, or a gorgeous carriage in the street, or the soldiers marching by with blaring band; the human machin downward gazing, mechanical contrivances, that have no consciousness of man's existence, ram macadam all day and at night creep into their lairs in the mud and slime of lonely corners, they Sudras, they are the laboring class of India. can look upon them without deep horror and pity yond all words. That such things should have shapes, and bones, and hands, and eyes, and men, seems to lower every beholder in his esti and to fill him with awe and vague alarms. If things can be men, how far then is any man from other beasts that climb and chatter in the forest?"

It is mainly to the curse of caste that is due also awful sacrifice of life that takes place in the frequ recurring famines. In one of the latest of these of 1901-1903—there perished over 8,000,000 people 1903 there died of cholera 300,000 and of dysentery 000, and in 1905 there died of the plague 1,300,000. may claim that this is due to English rule. This is true. While there are doubtless weak points in British government of one-sixth of the human race, British have done great things for India, in introd irrigation works and equal justice. Before the Brit came, the unfortunate natives were subject to the lute will of sensual, voluptuous and brutal native r who squeezed out of them the very last penny of tr If the representatives of the oriental religions, that now trying to proselyte in the Occident, have done for the relief of their unfortunate fellow creatures Hindostan, then we of the United States have yet learn it. On the other hand, the people of these called Christian countries, the United States and land, have contributed millions of money and ship of grain to relieve the sufferings of the starving H doos.

What have the educated Hindoos ever done to to break down this cruel and unreasonable line of It may be said that the British government recog caste. Yes, but it would soon cease to do so, if the 000,000 native inhabitants of India would only show way. And yet, some misguided occidentals try to us believe that the religion of Buddha is superior to religion of Jesus. If so, then the followers of B are even farther from their leader than are the follo of Him who taught that the whole of the law and pr ets was wrapped up in the phrase "Love one ano

Religion in the Making.

SPREAD OF BABISM IN PERSIA—A NEW MESSIAH.

Rev. Conrad Noel in London Tribune.

WHAT would one not have given to have w nessed the birth of a world religion, to ha heard Christ by the lake-side of Galilee, to ha wandered with Gotama Buddha across the plains India, to have spoken with Mohammed in the stre of Mecca? Blessed are they who have not seen a yet have believed. So far as faith is concerned th is true, but it cannot satisfy the critic. Many a st dent of a great historic creed would give his very so to be face to face with the founder before the mist tradition had engulfed him and the clouds receiv him out of our sight.

And now, in our own times, dull and prosaic on to cynics and dullards, within a few days' journey London, may be seen this miraculous thing—a worl religion in the making, and many people are saying "We have seen his star in the East, and are come worship;" for in the East, in the little Syrian seapo of Akka, has appeared one—Abbas Effendi—whom mu titudes worship as the Messiah, the Master, the Man festation of the Most High. To those of us who believ that God fulfills Himself in many ways and does n leave any corner of the world without witness, should not on the face of it appear unlikely that suc inspired teachers should from time to time arise But, before describing this new teaching, it will b necessary to go back a little and examine the groun in which the seed first found a lodgment.

The Gate.

Just as in Christianity, so in Mohammedanism, ther are many widely different sections, and Prof. Brown has pointed on that the Roman Catholic differs les from the Protestant than does the Persian Shi'ite fro the Turkish or Egyptian Sunni. After Mohammed, ther were twelve leaders called Imáms; the Shi'ites regarde these leaders is inspired, and almost infallible succes sors of the prophet. The eleventh died in A.D. 874; hi son succeeded, and was known as the Imám Mahdi "The Proof," "The Absent Mahdi." His life wa wrapped in mystery. He communicated with his fol lowers only indirectly; through chosen representative called Bâbs, or "Gates," into the unseen realities o God. When the last of these Bâbs died, no one had been appointed to succeed him. The Imám did not die; he vanished in A.D. 940, and still lives hidden in the mysterious city of Jábulká, whence he will come and restore all things.

In 1820 there was born at Shiráz, in Southern Persia, one who was called Mirzá Ali Muhammed. He lived the life of a saint; his power was extraordinary. The fame of his good deeds spread rapidly. He was surrounded by eager disciples; his teaching was to Islám what liberal catholicism is to the Christian Church; he quickened men's consciences, and the old dogmas blossomed into life and were pregnant with meaning. In 1844 he was manifested as the new Bâb, and through this "gate" his disciples believed they traveled to God. He wrote books, preached, sent out missionaries, and his gospel overran Persia.

Again and again he was imprisoned. At Tabriz he was examined by the Chief Clergy in Council, the Shah being in the chair. They scoffed at him, saying, "Since you are the Gate of knowledge, you will be able to answer any questions we choose to ask you." They plied him with abstruse questions in grammer, medicine, philosophy, and logic. How could he be the genuine manifestation of God? When the Imám comes he will come with power and the sword, taking vengeance upon his adversaries. So they rejected this man as an impostor; but he preached the more fervently, imploring all not only to listen to his gospel, but to be on the lookout, when they should have killed him, for other manifestations. Men must not be tied down to his particular creed. They must welcome the light whencesoever it might come. They must be alert, they must be converted, they must be so strong that they would become gentle and tolerant. They must forgive their enemies, and try to understand their standpoint.

The Emancipation of Woman.

This new religion, this Bábism, professes not to oppose, but to welcome, the discoveries of physical science. All knowledge is from above. It is strangely like the Christian faith in its insistence upon charity as the very bond of peace and of all virtues, and it preaches the active life as the necessary complement to contemplation. More startling, considering the source from which it springs, is its insistence upon the equality of the sexes, and the emancipation of woman. One of its first disciples was a woman, as beautiful in character as she was physically attractive. The Bábists called her "Freshness" or "The Delight of Eyes." Needless to say, she was persecuted and died a martyr's death. Bábism already claims its ten thousand martyrs. Some have been blown from the cannon's mouth, other flayed to death with whips, others stoned, sawn asunder, tortured with hellish ingenuity; but as for recantations—you could almost count them on your fingers.

Their leader was at last manifested, not only as the Bâb, but as the Imám himself, The Point, The Great Revelation, The Primal Truth; but the Bábists insist that there is no finality; that God would again reveal Himself to men, in the future as in the past. To them the founders of religions, Buddha, Christ, Zoroaster, Mohammed, are all Messiahs.

In 1850, a brutal rabble surged through the streets of a Persian town. Infuriated by priests, the people cast stones and mud at the man suspended with ropes

SPREAD OF BABISM IN PERSIA—A NEW MESSIAH.

Rev. Conrad Noel in London Tribune.

The Bâb.

Just as in Christianity, so in Mohammedanism, there are many widely different sections, and Prof. Browne has pointed out that the Roman Catholic differs less from the Protestant than does the Persian Shi'ite from the Turkish or Egyptian Sunni. After Mohammed, there were twelve leaders called Imáms; the Shi'ites regarded these leaders as inspired, and almost infallible successors of the prophet. They must be alert, they must be converted, they must be so strong that they could become gentle and tolerant. They must forgive their enemies, and try to understand their standpoint.

Emancipation of Woman.

The new religion, this Bábism, professes not to oppose but to welcome, the discoveries of physical science. Its knowledge is from above. It is strangely like the Christian faith in its insistence upon charity as the bond of peace and of all virtues, and it preaches the active life as the necessary complement to contemplation. More startling, considering the source from which it springs, is its insistence upon the equality of man, and the emancipation of woman. One of its chief disciples was a woman, as beautiful in character as she was physically attractive. The Bábists called her [illegible] or "The Delight of Eyes." Needless to say, she was persecuted and died a martyr's death. Bábism already claims its ten thousand martyrs. Some have been blown from the cannon's mouth, other flayed to death with whips, others stoned, sawn asunder, tortured with hellish ingenuity; but as for recantations—you could almost count them on your fingers.

Their leader was at last manifested, not only as the Bâb, but as the Imâm himself, The Point, The Great Manifestation, The Primal Truth; but the Bâbists insist that there is no finality; that God would again reveal Himself to man, in the future as in the past. To them the founders of religions, Buddha, Christ, Zoroaster, Mohammed, are all Messiahs.

In 1850, a brutal rabble surged through the streets of a Persian town. Infuriated by priests, the people threw stones and mud at the man suspended with ropes from staples set in a wall. At the side of the leader another figure was hanging; this second man was over and over again urged to betray his master; but he remained firm. The prophet himself had gone gladly to death. To be slain in God's cause was to take part in a festival. God's cause could afford to wait, for it was going to conquer the world. "My condition, thanks be to God, hath naught of ill, and to every trouble succeedeth rest."

There was a crash of musketry, and when the smoke had lifted, a cry from the spectators, for where there had hung two men but a moment before now there was but one corpse riddled with bullets. "For an instant the fate of the Kájân dynasty and the Faith of Islám trembled in the balance." By some miserable chance the first shot had cut the rope. The Bâb was found sheltering in an adjacent shed, and was there butchered in presence of the crowd.

But as ever, the blood of the martyrs was the seed of the church, and at this moment in Persia the followers of Bâbism are numbered at many millions, the Faith spreads with amazing quickness, and not only sends its missionaries into all the world, but bids fair to become the dominant religion of Persia.

New Messiahs.

The Bâb had appointed successors to carry on the work after his death. The most prominent of these were Behá'u'lláh and Subh-i-Ezel, the latter being the conservative and literalist force in the new religion, the former becoming a great liberal leader. Behá'u'lláh, believing that the letter killeth, yielded himself to the spirit, developed the Faith in new directions of heart and intellect, and himself was manifested as the Master. Most of the disciples accepted his Messiahship, a mere remnant clinging to his embittered rival. The more recent history of the Bâbists or Behá'u'llists runs curiously parallel with the history of the early Christians, for just as the Judaic party, which prided itself on its ancestry, its rigid adherence to the letter, its orthodoxy, grudging the development of the gospel among the nations, dwindled into nothing, being only now remembered as a curious little heresy, so the Ezzelites, having no power of growth or assimilation, are dying out, while the more catholic Behá'u'llists sweep all before them.

In 1852 the leaders fled from Teheran to Turkish Bagdad, and after eleven years were transported as prisoners of the Turkish government to Adrianople. Here the final schism between the two sections took place, Ezzeli being sent to Cyprus, and Behá'u'lláh to Akka, where he died in 1892.

His son, Abbas Effendi, the present Manifestation, succeeded him, and is accepted and worshiped by millions of followers, and receives the homage of opponents and even of the authorities at Akka, where he remains a prisoner. When the order came to Adrianople that Behá'u'lláh was to be sent to Akka, it was decreed that his followers and family were to be separated from him. His son refused to accept the decree, and worked untiringly for its reversion. "Take us out in a boat and drown us," he pleaded; "but do not separate us." The officials attempted to carry out the order. A disciple immediately cut his throat, and to prevent further suicides they were obliged to abandon the attempt.

Nothing New Under the Sun.

People will say, what is there in this Behaullism? But can we judge of a religion in that way? Was there a single sentence of Christ's teaching that had not been heard before? Yet in Him was gathered up in a new and fulgent conviction the fragmentary teachings of many ages and many countries. This religion has certain distinctive notes. Its masters have said one must not, on becoming a convert, leave one's own faith, but adhere to it the more strictly. They have not claimed finality for themselves, but universality for God's truth.

They, like the Christians, look forward to a universal reign of peace, when men shall have discovered their brotherhood—to the internationalism of peoples, who have come to the knowledge that they are the family of God.

I have dwelt on the constructive side of this teaching, as it seemed futile to hunt for the flaws, which must, of course, exist. We do not appreciate our own religion by depreciating other religions. To me the most extraordinary thing about this new faith is that so spiritual a flower can have blossomed on the tree of Islám, which in its origins seems to many Western minds material and uninspiring. But it is not the first time that Islám has thus blossomed and borne fruit, and after all it is true not only of individuals, but of the great religious society, that a tree is known by its fruits.

WORLD'S SUPPLY OF OXYGEN.

Lord Kelvin once showed that all the oxygen in the atmosphere probably came from the action of sunlight on plants. When the earth was a globe of hot liquid it contained no vegetable fuel, and probably no free oxygen. But as it cooled off plants appeared on its surface, and these began to evolve oxygen through the medium of the sunbeams. Upon the oxygen thus derived we depend for the maintenance of life by breathing.

When we burn coal or other vegetable fuel, we use oxygen, and it is to plants again that we owe the restoration of the oxygen thus lost to the air. If they failed to keep up a sufficient supply the atmosphere would gradually part with its oxygen and the inhabitants of the earth would disappear in consequence of asphyxiation.—[Chicago Chronicle.

AT THE DINNER TABLE.

"Who is that handsome man over there?"

"That is Louis XIV."

"How absurd! What do you mean?"

"Well, his name is Louis, and he is always invited when there happen to be thirteen at table."—[Translated for Tales from Fliegende Blätter.

BERLIN'S POLICE.

THESE PRESERVERS OF THE PEACE HAVE MANY VARYING DUTIES.

[London Daily Graphic:] The daily routine of a Berlin police station begins with the "Appell," followed by instruction in some subject selected for the purpose. The officer in command of the station almost always holds the rank of police-lieutenant. At the "Appell" he reads out all telegrams and reports that have come in affecting police matters, and issues the orders for the day. After this is over, instruction is given by him. All policemen in Prussia must have served at least six years in the army, and must have held there the rank of non-commissioned officer; and they must be physically strong and able to read and write with intelligence. On joining the force they are required to attend a police school for four weeks, where they receive instruction in elementary knowledge of police matters. The next move is to a police station, where they undergo further training. When they first appear in the street as policemen on duty they are always accompanied by an older constable of experience.

All sorts of details concerning the inhabitants of the district are registered in books and boxes. The arrival or departure of all residents or strangers in a district must be reported by landlords on special formularies to the police station, with full details as to age, occupation, birthplace, and religion. This most irksome procedure is said to be useful to the police and to various other state departments; but there is reason to suppose that the expense to the state, the loss of time to the officials, and the inconvenience to the citizens are immensely disproportionate to the advantage said to accrue therefrom. When a servant enters the service of an individual or a family or receives dismissal the fact has to be reported to the police on a formulary, and every domestic servant is further bound to have a book containing testimonials, all of which must be certified by the police! This procedure is useless, for whereas spiteful people try to injure the future of the so-called "menials," others take care to evade citing the real reason (if it be a bad one) for dismissal.

Not infrequently, especially in summer, children are lost in the streets of the city. The little mites take to exploring neighborhoods with which they are not familiar, and some constable passing by conducts the weeping child to the nearest station. Here all that is possible in regard to information is extracted from him, and the telephone and the telegraph wires convey the information to the neighboring stations. Every police station has a separate telegraphic apparatus, and two police officials are told off to attend to its work, having been specially trained for the purpose. The men are allowed to lie down from 7 p.m. on; they may doff their tunics and boots, but must keep their trousers on. None of the men live on the premises, but may reside in any part of the town they choose.

At every station there is one sergeant specially trained for the criminal investigation department, and two or three detectives. Every station has also its own detective bureau, which is subordinate to the Central Criminal Bureau at the Prefecture of Police in Alexander Square. The procedure is as follows: There is no police court, but every delinquent brought to a station is submitted to a careful examination. A report is drawn up, and if the offense is of a minor nature and the offender can give an address, he is released. All those, however, who are vagrants without address, or criminals, are transferred in the so-called "Green Car" to the prefecture. While the delinquents are waiting at the police station they are confined in the "cell." The "Green Car" calls for delinquents at every police station four times a day—at 8 a.m., noon, 8 p.m., and 2 a.m. There are at least two cells at every station—one for males and one for females. Dangerous or obstreperous delinquents are put in chains. Recourse is only made to this practice when absolutely necessary. The delinquents who are taken to the prefecture are again examined, and a decision is taken as to whether they are to be handed over to the public prosecutor or not. The public prosecutor decides as to the court before which such delinquents are to be arraigned. In certain cases the president of police is empowered to inflict small fines or imprisonment. For example, all beggars and vagabonds are immediately punished by him according to his judgment.

ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS A WORD.

At the Franklin Inn, a literary club of Philadelphia, a young poet, licking his lips, said that Conan Doyle was paid $1 a word.

"That is nothing," said one of the Reading Railroad's advertising men. "I know of a case where a man was paid $1000 a word.

"Our line used to have at its grade crossings a very long and complicated sign that began, 'Beware of the Engine and Cars,' and then this sign went on with a lot of injunctions and warnings that would have taken five minutes to read.

"In a number of accident cases the claimants for damages declared that our long signs were not clear warnings. Therefore the line decided at last to get a new grade-crossing sign, and Judge Paxson was engaged to write one.

"The sign that Judge Paxson wrote cost $1000 a word, but it was a classic. It remains a classic. It has been copied everywhere. It is as well known among us as 'Father, I cannot tell a lie,' or 'England expects every man to do his duty.'"

"But what was the sign?" the poet asked impatiently.

"The sign that cost $1000 a word, or $6000 in all," said the railroad man, "was the famous 'Railroad Crossing—Stop, Look, and Listen.'"
